THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

A New Year Message

From the General Conference Moderator

By E. E. Jacobs, Ph. D.

A new year is dawning. The one just closed has witnessed the most marvelous advances in many fields of human endeavor,—science, invention, and exploration. The confines of human ignorance have been pushed back farther than ever before, and those of knowledge have been correspondingly enlarged.

Human comforts have been increased. Material blessings have continued to accumulate. Transportation facilities have been multiplied. And the blessings of good health have been greatly extended so that we as members of the race are better off today than ever before.

However, with all the widening and popularization of culture, mankind's age-old enemies remain unsubdued—war, intemperance, crime, lust, and greed. Nor has the church's perennial ambition, "to take the world for Christ," been realized.

But this new year of Grace ought to see substantial gains made in conquering these enemies of the common good of mankind. Our own denomination ought to throw itself wholeheartedly into the conflict. God has blessed us; pray that he may use us.

But more than this, we ought earnestly and faithfully to strive to strengthen our own denominational instrumentalities for service,—College and Seminary, Missions, Publishing House, Christian educational facilities, and our Benevolences, so that this year shall be the best in our history. And above all, may we renew our consecration to his service and thus help to usher in that happy day when his "kingdom shall come and his will be done on the earth even as it is in heaven."

What Makes a New Year?

Everywhere during the week following Christmas, people were talking about "New Year" and looking forward to it with anticipation. Its coming was hailed by the blowing of whistles, the ringing of bells and the firing of guns. It was the occasion of many social functions, religious meetings and elaborate celebrations. Greetings in abundance were exchanged, and on every hand people were wishing one another a "Happy New Year." But just what do they mean? Do they speak understandingly? What is a new year? Is it just an occasion? an event? a time of rejoicing and merry-making?

With many New Year is merely the beginning of a new period of time, or of activity, or of business. It is a time of checking up on the past, of taking inventory, of beginning new records, of launching new arrangements or new enterprises. New Year's Day seems to them just a mark on the scale of time; it registers our location and indicates that one more period or measured portion of life is past and another has begun. But is New Year nothing more than a new measure of time? If so, it very soon gets past the point of being new. The novelty wears off and it becomes the same old monotonous grind of time.

What makes a year new, with a newness that abides? That qualification is important, for there appear signs of newness that seem genuine but do not remain. Along with these New Year functions, new beginnings and measures of progress—and largely inspired by them—there appear in many human hearts a certain brightening of hopefulness, a flaring up of anticipation, a reviving of aspiration and confidence that make the eyes sparkle and the muscles more tense for a time. But that invigoration, being due to stimulation from without rather than a spiritual purpose within, gradually subsides and is gone. By and by the year is as dull and dreary and unchallenging as any period of the past.

What then makes a new year, and what keeps it new? Many things doubtless make their contribution, but these in particular: First, a new and lofty purpose, definitely fixed and kept constantly before the eyes of the mind, will keep the year from first to last new with interest and effort. He who sets his heart on a worthy aim or goal and never ceases to yearn and struggle for its realization will never find time lagging on his hands. But let a man lose his aim, or cease to believe in and work for it, and he will have lost that which keeps the soul alive and fresh, and time ever new. As the Book says: "Where there is no vision, the people perish," and, we would add, time grows old.

Second, the year can be kept new by daily filling the mind with new and worthy thoughts, or new problems for thought. The mind does not grow old by use but by lack of use. It was given us to use and to use vigorously. Jesus never warned men against the use, but the misuse of the mind. At the very approach of men to the Lord Jesus he commands them to "change their thinking,"—not stop thinking, as, it would appear, people sometimes seem to believe. They are to think in right channels, on things that are worth while. Paul admonishes: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phil. 4:8). The mind is to exercise itself with noble thoughts. That is the way to ensure both safety and growth. That "an idle brain is the devil's workshop" is as true today as when that old proverb was coined. And the way to keep oneself guarded against temptation is to keep busy with something good. Such mental exercise produces growth. The reason why many people are not growing spiritually is because they have become sluggards and idlers mentally. They take no mental exercise. A friend asked Longfellow in his declining years how it was that he was able to maintain such a vigorous life and write so beautifully and effectively. The aged poet pointed to an apple tree in bloom and said: "That apple tree is very old, but I never saw prettier blossoms on it than those it now bears. The tree grows a little new wood every year, and I suppose it is out of that new wood that these blossoms come. Like the apple tree, I try to grow a little new wood every year." And it is by maintaining a vigorous mental life that we shall be able to grow and go forward in achievements in a way that will prevent time from becoming slow and old in its passing.

The year can be kept new by allowing a new and radiant spirit to rule our lives and by adopting an optimistic attitude toward life's varied situations. It makes a vast difference on ourselves as well as on others as to the spirit that prevails in our lives. He who is pessimistic about the outcome of the problems of the day and looks upon the morrow with gloomy foreboding; he who is embittered by the little injustices dealt out to him and loses confidence in and sympathy for his fellowmen; he who allows to die out of his soul that sense of the value of the intangible and fine things of the spirit and keeps his affections set upon the things of material sense, is building a life structure that will be a burden to him all his days and cause him to wish for the end before his time. But if hopefulness and confidence, kindness, forgiveness and goodwill, and a high appreciation of spiritual values pervades life there will result a spirit that will fill the passing days with joy and make character radiant and beautiful. Time will pass quickly and pleasantly, with daily enriching experiences, and the soul will possess a strength and an optimism that will make for peace and satisfaction. This point cannot be too strongly emphasized; the importance of seeing to it that life is infilled and overshadowed by a noble and gracious spirit, ay even the Spirit of God, and that a kindly and considerate attitude is adopted in all relations of life cannot be too persistently and vigorously stressed. It makes all the difference between success and failure, between happiness and remorse, and between life and death finally. That is like unto the thing Paul was talking about when he said to the Roman Christians (c. 8:6), "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

Ring Out, Wild Bells

*Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow,
The year is going, let him go:
Ring out the false, ring in the true.*

*Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more:
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.*

*Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite:
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.*

*Ring out old shapes of foul disease:
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold:
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.*

*Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kinder hand:
Ring out the darkness of the land:
Ring in the Christ that is to be.*

—Alfred Tennyson.
From "Library of Entertainment."

But more important than all else and before all things else, if time is to be kept perennially fresh, if the spirit is not to droop, if the mind is not to become dulled or diverted, if life is not to become purposeless or drawn toward goals that are unworthy, we must seek the impartation of that newness of life that Jesus came to make possible unto all the sons of men. Jesus said, "I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly." And again, "Without me ye can do nothing." Life cannot be held faithfully to a high purpose without divine aid. The mind cannot be kept guarded and thinking only those things that are pure and worthy until it has been renewed, for, says Paul, "the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So when they that are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom. 8:7, 8). It is necessary, therefore, that we shall be "transformed by the renewing of (our) minds," then we shall be able to "prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God" (Rom. 12:2) by our thinking. Nor can we

"Why Go to Church?"

The question grows out of a situation, or a condition. The churches are nearly empty, that is, compared to the number they were built to accommodate. But some claim that even that qualification is not necessary, that in very truth, the churches are nearly empty. That people are not attending church as they should cannot be doubted, and that they are not attending as they once did can scarcely be denied. Of course there are many reasons why the church is not the center of the people's thought and social interest and activity as once was the case, but those reasons bring little consolation to the preacher as he stands in his pulpit and attempts to preach the Gospel to a handful of people over the backs of a flock of empty pews.

The Editor of The Western Christian Advocate thinks the fault is limited to "Protestants, or near-Protestants, or nonchurchmen," and not Catholics. He says, "The members of that communion go to church. They make a place for God in their thought and in their daily program. Only an enervated Protestant would ask that question"—"Why go to church?" Possibly his accusation of the Protestants nonchurch-going proclivities is truer than we are wont to believe; that he is even bold in his indifference to, or deliberate in his avoidance of, the house of God. And our contemporary is right when he states that Catholics attend more religiously than Protestants, though it is to be noticed that even among them this type of loyalty is falling off. We are not so sure, however, that they are superior to Protestants in making "a place for God in their thought and in their daily program." If that statement involves the idea of practical religion, we would disagree with our esteemed fellow editor.

However being Protestants and interested particularly in the greater efficiency of Protestantism, as we are, we can afford to let the lash fall heavier on Protestants. Their weakness is what troubles us, and their cure or improvement is our chief concern. This fault has become so pronounced and widespread that it is a reproach upon Protestantism. Instead of asking, "Why go to church?" the question should be put, as the Advocate insists, "Why do you not go to church?" And "There should always be apologies and explanations on the lip when it is answered in the negative." And to the careful consideration of our own readers, who may not be as regular, or as faithful as they ought, in attending divine worship, we commend the following ten reasons from the pen of Dr. Henry H. Proctor:

1. The church is the mother spirit of God in the world, for she nurtures every good thing.
2. The church is the mother of humanity, for she is the background of modern civilization.
3. The church is the mother of prosperity, for she builds the city necessary for that commercial exchange essential to prosperity.
4. The church has a right to the allegiance of all, for she has a blessing for every man, woman, and child in the community.
5. The church has a right to the attendance of all, for from her fountains of life there gush the streams of health, hope, and happiness for humanity.
6. The church has a right to the support of all, for in her three-fold ministry of teaching, preaching, and healing she serves all.
7. The church is to be loved for the enemies she makes, for evil-doers hate the church because her ideals condemn their practice.

8. The church will survive all assaults made upon her, for she is founded on the Rock of Ages.

9. The church opens the door of hope to every human, for her spirit is that of universal love.

10. Your church challenges your devotion and cooperation, for if every member in it were just like you, what sort of church would your church be?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The church at Allentown, Pennsylvania, reports a very helpful communion service recently held with fifty-two members present. S. E. Christiansen is the earnest pastor of this church.

Brother Yoder's Christmas poem in this issue arrived too late for our Christmas number, and last week in our anniversary issue there was no room for it, but we are glad to give it space this week when it is yet seasonable.

Dr. Florence Gribble's diary, the publication of which is begun in this issue and will be continued next week, will be found of intense interest and at the same time will bring a certain relief and satisfaction to be reassured that our missionaries are all safe and to learn that our mission station was not evacuated.

Dr. Gillin tells interestingly of his experiences in the Alps. He has frequently mentioned his son, John, who has been traveling with him. It has been a great experience, apparently for both father and son, to be thus intimately associated for so many months. Now their ways separate for a season.

The Editor wishes to take this public way of thanking those who have so kindly remembered him, and in many cases his wife also, with Christmas and New Year greetings. We greatly appreciate them. They make the pulse beat just a little faster and add a little more of the warmth of friendship to our interest in the Evangelist.

An announcement reached us from Rio Cuarto, Argentina, telling of the arrival on November 25th, 1928 of a son, Norman Douglas, to the home of Brother and Sister Egydio Romanenghi. Sister Romanenghi will be remembered as the daughter of Dr. Yoder. We congratulate them in behalf of the Evangelist family.

At North Manchester, Indiana, where Prof. J. Raymond Schutz is the capable pastor, an evangelistic meeting with the pastor serving as evangelist resulted in twenty-eight confessions. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richter of Peru, Indiana, were in charge of the music. This splendid church has gone steadily forward under Brother Schutz's leadership and this new evidence of God's blessing should further encourage and strengthen them.

In a note from Brother L. G. Wood we have this information: "We had an excellent Christmas program rendered Sunday evening, December 23 to a large and appreciative audience. We have just installed three large globes and drop lights in our auditorium, instead of the old system of so many bulbs so high up, which is a wonderful improvement and is appreciated by all. This will save a considerable amount of current as well as being so much better. This was made possible by the gifts of three members—L. E. Culp, Thurman Orr and the pastor."

THOSE SPECIAL FEATURES

We are sure many of our readers are disappointed at not finding the promised new departments by Prof. McClain and Dean Miller in this issue, and we too are sorry that we were unable to begin them in this first issue of the new year, but we are assured that we shall be able to present their initial installments in next week's issue of the Evangelist. If the paper is not going to every home of your church, you should start now to put it there so that your parishioners need miss none of the valuable thought of these able brethren. On the front page President Jacobs presents the first of a series of short editorials to be written by various church leaders from time to time. They will appear intermittently, depending on the need of the space for other interests. We are also able to announce that in a few weeks, Brother Thoburn C. Lyon of Chicago will begin writing the Worship Program for a time. Those who remember Brother Lyon's very helpful Christian Endeavor notes of a few years ago, will look forward to these with interest.

Facing the New Year With Christ

By J. S. C. Spickerman

The year that has closed has brought us many joys and blessings; but to many it has also brought loss and sorrow; to some, defeat and discouragement. As we face the new year, what assurance can we have that it will be better than past years? It is customary to make good resolutions at the beginning of the year; but we find that it is much easier to make them than to keep them. Even the great apostle said, "To me who would do good, evil is present (Romans 7:21)."

Some will have entered the year laden with debts. Some are perplexed with other problems, which must be solved right or bring disgrace and dishonor. Some are beset with tremendous temptations. Some have formed bad habits, from which they have not yet become free.

Looking beyond our personal needs and problems to the works of the Kingdom of God, we see, about nineteen hundred years after Jesus gave his disciples the Great Commission, over half of the population of the earth has never heard the Gospel. The really regenerate persons who constitute the true church of Christ, are far less in number than those listed in statistics as Christians, and many of them are mere babes in Christ. Man's advance in wealth, knowledge, and efficiency has brought about new evils, resulting in great suffering. Evil customs, which dishonor God and harm mankind, are entrenched behind wealth, social usages, governments, and even church organizations. Though the wounds of the World War are not yet healed, millions are being spent in preparations for the next war, which, we have reason to believe, will come before many years.

Who is sufficient for these things? What assurance can we have of personal well-being or successful work?

Jesus said, "Apart from me ye can do nothing" (John 15:5). Paul, writing from inspiration and Christian experience, said, "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me" (Philippians 4:13). If we are trusting in Christ, if we are living for the things of the Spirit, rather than the things of the flesh; if we are willing to know God's will, to submit to his will, and to do his will, at whatever cost; if we speak often to God in prayer and let him speak to us through the Scriptures; we can enter the new year without fear.

For our personal needs we have many promises such as these: Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee (Isaiah 26:3). But seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things (such as food and raiment) shall be added unto you (Matthew 6:33). And my God shall supply every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus (Philippians 4:19). God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it (1 Corinthians 10:13).

For our work for the kingdom we have these promises:

So shall my word be, that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it (Isaiah 55:11). Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it (Matthew 16:18). Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world (Matthew 28:20). With God all things are possible (Matthew 19:26). Since this is true, whatever ought to be done can be done. The thing that should concern us is whether what we are seeking to do, for ourselves or for the kingdom, is in accordance with the will of God.

Perhaps some will read this who have never yielded their lives to Christ. To such I would say, If you would be safe, happy, and successful through the coming year, through life, and through eternity, trust in Christ, get in line with God's will, and the forces of Omnipotence will be available in your behalf.

Maryville, Missouri.

THE BETHLEHEM CHILD

By C. F. Yoder

*If I were a beautiful star in the sky
And could shine for eternity,
I would like to shine over Bethlehem,
And on to all nations and tribes of men,
And thus be a witness of Christ to them,
—Of the Christ who would set them free.*

*If I were the voice of a nightingale
And could sing for all peoples and times,
I would like to sing with the angel throng,
That sang o'er the plains that Christmas song
Of glory and love in a world of wrong,
To the peals of the heavenly chimes.*

*If I were a rose of Sharon fair,
With a beauty forever bright,
I would like to grow by the stable there,
With the glory song still borne on the air,
And broadcast fragrance everywhere,
Of the babe that was born that night.*

*If I were a gem from the throne of God,
And could shine in this world of woe,
I would like to adorn that manger child,*

*That the world might know him, undefiled,
And learn through him to be reconciled
To the One who loved them so.*

*If I were a child with a human heart,
In the midst of this world so wild,
Oh how I would like to be pure and true,
And live for the good that I might do
In the one brief life that I must pass through,
In the name of the Bethlehem child.*

*If I were a Shulamite maiden as fair
As the fleet gazelle of the wild,
I would like to serve in the flower of my youth
The immaculate babe in that barnyard booth,
In exchange for his gift of love and truth,
—The beauty of the Bethlehem child.*

*If I were the mother of a beautiful babe,
As goodly as Moses of old,
I would like to imprint on his innocent heart
The virtue of him whose humble part,
Was to suffer and die, but with deathless art,
The glories of Bethlehem unfold.*

Capital Punishment

By R. I. Humbert

The article entitled "Capital Punishment," by Brother Byers in a recent issue of the Evangelist brought a very timely issue to the front. There is much discussion on this subject in our time, for we stand almost helpless in the face of increasing lawlessness. Men may argue and give their opinions but after all, it is not settled. Since faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God, it is very important that a Christian base all of his beliefs on the Bible. It is also important that he remember that "No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation" (2 Pet. 1:20). That is, a verse taken out of its setting is not sufficient to form a belief; if the general tone of scripture leads in another direction, it must be interpreted in the light of what goes before and after. We must "Rightly divide the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15). Some scripture is given especially to the church and some especially to Israel, but all is given for our "Reproof, correction and instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16; Rom. 15:4). If the scripture commands Capital Punishment, then a Christian has but one place to stand. But, if the scripture forbids it, a Christian dares not support it, regardless of the cost—human opinion is worthless.

Is capital punishment God's method? As I approach this subject, I am not unmindful of the surprise it will engender in the hearts of some, for I myself fought capital punishment for many years, on the plea of, "Thou shalt not kill." But since "Rightly dividing the word of truth, I see that I was wrong, for this scripture is not against the judicial taking of life.

God has made several covenants (contracts) with the human race and also with certain sections of the human race. The conditions of each covenant apply only to those people who come under its bounds and must not be applied to people who come under another covenant.

We will not consider all of the covenants but merely those that touch the subject in question. After the flood, God established the covenant commonly called, "Human Government." To Noah and his sons, Shem, Ham and Japheth, God gave the command, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. 9:6). All people on earth today are descendants of Noah, (Gen. 9:19) and unless that covenant has been annulled or another given, it is still in force.

The whole earth, Shem, Ham and Japheth, stood before God in the covenant of Human Government. But after some time God called one man, Abram, a man in the line of Shem, and gave him another covenant (Gen. 17:7). But this did not disturb the old covenant between God and Ham, Japheth and the remainder of Shem, it was merely between God and Abram and circumcision was given for the sign (Gen. 17:11). Later God formed another covenant with Abram's seed and gave the Sabbath as a sign of that covenant between "Me and the children of Israel." (The Sabbath has nothing for Gentiles, or Christians) (Ex. 31:17).

It is to these people that God gave the command, "Thou shalt not kill." But by comparing other scripture, given to the same people, we see that it has reference to personal vengeance only and not to the judicial taking of life. Of course the Sob Sisters and Weeping Brothers would forget the family of the murdered man and cry out for mercy for the murderer, but God said, "No—Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel" (Deut. 19:13).

Surely we could take a lesson for every year brings its greater toll of crime. In 1925 there were 77,138 bootleggers arrested in the United States, 15,000 suicides, 10,000 murderers and over 100,000 murderers at large in our country.

It is well that we remember that back of the scenes, the "Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men," and sometimes gives it into the hands of the basest of men (Dan. 4:17). But God gives the government, "To whomsoever he will," and tells them how to rule for him and although Israel was not to kill for personal wrongs, capital punishment was absolutely commanded for many crimes much "smaller" than murder. If the same rules were carried out today, our rivers would run red with blood. Let us consider a few of the offences that called for capital pun-

THE BETHLEHEM CHILD

If I were Beethoven inditing a song
That might echo that song from above,
I would go to the Bethlehem shepherds and learn
The song that abides in the hearts that burn
With the vision of God, reflected in turn
In a life that the world can love.

If I were a painter with vision inspired
And could paint with the pencils of light,
I would like to produce a fair picture of peace
In which all the woes of the sin-curse would cease,
And the gardens of virtue and joys would increase.
—I would paint the Nativity night.

If I were a poet, a weaver of dreams,
Of a prodigal race reconciled,
I would like to describe such a picture of love
As only is seen in the City above,
A vision whose author, the Heavenly Dove,
Came to dwell in the Bethlehem Child.

If I were a skillful physician to men,
And could labor in Bethlehem,
I would like to restore people, body and soul,
With the Water of Life that makes men whole,
And the touch of faith, from pole to pole Transmitted in love unto them.

If I were a scientist, learned and just,
An eloquent teacher of truth,
I would like to reason of righteousness,
Of the endless life that men might possess,
Through the One who in Bethlehem came to bless
With the fount of eternal youth.

If I were a statesman, a maker of laws,
That the entire world might obey,
I would like to proclaim that wonderful law,
Of that wonderful life, without one flaw,
Of that wonderful love which once men saw
As they passed by the Bethlehem way.

If I were a Caesar, unrivalled in power,
With the wealth that an empire brings,
I would like to learn of the incarnate Lord,
The power of his Cross, of his Love, and his Word
And surrender to him my scepter and sword,
—To him who was born King of kings.

But being a man like the rest of men,
With a heart that has been defiled,
I will drink of the fount of the life reborn,
And live in the light of the Christmas morn,
And bear to the world, all bruised and torn,
The gift of the Bethlehem child.

ishment among the very people who were commanded not to kill.

Blasphemy. Leviticus 24:16, "He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death."

Murder. Leviticus 24:17, "He that killeth any man shall surely be put to death."

Adultery (divorce is adultery). Leviticus 20:10, "The adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death."

Prodigal son (Under law). Deuteronomy 21:18-21, "This our son is stubborn and rebellious . . . all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die."

Disregard the order of service. Numbers 1:51, "The stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death."

Invitation to false religion. Deuteronomy 13:6-9, "If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom . . . entice thee secretly, saying, let us go and serve other gods . . . thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him."

Idolatry (lodge members, etc.) Deut. 17:3-5, "And hath gone and served other gods . . . thou shalt bring forth that man or that woman . . . and shalt stone them with stones till they die."

Work on Sabbath. Exodus 35:2, "Sabbath of rest to the Lord; whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. . . . Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath day" (What will the Seventh Day Adventists do with this?)

The punishment for murder was capital punishment and the man who did the killing was not guilty of murder, although he had the command, "Thou shalt not kill." In fact, he was commanded to kill the murderer." And not only was he to kill him, but he was not guilty of blood—"He shall not be guilty of blood" Numbers 35:27). Life punishment or heavy fine could not take the place of capital punishment.—"Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer" (Numbers 35:31). There was but one thing to do—kill the murderer. "Blood, it defileth the land; and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it" (Numbers 35:33).

But Christians are not under any of these covenants. We do not keep the Sabbath, which was to Israel and was a sign of that covenant. But we keep something else, "This is my blood of the new covenant" (Matt. 26:28). No change has been made with the great mass of mankind, they are still under the covenant given to Noah.

In Romans 12:19, we are told to, "Avenge not yourselves . . . vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." But we ask how God will bring vengeance upon the guilty. Six verses farther on we read, "For he (the government) is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." As usual, God uses human means to accomplish his purposes and the government "Beareth not the sword in vain." The government is God's minister and the exhortation to judges might well be heeded today. "Take heed what ye do for ye judge not for man but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment."

Although God rules over all, we must remember that Satan is the god of this world and has mighty angels over the different nations (Dan. 10:20). The nations today, with their wars, greed and selfishness are doing these things because they are following the Prince of this world—Satan.

Everywhere is evidence that the Holy Spirit well knew the conditions of the end—time when he said that the mystery of lawlessness would keep on working until the restraining power (the Holy Spirit in the church) would be taken away. Then the lawless spirit of the times will head up in one man—the antichrist.

We see our government almost helpless in stemming the mighty tide of crime that is sweeping down upon us. And although Democracy may be the best form of government we can have until our Lord comes, nevertheless it proves that God well knew its strength when he called it "miry clay" in comparison with the gold of Absolute Monarchy (Dan. 2:43). In England, under a different form of government, seven out of ten murderers are hanged, while in New York only one out of one hundred and sixty. In Chicago, six policemen are killed to one murderer hanged. England is comparatively free from murders, while some one hundred and thirty thousand murderers are free in the United States.

Since the Bible commands capital punishment, it raises a very timely question, "Should a Christian go to war?" Again we must look at the covenants and remember that the Christian has come under a new covenant, a covenant that has placed him under a new relationship with God, a covenant that has made him a citizen of heaven (Phil. 3:20, R. V.) He is an ambassador here (2 Cor. 5:20), and represents his Lord in this world. He is in the world but not of it (John 17:16). Governments are spoken of as without (Romans 13; 1 Pet. 2) and it is a matter of observation that a person cannot be much of a spiritual Christian, if he is wrapped up in the politics of the world.

We are commanded to be in subjection to these governments but Paul, who wrote these words, lost his life because he did not obey those in authority, proving that we are under a higher law than man can make and when there is a conflict between these laws we answer with Peter, "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye" (Acts 4:19).

Since the Christian is an ambassador here, he can sing,

I am a stranger here, within a foreign land,

My home is far away upon a golden strand.

Ambassador to be of realms beyond the sea,

I'm here on business for my king.

The ambassador of Germany did not help the United States win the last war. He was a stranger here. His home was in Germany. His business here was to represent his home government and when things grew dark and threatening, he was quickly removed from the United States and taken home to Germany. So with Christians. War, as well as the things of the world in general, is to be outside his sphere. He is to act as an ambassador for his Lord in this "foreign land," and when the threatening shadows of the Tribulation begin to lower, our Lord will quickly remove his ambassadors to be with him and so shall we ever be with the Lord. There is every indication that the time is fast approaching when our Lord will remove his ambassadors (1 Thess. 4:13-18).

FROM DORAN'S REPORT

Prohibition Commissioner Doran, in his annual report, stated that his forces made 75,307 arrests, with 58,819 convictions, in the fiscal year 1928. This is an increase of 10,000 over the previous year. Operating with 4,396 permanent, and 92 temporary employees, the bureau seized 1,048,636 gallons of illegal spirits, 4,254,029 gallons of malt liquors, 399,603 gallons of wine, 16,220 illicit distilleries, 18,980 stills and 217,278 fermenters. During the year the prohibition authorities seized 6,934 automobiles, valued at $3,057,132, and 81 boats, valued at $144,240.

Mr. Doran reported 77,799 prohibition violation cases terminated during the year, in which 15,793 of those convicted were given jail sentences equaling 5,631 years, and fines aggregating $7,031,109 were assessed.

MR. WALTER DAMROSCH ON CHURCH MUSIC

It is most gratifying when the truly great in any of the Arts give sanction to those same methods in the life of the church for which a thousand obscure men and women have long been struggling. So very much is determined in public worship by the attitude of the worshippers, as truly as by the spirit of the leader in worship, and this is strikingly true when worship is related to music and singing. It is painfully noticeable that in many audiences the worshippers remain silent when the great hymns of the church are being sung. It seems to have gotten into the minds of many that the minister is paid for preaching and the quartette is paid for singing and that these contracts make unnecessary any acts of worship on the part of the audience, since only as an audience has the congregation met at the church. Listen to Mr. Damrosch on "a well-trained community chorus," as a magnificent outlet to the religious emotions: "I look forward to the time when our American church congregations will be able to sing hymns and other forms of religious music with the ease and spontaneity of negro singers. . . . The great choruses in the Protestant churches of Germany are an example of what can be accomplished."—The Presbyterian.

A Y. M. C. A. PROHIBITION QUESTIONNAIRE

In the "Association Men" for November is published a summary of the replies of traveling secretaries and student secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. to a prohibition questionnaire. The summary of replies by James W. McCandless follows:

1. "What has been your actual observation during the past year as to the extent of drinking on trains, in hotels, in restaurants, and in other public places?" "Very little", 109; "no instances of drinking", 40; "some", 20; "considerable", 2.
2. "What has been your actual observation during the same period of cases of partial or complete intoxication in such public places?" "Few" or "several", 90; "one or two cases only", 40; none, 21; from 15 to 35, 8; "frequently", 2.
3. "Have the cases been among mature men or among young people?" Mature men, 110; both mature men and young men, 37; men under 30, 9.
4. "What has been your observation and the evidence of local authorities as to drinking among high school boys, college youth, etc.?" "Very little or relatively little", 78; "more than 'a little'", 23; none at all, 14; "much", 2.
5. "What has been your observation, and the evidence of local secretaries, as to the extent of drinking among dormitory men?" (Answered by 98 persons.) "Infrequent", 74; none, 11.
6. "How do these situations (i e., those reported on in reply to Questions 1 to 5) compare with pre-prohibition days?" "Infinitely better", 139; "somewhat better", 8; doubtful, 10.
7. "On the whole how much progress toward a sober nation do you feel has been made through the 18th Amendment?" "A very great amount of progress", 140; "some progress", 21; none, 2; doubtful whether there has been any progress, 1.

Of the 31 college and university secretaries replying, 19 said they had seen "relatively little" drinking and 6 no drinking; 20 had seen "several" intoxicated persons, 3 none; 12 said the intoxicated persons were mature men, "both older and young men but mostly older," 6 "wholly or chiefly young men."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

A MOVE AGAINST SALACIOUS PAPERS

The "Associated Press" sends out news from Havana, Cuba, that "the united postal authorities have taken steps to bar the entry of several Havana publications dedicated to glorify womanhood from the viewpoint of the art studio. The Cuban Postmaster General and several other officials discussed the situation. Seven comic weeklies will probably be asked to instruct their artists to slow down. Cuba's willingness to cooperate with the Washington authorities is part of a general campaign being conducted by the insular government against salacious publications." This is a good move. It ought to be turned in the direction of vulgar papers and "funny sheets" in the country. Books of a certain type should be included. We have laws that shut out the criminals of other countries but twenty criminals cannot do as much harm as one corrupt book. This all raises an important question of psychology about the minds of artists, whether of the brush, the chisel, or the living picture. Certainly some of them need to have their minds washed.—The Christian Evangelist.

A DICTIONARY CENTENARY

Our old, dependable friend, Webster's Dictionary, is among the latest of the celebrities to have reached a century of history. We were genuinely pleased to read that Yale University and New Haven, Connecticut, the home of Noah Webster, recently commemorated the publication of the first dictionary with an exhibition of the manuscripts and printed works of Noah Webster, together with other documents showing the evolution of the dictionary into its present form. In the exhibition was shown a letter which Webster wrote asking financial backing for his book which he called "the greatest ever attempted in America in the line of authorship as well as the most interesting in literature."

Few persons will refuse to accept as true the famous author's statement that the dictionary is the most interesting in literature. There is an unfailing charm in the study of words, their roots and variants, their different meanings and uses. If the reader of the English language has not learned to study his dictionary, he has yet a new pleasure in store. It was Mark Twain perhaps who liked the dictionary because it changed its subjects so frequently, and this characteristic is not the least of its attractions. We are glad that the famous lexicographer whose book was the stand-by of our school days and has been the daily companion of our later years is properly honored on the one hundredth anniversary of his good book.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

What Makes a New Year?

maintain a spirit that is radiant with righteousness, kindness and goodwill without the purifying and strengthening presence of the Holy Spirit. "They that are in the flesh," and dependent on the flesh, "cannot please God. . . . But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. 8:9, 11). But without that quickening of the Spirit, that renewal of life, it is impossible to live a life that is pleasing to God and one that will bring a sense of satisfaction and joy to one's own soul, and keep the year ever new and full of interest.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

"Looking Forward." A New Year's Sermon

By C. D. Whitmer

TEXT: No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God. Luke 9:62.

"Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things that are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phillippians 3:13-14.

We call this the New Year season. But will it be really new to many people whose life falls into a conventional round in office, home, or society? Paul's familiar words, "forgetting" and "pressing forward," may afford suggestion, when applied to the deeper religious phases of life. Not that we need forget everything—the genial friendships, heavenly visions, high resolves. Paul did not, but the window of his soul was open to new adaptations; it enabled him to grasp the fuller revelations of the ever unfolding plan of God. Here is where each New Year offers enticing, untried adventure, causing us to lose sight of the snubs, snarls and spites. His rare achievements were overshadowed amid the larger possibilities yet to come. The anticipation of faith and the eager expectancy of hope gave novelty and zest to each approaching day. They assist in lifting us too out of the "old ruts."

The year 1928 has just closed. We have left it and have started on the journey of a new year. The New Year means a new voyage for each of us. In the voyage, we shall be the pilots of our own ships. True enough, the Master Pilot is standing near and we may at any time seek guidance from him. But after all, we are the ones that have hold of the wheel and we may turn our life into the rocks of destruction or into the peaceful waters of life and joy.

In taking a journey, there are always some things to be left behind. A boat departs from an harbor and those on board must leave the mainland, the city or town, the friends and other associations. So in starting out on the New Year's voyage, there are certain things which will be only hindrances to the success of our lives and should be left with the old year.

As we look back over the past year, we find that we have collected certain bad habits which should not be taken farther on the journey of 1929. They are habits that have done us harm and will continue to do us harm as they grow. Bad habits always grow larger. They never become smaller unless we try to conquer them. If we carry them through another year, they will be just that much harder to drop. Perhaps not all of our bad habits are recognized by ourselves. Then it is time that we take an inventory of ourselves to see just what we have of value, or harm, to the onward progress of our lives. Just as a merchant takes an inventory of his stock to see what he has, so we should evaluate our spiritual and moral possessions. If we would be most efficient to ourselves and to our fellowmen; if we would be "fit for the Kingdom of God," then we should leave bad habits behind as we venture forth in the year 1929.

During the past year we have had failures. No man is so perfect that he never makes a mistake. The failures of the past can never be righted. We must leave them also as we go on this new journey. By brooding over our failures, we never equip ourselves to succeed the next time. But by forgetting the failures, except to profit by them, we have conquered them. A former failure need not be a hindrance to a future success. Benjamin Franklin's life was filled with failures yet who was more successful than he? It was because he tried again. So as we go forward in the new year, let us go with the courage and new zeal to conquer obstacles which try to hold us back. The new voyage demands that we forget the failures of the past and press on toward future success.

Perhaps some have had sorrows in the past year, little sorrows and big sorrows. We all have had them. Yet if we carry them with us in this new year, they will burden our lives and keep us from the greatest happiness. Christ said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It will make the new year brighter if we lay these sorrows on the ONE who will give us the promised rest, and go forward strengthened and ready to meet other possible sorrows.

But we cannot afford to look back over the past year for any other purpose than to forget and to profit by the mistakes that we have made. Our faces should be set forward. Some people are so exultantly satisfied with the past year that they are continually looking back over it rather than looking forward to pursue other tasks. We can no more afford to look backward than the farmer as he plows his furrow. "No man having put his hand to the plow and turning backward is fit for the Kingdom of God." Let us not look backward but forward into the new year with all of its unexplored possibilities.

As certain gathered characteristics should be left behind, so there are certain others that we should take along in the journey of 1929.

The first of these is new hope. A discouraged man is never an efficient man. If your job is dishonorable, then you cannot believe in it and should give it up. If it is honorable, then believe in it and make others believe in it. It is not only the business man who needs this hope in the future. Everyone should have this same trust. Nothing is more depressing in the home circle than someone who is always discouraged and looks forward to no new or better things than already possessed.

The second thing that we need for 1929 is a new purpose. A purposeless life is as a boat without a rudder. We cannot expect to go where we should go if we have no aim in view. Everyone should be guided by a purpose. The broader this life purpose is, the better. Some people have only as their life purpose the drinking of strong drinks. They live for that. Others have no other desire for their lives than to make money. However honorable that may be, let us not put that as our life purpose. A certain modern rich man put his life purpose in these words, "I have as the general purpose of my life to be of service to the world, and under that purpose I want to love and care for that family of mine, to love and live before the world so as to help and never hinder its progress and betterment, and only incidentally to make money for personal expenses and gifts to others less fortunate." If we had a purpose like this rich man, perhaps the world would remember that we had lived and would miss us when we were gone.

The other thing that we need as we look forward to the things of this New Year and the new journey is New Life. The greatest fault of humanity is that they think that they cannot change for the better. We lack faith in ourselves. Oliver Cromwell said, "If I cease to be better, I cease to be good." This is a true statement. If we are not better this year than we were last year, we will not be as good. Surely we wish to find ourselves on the side of progress, so may we determine to make our lives better this year than last.

So the new year is a new voyage. Yet even the eldest of us are inexperienced pilots in guiding our lives. But the Master Pilot is near at hand, ready to help any and all who desire that help. We need that help and guidance. Life is too uncertain, its dangers too great and our powers too weak to expect a safe voyage without divine guidance. Many have been the lives of men who have gone adrift because they thought they were "sufficient unto themselves." Each of us needs a great power, a Divine Christ to be near us during the voyage of 1929.

So let us look forward instead of backward, leaving behind the bad habits of the past years, forgetting the sorrows and failures, and looking forward with New Hope, having a New Purpose in view, secure a New Life crowned with success, and thus we shall have a prosperous and "Happy New Year."

How can we be made fit plowmen who will never turn their back upon the Christian life and never lose sight of the forward vision? There was one moment when the Apostle Paul looked out upon the field that lay before him. It bristled with difficulties, and for the moment, his spirit seemed to faint. But he did not look back; he looked up and cried out "Who is sufficient for these things?" And the cry itself was interpreted as a prayer, and the strong and gentle spirit of God nerved him with fresh confidence and hope, and the spirit of fainting passed away, and he cried out in joyful assurance: "Our sufficiency is God."

That is how we are made fit for the service of the Kingdom. The Lord who calls us into the field is ready to provide the equipment. Any plowman who puts himself into the hands of the great Renewer will find that he is more than able to meet every circumstance, and that his strength is more than sufficient for the most exacting day.

METHODIST ENTERPRISES ABROAD

It is a matter of information that the Methodist Episcopal church has in its foreign field 2,832 schools, enrolling 139,718 pupils, employing 690 missionaries and 6,758 national teachers. In India alone we have enrolled in our schools 41,135 children. In these different countries the church maintains eighty-eight hospitals and medical dispensaries. During the last year the secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions inform us that our church expended outside the United States over $2,313,971 for the maintenance of churches, schools, and hospitals. The most remarkable figure of this report is to be found in this statement "that of the above-named sum, $1,288,135 was contributed by the members of our church in Europe."—Western Christian Advocate.

What care I if the world give me up for miserable while I am under his secret protection? O Lord, since thou art strong in our weakness, and present in our senselessness, give me as much comfort in my sorrow as thou givest me security; and at my worst I shall be well.—Joseph Hall.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENTS

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE NEW MAN—Eph. 4:20-26. "And be renewed in the spirit of your mind." "Put on the new man." That is the one essential thing for entrance into the kingdom of God. A man cannot come to God until he comes ready and willing to have the spirit of his mind changed. Nor will he desire to come until he is ready to put off the old man with his corruptness and deceitfulness and put on the new man, created in righteousness and true holiness. By this we are not to suppose that this new man is something that a man can take on of himself; the change, the renewal, is wrought by the power and because of the grace of, the Lord Jesus Christ, but the willingness and the desire must be in the heart of the individual. If any reader has not the new man, this year is a good time to put him on.

TUESDAY

THE UPRIGHT LIFE—Prov. 28:18-22. "Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved; but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once." It is as true as day that the righteous will prosper and the wicked will be brought low. The righteous will not necessarily get rich, nor always have health, nor always be successful, nor yet will the wicked always be poor, or sickly, or a failure. The things of this life will pass away; it is spiritual values that count and abide. The righteous soul will increase in righteousness and the wicked will become more and more perverted.

WEDNESDAY

GAINING OVER SELF—Rom. 12:9-11. "In honor preferring one another." There are many hard and unattractive ways we must walk as Christians, and here is pointed out one of the most difficult. To compel self to stand back and give preference to others goes against human nature about as strongly as anything we can imagine, and few are able to accomplish it. But there lies the big difference between success and failure in the Christian life. When we arrive at the gate of self-renunciation, we find God there waiting to bless us.

THURSDAY

THE UNFAILING HELPER—2 Cor. 3:4-6. "Our sufficiency is of God." There is no one who faces life seriously but finds himself up against many severe tests and struggles and pitfalls. And there is no one but finds at times that his own strength is not sufficient, his own wisdom is not able to meet the situation, and his patience and perseverance have not the steadiness and staying power that the occasion demands. At such times, with courage, confidence and strength gone, what can a person do? To whom can he go? If he knows the Lord Jesus Christ, and is able by faith to launch out on his mighty power, that is all he needs. In Christ we have a helper who has never failed us yet, and in whom we find a sufficiency for every need.

FRIDAY

BEAUTIFUL FEET—Rom. 10:11-17. "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!" It is not a beauty of form that the Scriptures are concerned about; it is a beauty of service; it is the beauty that one sees in him who brings a message of peace in the midst of trouble, and of goodwill in the midst of strife. It is that spiritual beauty that glows from the very form of one who is on an errand of mercy, or bearing the gospel of saving grace to dying men.

SATURDAY

THE CHRISTIAN'S MOTIVE—Luke 22:24-27. "He that is greatest among you, let him be the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve." This is a hard saying for men whose hearts have not been changed; it is not for them. It is for those who have been with Jesus and have learned of him. It is Christ's challenge to the Christian as a motive of conduct.

SUNDAY

SPIRITUAL FREEDOM—Gal. 1:1-6. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free." There is no bondage so to be feared as spiritual bondage, and none is so easily escapable and unnecessary. Just one thing is essential—to keep in mind that the power is not in us, but comes by faith in Christ Jesus, who is able to succor all that call upon him.—G. S. B.

Sunday School Budgeting and Accounting

A Proved Method of Making the Lord's Money go Farther

By Harold B. Street

Contingency—The first year a budget is put into effect, it is well to have a comparatively large apportionment (at least ten per cent) to this account, as it is an emergency account and is the "bank" where we go to borrow in case of a shortage in some other account. For instance if there are not sufficient funds in the supplies account to pay a bill for supplies, which should be paid at once, enough is transferred from the contingency account to make up the shortage. Theoretically, these "borrowed" funds should be returned, but if a deficit is apt to occur again, the funds are appropriated for the "poor" account. No bills are ever charged to the contingency account.

Christmas—There are few Sunday schools that do not have a special program at Christmas time, and the great danger is that more money will be spent at this time than is really justified, in view of the great need among the less fortunate, both at home and in foreign lands, unless some one or some thing applies the brakes. Christmas trees, moderate decorations, a party for the little tots, and candy for all, are proper and in order for this season of the year, but let the money spent for this purpose be in the right proportion to the need for other things right in the Sunday school, and particularly in the far parts of the world for the spreading of the Gospel. A budget provides such a check. The budget figures given in the form above makes no provision for the purchase of food and other necessities for the poor at Christmas. In our Sunday school an offering is always received at our Christmas Program, and this money is used in purchasing provisions for the needy.

Equipment—To this account charge blackboards, chairs, tables, sand boxes, maps, modeling clay, paper for tearing, cabinets, and the like. This account can be stinted almost better than any other. A well equipped Sunday school is highly desirable, but it is not as necessary as many other things. In this connection, let us keep in mind the Lord Jesus' words, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in Heaven."

Entertainment—Most schools entertain their cradle roll members at least once a year. Occasionally parties may be held for the Beginners or Primary Departments. In our school the honor pupils are invited as honor guests to the annual Sunday school banquet, and paid for by the Sunday school. All such items are charged to entertainment.

Flowers—For sick members and in memory of deceased members of the Sunday school.

Miscellaneous—To this account charge any items that cannot be classified as properly belonging to some other one of the accounts.

Missions—General—It has been said that ten per cent of our income belongs to the Lord and that we do not actually begin to give until we are turning over to him more than ten per cent. With this thought in mind, what we give to the church is our tithe, and what we give to missions is our gift unto the Lord. This money is paid out as recommended by the missionary committee. Under no circumstances allow large amounts to accumulate in this account. Send what has accrued, at least monthly, to some mission headquarters, so it may be forwarded to the needy fields and actually be put to work. The birthday offerings received go into this fund, as well as the budget apportionment.

Missions—Leper—This account is kept separate from the general missions account, as all money for it is taken in through the little iron "pigs" banks provided by the American Mission to Lepers, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Incidentally, you will be delightfully surprised to see what an interest the little folks of the Beginners, Primary, and Junior Departments take in these "pig" banks, and the cause is most worthy.

Music—To this account charge music for the Sunday school orchestra or band, new song books, piano tuning, and any special music except that used for special programs on special days.

Printing—Charge all kinds of printing and advertising (except stationery) to this account.

Programs—Charge music, programs, decorations, and all necessary materials for the exercises on special days such as Easter, Children's Day, Promotion Day, Rally Day, and the like, excepting Christmas, which is to be charged to the Christmas account because of the larger amount involved. Included in this account will be charges for such things as promotion certificates, ribbons, Bibles for the children graduating from the Primary to the Junior Department, and the like.

Picnic—Every item of expense in connection with the annual picnic is charged to this account. This will include transportation, programs, prizes, ice cream, lemonade, and the like. If an indoor picnic is held in the middle of the winter, it will also be charged to this account. If the church combines its annual picnic with the Sunday school, as is usually the case, it is no more than proper that the expense should be divided between the two organizations.

Postage, Stationery—The total amount charged to this account will be comparatively small, but it should not be overlooked. The officers of the Sunday school should not have to pay for the stationery and postage used to write letters in the interests of the school.

Supplies—Charge all quarterlies, lesson helps, picture charges and cards, Sunday school papers, secretary's and treasurer's supplies to this account. The apportionment to this account will, of necessity, be considerably larger than any other account, but this does not mean that it should not be closely watched. Repeated "extras" of papers and quarterlies should be sufficient evidence that too many are being ordered, and immediate steps should be taken to have the order reduced. Careful watching of this matter by the secretaries should save several thousand dollars in the course of a year.

Some Sunday schools probably will not want as many accounts as listed above. Others may want more. Every school has different conditions to deal with, and as many or as few accounts can be carried as is deemed good business. The only general rule that can be laid down is that there should be an account for every item of expense which recurs regularly. The advantage is obvious. At the end of any period the treasurer can tell what has been spent for any account, and easily make comparisons with like previous periods. Every progressive business is constantly making comparisons with the previous year, or years. It is true that Paul said, "Forgetting those things which are behind . . . I press toward the mark for the prize," but at the same time, let us not forget that every runner keeps his eye on the "goal" (prize), and in every business, and in every Sunday school the goal should be an improved condition over the previous year. The alert and efficient superintendent will not leave this matter of expenditures wholly to his treasurer either, but will always be informed regarding the condition of the Sunday school finances, and use his influence and knowledge to assist in bringing about the improved condition.

Every treasurer should insist that there be an audit of his records at least annually, and preferably semi-annually. This removes any possibility of criticism or error as it shifts the responsibility from the treasurer to the auditor. Among the acquaintances of the average superintendent there is usually some certified accountant, or at least a competent bookkeeper who would be willing to make an audit gratis, and give an auditor's certified statement as to the correctness of the books. This is necessary in every successful business, and should have a place in the financial program of every Sunday school.

Every one reading this article is undoubtedly agreed that the Sunday school's only excuse for existence is—

To win the pupils to Christ.

To build up the pupils in Christ.

To send forth the pupils for Christ.

But, do not the finances of every school have a real part in this program? This is a day of efficiency. Can we honestly afford to be less careful and less conscientious in the handling of the Lord's business (which is for eternity) than we are in our own business, which, at best, is for but a few years? Are the methods we employ in our own business to help make it profitable and successful too good for the Lord? In one of the parables on the kingdom the Lord Jesus told of the man who said to his servant who had judiciously used the talents placed in his care, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matt. 25:21). Careful planning, conscientious endeavor, practical efficiency, business economy, earnest prayer in connection with Sunday school finances pay big dividends. Read Paul's words again, "Let all things be done decently and in order."

Some Great Christian Teachings II. Sin

Scripture Lesson—Gen. 3:1-24; 6:5-8; Mark 7:14-23; Rom. 1:18-32; 3:10-18; 1 John 1:5 to 2:6.

Printed Text—1 John 1:5 to 2:6.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 51:1-10.

Golden Text—If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 1 John 1:8, 9.

Introductory Note

There is no greater problem facing the world than that of sin. Great essays have been written and published in book form on the origin of sin, why an all-powerful God permitted sin to enter into the world, why he did not at least destroy it as soon as it entered, whether sin is inherent in the human heart or whether it comes from without, whether it is increasing or decreasing, and many other problems related thereto, but the questions are not yet settled. Men are disputing as much as ever. These questions may be raised in the class and dogmatically settled by some one, but that will not really settle them. They do not need to be settled in the way that the philosopher would settle them. The great fact of sin must be faced, and God has shown a way out, and the only way out. That must be emphasized.

The First Epistle of John

The scripture portions brought into the study of this theme are too numerous to permit of the study of them all. We will satisfy ourselves with a word merely concerning John's first epistle. It is generally believed that John wrote this epistle near the close of his long life, and he died about the close of the first century. Macdonald says: "Ancient tradition places the writing both of the Gospel and the Epistle at Ephesus. It was not written to any particular church, but to a circle of churches, composed of Gentile Christians. A comparison of the opening of this Epistle with that of the Gospel by the same author shows a striking similarity. The Apostle John, without entering any formal argument like Paul, contents himself with setting forth, in his emphatic manner, the positive truth, that the only way in which we can have fellowship with the Father must be through the incarnation and mediation of his Son."

A comment from the Cambridge Bible is of interest: "The First Epistle of John probably contains the last exhortations of that apostle to the church of Christ. And as he long outlived all the rest of the apostles, and as this Epistle was written near the end of his long life, we may regard it as the farewell of the apostolic body to the whole company of believers who survived them or have been born since their time."

The Genesis Passage

Everywhere it will be asked, What view shall we take of this record? Let us not waste time quibbling or debating non-essential questions. If we face facts fairly, we must be willing to say that it is a true picture of human life, marvelously accurate, true to human nature and to divine, and inspiringly religious. President W. R. Harper once said: "It is a picture into which every man may look and see himself, and shudder at the terrible cost of sin. It is the greatest sermon ever preached to man as a warning against sin; a sermon which millions have read and millions more will read; a sermon which will never cease to be read so long as man is man and God is God."

"Let us recall to mind," says Professor Swing in Truths for Today, "what a large part of this story must be true, even if it made no pretense to be an inspired narrative. It is not, certainly, a myth that there is a human race, and there must have been a first pair and this pair must have had a home and a Creator at hand; and must have made their first move in virtue or sin; and from what sin we now see in the world, that they early left the paradise of virtue is the verdict of history."

All Are Sinners

All men are sinners and in need of the grace of God. "The Apostle Paul," comments F. A. Tholuck, "does not assert that there are not degrees in wickedness and lower depths of guilt; he only declares, with unpromising assurance, that all have come short of the standard. It is one thing for human nature to possess some beautiful remainders of good; it is another question whether human nature, even at its best, has enough good to save and restore itself. A famous temple of Rome or of Greece or of India, lying in ruins, may have fragments of splendid sculpture buried among the rubbish; but the splendid fragments cannot build once more the splendid temple."

"I have never yet met the man who disputed the fact of his being a sinner; but I have met with many who admitted it, and yet lived on in the world as gaily as if it entailed no further consequences. When I proceed to inquire how this can possibly be, it always strikes me as the chief reason that men do not give themselves leisure—to rectify."

Dr. Gribble's Diary and Military Situation

Irimo—Military Camp

(Note—The following copy of Dr. Gribble's diary made during the time she was endeavoring to return from the Missionary Conference to Yaloke, after learning of the rebellion of the tribe against the French government, was relayed to us by the way of Mr. Emory Ross of the Protestant Missions Council at Leopoldville-Est., then to France and on to Miss Edna Patterson of Philadelphia, who made copies for the Evangelist and for Dr. Bauman of the Foreign Board. From this diary, as from copies of letters written by Mr. Ross, we understand that the missionaries may be considered safe from attack at the present time. Indeed Dr. Gribble's letter states the Yaloke and the false prophet who incited the attack forbade the natives to harm our missionaries. Sister Gribble, we learn from her letter, succeeded in reaching Yaloke station where there was a great rejoicing at the reunion of the missionaries—Editor).

Daily Diary

Introduction—Returning from Congo Jubilee and West Africa Conference, held at Leopoldville, September 16th to 24th, 1928, I was met with the surprising information at Bangui that our own tribes are at war with the government. Realized the necessity of reaching our stations if possible especially since two of our missionaries are ill at Bassai, and one at Yaloke—this number including both of our nurses. Arriving at Bangui from Leopoldville the 19th of October, I hurried through my business including the taking of two and one-half tons of freight through customs formalities, (necessary even though two tons of the same had been taken through customs while I was at Brazzaville)—dispatched seventy-seven porters, who had been sent to meet me instead of the trucks on account of the difficulties and dangers of the road, and since the case was urgent, left Bangui by hired automobile with my personal boy and baggage on Sunday morning, the 21st. Arriving at Boali at 10 o'clock I was forbidden to proceed further on account of the rebellion. Monsieur Cuvillier, the Administrateur, left immediately for Bangui to consult with his superiors. Returning after two days he brought word that I might be permitted to proceed if I signed a paper exonerating him from all blame in case of my being killed or injured en route. This, of course, I was glad to do, and a rather formidable paper was drawn up, which, however, I signed, hoping to get through to my work. We continued in the same automobile, which I had kept for the purpose at considerable expense. Boali is fifty miles from Bangui. We proceeded to this point, seventy miles further, that afternoon, arriving at 8 or 8:30 P. M. From here on the bridges have been broken by the natives, and it was impossible to proceed further by automobile. I was forbidden by the officers in charge of the military camp here, as well as by the "chef de la subdivision" who volunteered to accompany me to this point, to go further by tepoi or any other means, until the state of war shall have been dissolved. I am only twenty miles from Yaloke but no communication can be established either way between the other missionaries and myself. My seventy-seven porters arrived at Boali just before I departed. I was obliged to pay them off, they being from villages in the vicinity of Boali, and to store the freight in the government storehouses there until the close of the war.

Irimo Military Camp

October 24th, 1928: Arrived here last night, tremendously fatigued. The necessity of deciding what to do with my porters, the checking of their loads and paying them, the repacking of my personal baggage, half of which, as well as all my boys had to be left behind to make room for Monsieur Cuvillier and his baggage (he having volunteered to accompany me), the signing of the paper, not only exonerating the officials from blame, but taking upon myself sole responsibility should my advance toward Yaloke aggravate conditions, all these causes, and the fact that I was still suffering from gripe and carrying a temperature, made the seventy mile ride in the open auto peculiarly fatiguing. Mercifully I was kept from all fear, but fatigue kept demanding "Who will establish camp on our late arrival? Who will prepare dinner for these two gentlemen and myself?" How weak was my faith! Immediately upon our arrival three military officers rushed out to meet us, the commanding officer informing me immediately that he would permit me to go no further, but with true French politeness inviting the three of us to dine with him. We dined at a late hour in military simplicity, but with the usual French profusion of course. Meanwhile, two of the Yaloke school boys here in their village on vacation, put up my camp bed and made all necessary preparations for the night. While at dinner the mail arrived. As it could not be sent to Yaloke I received it. How frail is the human heart, and how human in its frailty! For I confess to the only feeling of depression which had come to me throughout the day, to find on sorting the mail, a profusion of letters and papers for every other Yaloke missionary, to whom they could not be forwarded, and for myself not one letter, not one paper! Evidently my mail had been detained either at Brazzaville or Bangui (though no such order had been given) or forwarded by mistake to either Bellevue or Bassai. I sent out letters to the postmaster this morning, wrote to my recent hostess, Madame Cuvillier, added a note or two to other friends and returned the runner to Boali.

Old Chief Irmo, long my friend, brought me eggs, a chicken, plaitain and peanuts this morning, all for the paltry sum of five francs. The school boys are being initiated into the art of cooking and serving (Alas! I have no table, all such luxuries having been left behind).

The camp is a small mud building of two rooms, familiar enough to me, but now under a very unfamiliar aspect. Thirty soldiers and their wives are encamped upon the veranda. It is difficult to get in or out the door, especially at night when one must step over, on and between sleeping forms. A goodly share of the small room is occupied with officers' baggage and ammunition. My humble bed is in one corner—the remnants of my personal baggage in another. In one corner is the uncurtained doorway communicating with the room, equally small, in which the three young officers, in spite of their difference in rank, are huddled together, in order that I may have this one. The courtesy of man, sometimes even of ungodly men to Christian womanhood, has always been to me a matter of surprise. The officers are kindness in itself, especially the chief, who told me today that as soon as the troops for which he is waiting arrive, he will proceed to Yaloke, make our station, which he knows to be advantageously situated, his poste, and after the war is over he will return and personally escort me to the station! Quelle bonte! But this simply means that I am to be detained here until the war is over. At any rate, my mind is relieved of the uncertainty as to how to act, which has been my portion ever since arriving at Bangui, and which has led me to continually lean upon the promise "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not!" Is it ungrateful to reflect that one can be as much a prisoner to kindness as to cruelty, and to regret that my pleadings to proceed alone, at once and without military escort, have been denied?

Excitement prevailed this afternoon when two automobiles arrived bringing more cartridges and ammunition. The governor of Oubangui-Chari was himself in one. The Mayor of Bangui in the other. Both called on me in my humble detention quarters to pay that "respectful homage" which a true Frenchman never fails to show to a lady. Both were profuse in their apologies for my detention, meanwhile sanctioning it and thus strengthening the chain which binds me here.

There was a skirmish near here today. The chief officer came at once to tell me about it on their return at 2 P. M. They essayed to go out alone, he said, and unarmed, at Nzairis' village and arbitrate with the chiefs, three of whom under the leadership of Nzairi, were united against him. But instead of that they were met with a volley of poisoned arrows and an avalanche of spears. Marvelously, none of them were hurt, and the officer gave the order to fire. A number were wounded, and one man, the brother of Nzairi, fell dead, by the officer's own rifle he says. He is

QUESTIONING THE NEW YEAR

*I asked the New Year for some motto sweet,
Some rule of life by which to guide my feet;
I asked and paused. He answered soft and low,*

"God's will to know."

*"Will knowledge, then, suffice, New Year?"
I cried,*

*But ere this question into silence died
The answer came, "Nay, this remember, too, God's will to do."*

Once more I asked, "Is there still more to tell?"

*And once again the answer sweetly fell,
"Yea, this one thing above all others do,
"Yea, this one thing all other things above, God's will to love."*

—Selected.

much disturbed about it, especially as events have proven that this particular man had withheld his arrow and was willing for peace. What a hard life is that of a soldier, save only the soldier of the Cross!

They took a woman prisoner from Yambouides village. The palaver was held in my room. She was told to return by the bush-path and tell all the chiefs that they are to come tomorrow night to make friends with the commanding officer. If not ... "Who knows but what I may have come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" For unworthy as I am, the people love me, the officers respect me. Will God in his goodness be so kind as to use me to bring about a better understanding between them?

October 25th, 1928.

The first words that my eyes saw when I opened my Bible this morning were there: I Corinthians chapter 12—verses 9 and 10. "Wherefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then I am strong."

It is raining today, which adds to the discomforts of the situation. But God gave me strength to rise today, although a leaky roof, an unprotected door, and consequently a damp bed in spite of the added protection of my rain coat, gave me a night of chill and suffering. I must ask the Lord to keep me well here, as my illness would be added complication and responsibility to the officers here, already too much involved in both. What a comfort it would be to have my boy instead of these little fellows here. Yet how thankful I am for them! The rain has caused a cessation of hostilities. So far, 10 A. M., the day is a quiet one—as far as excitement is concerned, although the monotonous noise of the sixty occupants of the veranda continues unceasingly. Two thoughts sustained me this morning as I awakened to a realization of the dreariness of my situation—"Without faith it is impossible to please God" and "Abraham ... was strong in the faith, giving glory to God, being fully persuaded that that which he had promised, he was able also to perform." What a joy to know that if I will, I may please God today! What a joy to know that as the French version says "Il agira—"He will work!"

Noon

I have just made one more plea, and that is to accompany the expedition which is about to take up its quarters on our mission station even, and there remain for two or three months, as its physician. Two native nurses are in the expedition, so it would not be too difficult for me. If there must be war at Yaloke surely I ought to be there to care for the wounded. But the commanding officer refuses. I might encounter a passing arrow! It seems that the New Year is to find me still here. His will be done! He has prayed for me too, that my faith fail not! Thirty-five kilometres from Yaloke and not even able to communicate with them. But thank God communications are open between me and the homeland and loved ones, and best of all, between me and the Throne.

Evening

Just had another talk with the commanding officer, this time on the subject of salvation through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He says that although he is a Catholic he has truly accepted the Lord as his personal Savior, and that in this war he will make it his first business to protect and establish our Mission more firmly than ever. Conscious indeed am I that only God can do this, yet "the powers that be are ordained of God," and very evidently so in this case. He regrets that there must be bloodshed at Yaloke, but believes it to be inevitable, and intimated that he fears even Yaloke himself must fall. Yet God can work in other ways. Oh for faith to trust him more! What yearning for Chief Yaloke that he may be not only submissive, but saved! I feel sure if I could see him I could be used, yet I am in detention and prayer is my only resource. "The fervent effectual prayer of a righteous man (or woman) availeth much." "Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray!" "If thou canst believe! All things are possible to him that believeth!"

Today the palisade is being erected and sentinels are to be stationed at close intervals. The enclosure is small and my heart sinks if I am to be therein confined without liberty of egress. I so much enjoyed visiting Irmo's harem this afternoon and talking to the women and children. I must use every degree of liberty I have while it remains to me.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The Allentown First Brethren Church held its fall communion service, Sunday evening, December 9th. There were fifty-two members present, all of whom I am sure received a blessing and enjoyed the service. Our pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen, has for some time been trying to instill into our hearts the need of fully surrendered lives and the hiding of self behind the cross of Christ. The meeting of Sunday night was a spiritual service which strengthened and encouraged one to press on and fight the good fight.

We expect to start a series of evangelistic meetings with Sister Emma M. Aboud in charge. Pray that we may all be used to bring souls to the Master.

One of the most beautiful and impressive cantatas, portraying the birth of Jesus and the events pertaining thereto, was presented by the members of the First Brethren Sunday school, Allentown, Pennsylvania, Sunday evening, December 23rd. The Cantata, "The Light of the World" was used. The characters represented were, The Inn-keeper's wife and three daughters, six shepherds, angel, three wise men, wife, daughter, son of one of the wise men, chorus of Primary children, ten girls in Oriental costume, and six light bearers. A great deal of credit belongs to Mrs. Christiansen, wife of the pastor, as well as the members of the cast.

Respectfully,
MRS. JAMES KAMOIE,
Corresponding Secretary.

NORTH MANCHESTER, INDIANA

Sunday night, December 23, closed a very soul inspiring and spiritual meeting which began December 9, with the visible results of twenty-eight confessions, eighteen of whom have been baptized and taken into the church; one was received by letter and eleven more are awaiting baptism, two of whom made the good confession the week before the meetings began.

To God be all the Glory. He giveth the harvest, and truly rewards such splendid, uplifting service as was rendered by our beloved pastor, Prof. J. Raymond Schutz. He was very ably assisted by Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer of Peru, Indiana, who conducted the music. Before coming here they helped in meetings at Goshen and Warsaw, and we pray their work at Dayton may be as helpful as it was here, as they go there from here early in the New Year. May God bless their efforts to his Glory.

As to invisible results. God alone knows, but we do know that we had a great revival, not purely emotional but sound reasoning and constructive thinking. We will long remember the singing and genial spoken messages of Mr. Ricker, and music given us by Mrs. Ricker, and the fine constructive sermons delivered by our pastor. And so to quote from Charles Dickens, we would say, "God bless them, one and all."

MRS. I. L. WARVEL,
Corresponding Secretary.

THE ALPS IN SPRING

Just got back from a fine trip up the Rigi, one of the show places here near Lucerne. From the top of it you can see the Alps in all directions, hence it is so popular for those who wish to get a good idea of the Alps and do not want to travel all around among them or climb all the famous peaks. Moreover, it has an inclined railway to the top from down by the Lake. That makes it desirable for people who have lost wind or the desire to climb.

We took the boat at 9:10. It is one of the regular line that runs from Lucerne up to the upper end of the large lake at Fluheln. We got off at a place called Visnau. There the inclined railway begins. The Lake as you will remember from our visit twenty years ago is a most beautiful piece of water, lying amid the towering snow-capped mountains. From many points of view these snowy tops are reflected in the water. The water is so clear in the Lake that we could see down 15 or 20 feet. The air is cool as you may imagine when I tell you that there is a vast amount of snow still lying on the upper parts of these mountains.

The cog railway goes up the west side of Rigi. The grade varies from 6% in a few short pieces to over 40%. I should say that the average was about 25%. The view from the top (5,905 feet) was magnificent. I suppose you will get tired of seeing that word. There is no other to describe a number of the scenes to be found here. Off to the west lay Lucerne at the one end of her lake, just to the northwest was the small lake of Lowerz, to the north in the immediate space at the bottom of almost a direct drop from this peak lay the Lake Zug. In the farther distance were hills and valleys through which railways and roads could be seen running. Had it been a clear day in that direction we should have been able to see Zurich and the mountains beyond, but it was hazy in that direction. Off to the east lay another range from which back in the middle of the last century a great slide of earth and rock occurred. It tumbled down into the valley near Arth-Goldau, from which another cog railway runs up to the Rigi. It buried two villages on the way down and the debris may still be seen where it hit the Lake. Over 500 people perished. From the top of the Rigi the bare spot from which this mass slipped could be seen. Then to the South stretched that long line of snowy peaks in which there are so many famous mountains. Yonder is the Todt, Scheerhorn, and the Bristenstock, the Uri-Rotstock, and Titlis, and a little to the west of these the fine range of the Bernese Alps out from which stands the Jungfrau so well known to all lovers of mountains. To the west still further stands the nearer Pilatus which we hope to get up tomorrow. All these to the south show us the snowy sides on the north which the sun has not cleared of snow. They are beautiful in the bright sunlight.

After enjoying this beauty to our fill, we went down on the cog to a restaurant at Kaltbad, where we had one of the best dinners I have had since we left the Dollar Line ships. After that John bantered me to walk down to the Lake shore and catch the boat from there rather than ride down the cog. I can't let the youth put the old man down as a quitter all the time, so down we went. It took us about two and one-half hours, but it was fine. The two of us had a lovely walk clear from the snow down to the Lake. At the top we were in plenty of snow. There were drifts there several feet deep, although the bright sun today was melting it rather rapidly.

As you may imagine all down the face of the rocks little cascades of melting snow water were dashing. Up just beside the snow the Alpine crocuses were blooming. I picked a few which I enclose (to Mrs. Gillin). Also some real Alpine violets, lots of small daisy like flowers, butter cups, and dandelions. These white ones are crocuses and the purple are violets. Both were picked at an altitude of more than 5,000 feet.

We finally got down and had time to rest before the boat came to take us back to Lucerne. Going up and coming down we had plenty of opportunity to see these Swiss farmers at work. I wonder that there are not more casualties. These mountains are precipitous. A step aside on the side of many of them would send a man down thousands of feet. Moreover, the sides of many of them are so steep that it is a wonder that more landslides do not occur. Then, there are the hillsides on which are planted the little farms with their cabins, or as they are called here, chalets. These are the people's homes. One cannot but wonder that they do not slip down the hillside. In certain parts coming over the St. Gotthard Pass from Italy we saw dozens of them shingled with flat stones. Most of them are built of stone in those parts. But never before had I seen a house shingled with flat stones.

To look up at these little farms perched on the sides of the mountains you would think that it is utterly impossible for the owners to cultivate the land, but they do. Today as we came down from the Rigi on foot, winding around and around in zig-zag fashion, we saw many families working out in the fields, tiny they were, but fields just the same. Of course no plow could be used on such steep hillsides. Those I saw in the Kentucky mountains a few years ago when I visited the Drushals are nothing compared with these. They say that every once in a while even now one of these Swiss farmers falls out of his field. What a fine location that would be when a book agent comes around to try to sell the farmer something he does not want. Just give the agent a gentle kick and the next thing he would know he would be blowing water from his lungs down in Lake Lucerne. Then it is handy about borrowing things. Neighbor Schmid down the hill calls up to Neighbor Kunstler, "Hey Schmid, bitte your mattock thrown down to me for this forenoon." Down it came by wireless. But then it will not work in the reverse direction.

Men and women work in the fields side by side. The children are out there too. While the men are breaking up the soil with mattocks, the women and girls are smoothing the ground, or planting something in it. Or, if the men are clearing off trees and brush, the children are carrying the brush to be burned or to fill up gullies worn by the water. There is little of the modern rush and hurry of America to be seen here in Switzerland. Today I saw an ox team on the streets of Weggis. But in the same street I saw a Fordson tractor pulling a cart full of crushed stone for the road. But I saw no Fordsons pulling ploughs on those hillside farms.

Milk and cheese are famous Swiss products. One wonders where the cows are, for in the daytime few are to be seen. I suppose they are away in the pastures where tourists do not go. When it comes to a meal here you know that you are in a dairy country, for you get good butter and whipped cream. Moreover, here dessert means more than what that term means with us. In Italy and most of the Orient it means anything or nothing. In India it might mean a small wafer, or nuts, or fruit. In Italy there was no such term on the menus we saw. They had cheese and fruit to wind up the meal.

However, prices are not cheap in Switzerland. I can get better meals at home for less money. But that is true in Italy and Egypt too. Say, when I get back I am going down to one of these coffee shops, or lunch counters, just for the joy of seeing the dispatch with which they will fill my order for ham and eggs, coffee and pie. They will do it while the Swiss or Italian waiter is asking you what you will have. I have had a terrible time in getting fried eggs. I have given up ordering ham and eggs or bacon and eggs. But worse than that when I want them turned, I have a worse job, for evidently they never heard of such a thing. Here in Lucerne, when I finally made them understand that I wanted fried eggs, the waiter asked how many minutes I wanted them fried. They do have plenty of jam in Switzerland for breakfast. In Italy at the last place, Milan, we had to pay extra for the jam. Just watch me for a few days after I get home.

I think we shall finish Lucerne tomorrow and light out for Bern next day.

Lucerne, Switzerland, April 26, 1928.

WHY I AM NOT AN INFIDEL, SKEPTIC, OR ATHEIST

Happy is the people whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 144:15.

By observation, and Bible truth, we know that this is the only way to be happy. The man who denies God is not satisfied since the atheist would tell us that there is no God, and since peace is to be had from no other source whatsoever, we will conclude that they do not have it.

If we would have God's approval and recognition, we must believe that he is (Heb. 11:6), and not believe he is not. This class of people who believe that there is no God is not of recent origin, but David already spoke of a people who said in their heart, "There is no God," and he speaks of them as being fools. (See Ps. 14:1; 53:1). Can we think of a creature, such as man denying that he has a creator, or God, when the Bible so very plainly tells of the creation? And especially it is astonishing that they should say it in the heart. Yet it seems that man may become blinded to the extent that he will do this. However, many will sometime admit or confess that there is a Supreme Being. Unhappiness can often be noticed in the very life of those who have no acquaintance with God.

The dying testimonies of such are ample proof to convince us of this fact. The story is told of a company of infidels trying, but in vain, to comfort their dying friend, and leader by telling him to hold on; but his reply was, "I have nothing to hold to." This is an extremely pitiful, unconsoling testimony, but it plainly proves the above statement, that if we would have joy and satisfaction we must believe in God.

Man is a free agent, to believe what he will; however, he is responsible for what he believes. As he lives, so shall he meet the judgment. He, then, if never before, will believe and know that there is a God in heaven that rules and reigns supreme.

After a long undesirable experience Nebuchadnezzar came to himself, and then, as perhaps never before, did he recognize the Lord God of heaven. Many other instances like this might be given to prove that there is a God.

In face of these facts, which shall we accept as authority—the never failing Book that has been tested and tried all through the ages, or the defying testimonies of those who during their life have denied Christ and God, who at death confessed that their belief was false? Or, shall we rather, only rely upon what they have taught during a life of prosperity? Nay, I had by far rather accept the dying words as truth—and above all the Bible. (Gen. 1:1; Col. 1:16).

At least many atheists at one time believed there is a God, why then do they no more? Because, when they knew him they glorified him not as God, but became vain in their imaginations and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools (Rom. 1:21, 22). What, does the Bible call this class by such a name as this? It also plainly tells us that they shall not be able to stand in his sight. (Psa. 5:5). Let us therefore not be like unto them, but with simple, childlike faith believe that "God is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6).—Jno L. Kauffman in Gospel Herald.

FACING THE NEW YEAR

Words of a Faithful Pastor

We must live some kind of Christian life during the coming year! What kind of Christian life shall it be? We know what kind our Lord would have it be!

Notice some of the things that must accompany the highest Christian life.

1. A clearer view of sin. Contrary to nature, as we grow older in the life of faith, our vision should become more keen to discern sin in its more refined and deceptive forms. "Let us lay aside every weight" (Heb. 12:1). Under this closer scrutiny many things will doubtless be discovered, weights or hindrances to our Christian life that we have never before suspected. "And the sin that doth so easily beset." Are we really aware what our besetting sin is? It is quite possible that we have never yet discerned and judged it. Let us not allow it to remain undetected any longer.

2. A more complete self-conquest. Our own will is the battlefield where the crisis conflict must be fought. Like Paul we must say (1 Cor. 9:27), "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection" (i. e., make it my slave.)

3. A closer devotion to Jesus our Lord. As "Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him and gave it to David, and his garments even to his sword and to his bow and to his girdle" (1 Sam. 18:4), so are we to give all we have to Jesus. The higher life holds nothing back from him. It murmurs at no demand, but yields implicit obedience. Are you in a hard place? He has placed you there or at least allows you to remain there, because he sees you are worth refining and beautifying. Honor his confidence by a victorious life where you are. Shine now!

4. A more active service for others. This will be one of the strong proofs of our genuineness. "For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" (1 John 4:20). A look, a touch, a gift, a word of cheer, a prayer prompted by a loving heart, we never know when in the providence of God, so slight a thing may change a human destiny, or be the hinge on which tremendous results will turn.—Charles C. Cook.

THE CURSE OF CARE

Worry breaks down our health and ill health reacts upon the mental condition, and we worry more and more until we are unfitted for the enjoyment of life's pleasures, the meeting of its responsibilities, and the bearing of its burdens. Worry is also injurious to the spiritual life. Oftentimes the Word of God is choked out of our hearts by the cares of this life. Oftentimes our hearts are so full of worries about the things of this life that we have no time to think about the things of the life which is to come. The soul and body are intimately connected and the care and worry which produce ill health in the body produce also disease in the soul. Langour of body produces langour of spirit, and physical dyspepsia results in spiritual discouragement, and a torpid liver is often responsible for doubts about the salvation of the soul. Worry is a sin against our spiritual life, because it substitutes doubt for faith, slothfulness for fervor in spirit, self-reliance for trust in God, conscience for Christ, and reliance upon our own wisdom for the guidance of the Holy Spirit.—The Presbyterian.

HIS PROMOTION

By J. D. Gilliland

An old railway engineer on the Harriman system was known for his earnest, confiding faith and consistent Christian life.

Taken with creeping paralysis, he lingered, slowly dying. A few days before his translation he was visited by one of his old-time railway associates, who said to him:

"John, you are now up against the real thing. How does it seem? What is it like?"

"Charley, you've worked for the railroad company for twenty years or so, and never had many promotions," answered he.

"Yes, I have."

"Well, Charley, suppose you would get a wire from headquarters saying they had a big promotion for you and at the same time sending you a pass to go into the office to report. How would it seem to you, do you think?"

"It'd be mighty fine," said Charley.

"Well, that's just my case," said the dying man. "I've been working for God and his company for about twenty years and never had much promotion so far as I could see, and now I have a summons direct from the glory-land telling me they've a big advancement for me, and it sounds mighty good."

To his brothers of the railroad he sent this message: "Boys, I'll not see you any more. I am just like a boy at Christmas eve, who, with stocking hung up, is anxious for daylight. The shadows have come over me. My stocking is hung up by the Father's fireplace and I am almost impatient for the morning. I haven't the remotest idea what I'll get, but I am sure it will be something good."

Having been taken to the hospital because of the ravages of the slow disease, he sent for the writer to go to his room to help him die. He wanted familiar hands to assist him mount the heavenly chariot. And there was no complaining except to ask why the couriers of the King were so long coming. He was dressed for the wedding, the Christmas morning or whatever else there was awaiting. His patient Christian wife was wholly resigned, though dreading the loneliness, but that was not one of despair.

When the moment came the old engineer's headlight was undimmed and the switch signals showed green (sign of safety), and when he called for the last board at the home station the sign came back, "All's well, come on in."

He had received his promise.—Christian Intelligencer.

PERSONAL EVANGELISM

The unsatisfactory character of our church statistics emphasizes the fact that the missionary zeal which Christ expects of and enjoins upon his followers is at low ebb in most of our congregations. The work of testifying for the Savior and of winning souls for the kingdom is quite generally delegated by church members to their pastor. Their inactive attitude is justified by the claim that they are carrying out the Lord's command by proxy. Their financial support of the missionary cause is supposed to be a sufficient concession to the great missionary commission which has been given to the church. The attitude of many churches might indicate that the Savior's missionary command reads: "Open your churches and let people come to hear the gospel preached." The Founder of the church does not command us to provide opportunity for the lost to come to the gospel, but that we are to take the gospel to the lost. The words of Scripture dealing with this question invariably demand activity, labor, actual personal testimony on the part of every Christian. Every local church should be an aggregation of personal witnesses for Jesus Christ. Many churches are slowly dying of stagnation because the members have not realized any missionary obligation toward their unchurched neighbor. In many churches there has never been an organized effort to bring the gospel to the outsiders. The layman is inclined to shift responsibility by claiming: "That is the pastor's job." It is the layman's job as well as the pastor's. Not sermons, but individual voices of private members of the church are to evangelize the world. When the Romans shortened their swords they lengthened their territories. Wherever we have had this hand-to-hand work our increase has been great. When we cease to believe that men are lost, cease in private to urge them to come to Christ, the glory will depart from us. The church that ceases to be evangelistic will soon cease to be evangelical, and the church that ceases to be evangelical will soon cease to exist.—American Lutheran.

THE CRIME OF UNCONCERN

I walked down the street with him, and put to him the invariable question, "Are you a Christian?" He said, "No, sir, I am not." Then I used every scripture and every argument to get him to promise me to give his heart to God, but could not succeed. When about to separate, I said to him, "Are your father and mother alive?" "Both alive," said he. "Is your father a Christian?" "Don't know; he has been a steward in the church for several years." "Is your mother a Christian?" "Don't know; she has been superintendent of the Sabbath school of the same church for some time." "Have you a sister?" "Yes, sir." "Is she a Christian?" "Don't know; she has the primary department in the Sabbath school." "Do your father and mother ever ask the blessing at the table?" "No, sir." "Did your father, mother or sister ever ask you to be a Christian?" "Mr. Sunday, as long as I can remember, my father or mother or sister never said a word to me about my soul. Do you believe they think I am lost?" I could not answer such an argument.

It is six years this coming October since I heard this. I can hear his words ringing in my ears, "Do you believe they think I am lost?"

Can any one of ours say that we do not care for their soul? May God save us from "the crime of unconcern."—"Billy" Sunday.

GRATITUDE FIRST

A man blind from birth, a man of much intellectual vigor and with many engaging social qualities, found a woman who, appreciating his worth, was willing to cast in her lot with him and become his wife. Several bright, beautiful children became theirs, who equally loved both parents. An eminent French surgeon, while in this country, called upon them, and, examining the blind man with much interest and care, said to him, "Your blindness is wholly artificial. Your eyes are naturally good, and could I have operated on them twenty years ago I think I could have given you sight. Indeed, it is barely possible that I can do it now, though it will cause you much pain." "I can bear that," was the reply, "if you will but enable me to see." The surgeon operated on him, and was gradually successful. First there were faint glimmerings of light; then more distinct vision. The blind father was handed a rose; he had smelled one before, but had never seen one. Then he looked upon the face of his wife, who had been so true and faithful to him. Then his children were brought, whom he had so often fondled, and whose charming prattle had so frequently fallen upon his ears. He then exclaimed, "Alas, what have I done? Why have I seen all these things before inquiring for the man by whose skill I have been enabled to behold them? Show me the doctor."—Rev. T. R. Stevenson, in The Christian World Pulpit.

The Bishop of London says: "No man is a failure until he gives up."

THE GLORY OF GOD IN THE HEAVENS Millions of Worlds to be Added to Known List by New Telescope

The largest telescope in the world, planned to provide four times the power of the great Hooker telescope on Mt. Wilson, is to be erected on a California mountain top not yet designated.

The California Institute of Technology has announced that funds have been made available for its construction and that work on the 200-inch reflector with which it will be equipped will begin within a few months.

The telescope and a laboratory are a gift to the institute from the International Education Board, with headquarters at New York, the amount of money involved was not disclosed, but it would of necessity be larger than that required to build the Hooker telescope, which cost $600,000.

It is expected that the new instrument will penetrate millions of light years into space, bringing under observation hundreds of millions of now unseen stars and nebulae and opening a vast unexplored field of astronomical knowledge, besides bringing much nearer objects now visible with telescopes. Approximately 1,500,000,000 stellar objects are within the range of the Hooker telescope.

The 200-inch reflector will double the size and quadruple the power of the Hooker telescope. Another important feature contemplated for the immense instrument is a 40-foot Michelson stellar interferometer which measures the diameter of stars.

By means of this auxiliary it is hoped to measure the binary stars, which are two suns revolving about each other. If this information is obtainable, astronomers said, men may be in a fair way to discover how such worlds are formed.

The announcement declares the new telescope "should solve many problems of physics or chemistry that depend upon the enormous masses or temperatures, or upon the immense density or extreme tenuity exhibited by celestial bodies in which experiments exceeding the capacity of any terrestrial laboratory are constantly in progress."

The reflector will be of fused quartz, a substance that expands and contracts less than glass in changes of temperature, and which therefore preserves a more perfect surface. In polishing, a 200-inch glass could be ground but 10 minutes a day because of heating, while the fused quartz can be ground continuously.

The General Electric Company has undertaken to build the great reflector under the direction of Dr. Elihu Thompson, one of the company's founders, and A. L. Ellis, research engineer. Among those cooperating are Dr. Robert A. Millikan, Prof. A. A. Michelson and Ambrose Swasey, who have promised assistance in engineering and instrumental design and construction.—Associated Press Report from Pasadena California.

CHINA FAMINE RELIEF

Following receipt of a plea, through the Chinese Minister at Washington, from the Hon. C. T. Wang, Minister for Foreign Affairs of China, in which the latter joins the Hon. M. T. Liang, former Minister of the Interior, in urging the American National Committee, China Famine Relief, with headquarters at 205 East 42nd Street, New York City, "to redouble its efforts to raise funds, in view of the most urgent needs in North China," Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, chairman of the American Committee, has issued a non-sectarian appeal on behalf of the famine sufferers in that region.

This call from China follows a recent friendly commendation of the American Committee's efforts in this direction from the American Red Cross and from Secretary of State Kellogg, as well as an endorsement approved by resolution of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America on the closing day of its Rochester Convention.

Dr. Cadman recalls that the people of the United States and of the rest of the world have been asked to contribute $12,000,000 of the $20,000,000 said by famine experts to be required as a minimum for relief, and in his appeal says:

"There is no season of the year in which the appeal of suffering fellow-men should more readily stir our response than at Christmas time.

"These millions of men, women and children—as far as their homeland lies from our own—are still neighbors. Their very misery and want cannot but stir our deepest sympathy.

"Never have Americans shown themselves heedless to the distress of others. History shows that they have never known, nor will they know any discrimination between race, color or creed in the hour of calamity.

"In North China today there is dire famine. Its victims are themselves in no way responsible for the afflictions which have befallen them. Nature has been cruel. Drought and flood have swept their fields. Insect plagues have devoured the ripening grain. Bandits and undisciplined soldiery, while civil strife still persisted, preyed upon an already scant supply of food, and thousands of others saw the meagre crops that were to maintain life throughout the Winter seized by the rapacious tax-gatherer.

"With the establishment of order by the National Government, the ravages of man have been abated, but Winter has come and for many millions there is no food.

"Investigators in the stricken areas have found the people striving to exist upon a diet of bark, leaves and chaff, often mixed with clay or powdered stone. They have visited villages whence the able-bodied have fled, leaving behind the aged, the infirm, and helpless children to face starvation together. The Vice President of China, General Feng Yuhsiang, has cabled that he personally saw little children tied by the roadside, that they might not attempt to follow parents who, fleeing from the famine, were unable to feed them and unwilling to watch them suffer a lingering death.

"The American Committee, China Famine Relief, is undertaking to supply at least a portion of this great need, in order that lives may be saved. To accomplish this alone America's response must be generous and immediate. The inauguration of its more comprehensive program designed to combat famine causes while at the same time administering the relief will go forward, but in the meantime the great consideration is the immediate saving of human life.

"In the past the United States has shown herself to be China's truest friend. In this crisis she will not abandon that role. And in China's deep-felt gratitude for our response in her present need we may recognize the foundation of a lasting good-will between the sister nations on both sides of the Pacific . . . Your checks and remittances should be made payable to, James A. Thomas, Treasurer, National Headquarters China Famine Relief, 205-217 East 42nd Street, New York City."

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE PARTING GUEST

By Rev. J. W. G. Ward

What a splendid figure he looked! He was old, and yet erect. His hair gleamed like a halo of spun silver, and his ruddy face, with its twinkling eyes and merry smile, did one good to look at. He had quitted the mansion for good, but pausing for a moment on the terrace, he was surrounded by a number of girls and boys who had come trooping through the snow to bid him good-bye, for the old man had been a guest at their father's house for quite a long time.

They had enjoyed the visit almost as much as the guest. Some days they had all sat with him under the trees of the orchard, while the ancient told them tales of far-off days, made famous by the stirring deeds of his ancestors. At other times, he had described places he had seen and people he had met on his travels, for he seemed to have been everywhere and met everyone worth meeting. That was not all they had done, for they had had a glorious time playing in the garden if it were fine, or in their nursery when it was wet, and no one had entered into the fun more than the old man. Indeed, they had felt he was quite as young as they. None was so happy as when things went well, and none so sad if any of them got out of humor or vexed.

Now it seemed that those days were gone forever. Their friend had said he must leave them and take a long journey from which he would not be able to get back. So he stood there that day, holding his thick staff, and bearing on his back a huge bag, which, although not quite full, bulged out healthily.

"Well good-bye, children!" he said with a smile. "I am sorry to go, but mighty glad I came. Thank you ever so much for the splendid time you have given me, and for all the kind things you have done to make me so happy. Now I am going to let you into a secret!"

One tiny girl cried, "O-oh!" and clapped her hands with delight—for girls like a secret; so do boys, though like some of those on the terrace, they may thrust their hands deep into their pockets and look as though they were not interested.

"You have often asked me what was in my bag," went on the old man. "Some of you have even begged for a peep. But you must have noticed that, just like yourselves, it has been growing steadily bigger every day. Shall I tell you why?—I mean about the bag, not you! Every time you smiled and tried to make me feel at home with you, every time you rendered some small service to me or to some one else, the treasure in my bag increased. As you know, to do right, to be kind and unselfish, is to gather eternal riches, as our Lord Christ told us. I am taking this collection of precious things to heaven, for they are for the Master himself. But I wish the bag had been quite full."

The children looked thoughtful. "Wait a minute, please," begged one boy. "I'll get you some more things to take. We didn't know that you were taking them there."

The old man shook his head. "Sorry, but that is impossible. You see the bag is sealed up. I will tell you what you may do. Look out for my son, and when he comes start early and keep right on so that his sack may be filled with the things Jesus loves."

"Your son?" cried the children. "Is he coming too? How shall we know him?"

"I have arranged for all that," he said. "He will have a number on his breast—one more than this one I wear, and he will answer to the name of 'Happy New Year.'"

The ancient waved his hand in farewell, and with the precious load on his back, vanished from sight. You are the girls and boys who played with him months ago, and whose treasure he has been collecting all through the year that is now coming to an end. Aren't you sorry that the bag is not filled to overflowing? Well, you have still a day or two to add a little more to the load, although it cannot be very much more now that he is going away so soon. But at any rate, we can all start with the old man's son, and not only give him a rousing welcome, but the happiest of times while he is with us, and what is more, a daily increasing load of kind words, thoughtful actions, and unselfish service. He will bear them to Christ who bore the Cross that we might possess heaven's choicest blessings and might also share them with all about us. Shall we try? Then cheery will be the face of the year and glad the Savior's heart.—Treasure Trove for Little People.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

GRIBBLE-MUMMIA—On the evening of December 6th, Miss Ruth Irene Mummia became the wife of Mr. C. Stanley Gribble, both of Dayton. Miss Mummia is a member of the Dayton Brethren congregation. The wedding was a beautiful event in the spacious and cordial home of her parents, Brother and Sister Albert Mummia. The double ring ceremony was used. A godly circle of relatives and dear friends were present. The decorations and the entire arrangement were in strict keeping with good taste. It was a delightful event. Both are highly respected young people and they go forth as man and wife with many good wishes. The writer officiated.

IN THE SHADOW

JOHNSON—Brother N. B. Johnson passed out of this life at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Grace F. Fox in Warren County on the evening of December 8th, at the ripe age of 50 years, 8 months, and 8 days. Brother Johnson became a member of the Miamisburg Brethren church in the early history of that congregation. Back in the days of that little movement when loyalty and faithfulness meant much to the church, Brother Johnson was truly loyal and faithful. And notwithstanding change of residence took him away from the Miamisburg church, yet his interest in the church and in the cause of our Lord did not wane. During the writer's time in the cause of our Lord he attended regularly here until he was overtaken by bodily affliction. During his illness he received every kindness in the home of his daughter and son-in-law and family. Brother Johnson met life with a cheerful heart. He radiated sunshine. He did not allow the rebuffs of life to sour his nature. He was a fine neighbor, warm hearted, charitable, free handed, obliging, peace loving. I knew him from my childhood. I was asked to say the last words at his funeral service. It was not easy. Many memories coursed through my mind. He is survived by two daughters, eleven grandchildren and a brother and sister. Our sincerest sympathy goes out to the bereaved.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

HUNKER—Christian Hunker was born at Leldridge, Wurttemberg, Germany, March 27, 1842 and departed this life at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. H. Dessert, a few miles south of Fort Scott, Kansas, at the age of 86 years, 8 months and 21 days. At the age of 21 he came to America and settled in Pennsylvania, later moving to Missouri, and yet later to Kansas, where he endured the many hardships of pioneer life.

In 1872 he was married to Mrs. Dora Ecker, and to this union were born three children—Mrs. Flora B. Dessert of Fort Scott, Kansas, and Mrs. Emma Browning of Pittsburgh, Kansas, one child having died in infancy. Other survivors are two grandchildren—Bessie, at Valley View, Browning, one step son—O. C. Ecker, of Colorado Springs, and a step daughter—Mrs. Frank Buchanan of Snyder, Oklahoma, and five step children. Mr. Hunker had been a Christian for 53 years. He lived a constant Christian life and was of a very cheerful disposition, always anxious to make others happy and was ready to meet his God. His church membership was with the Methodist Episcopal church of Walnut, Kansas, which congregation he was a charter member. He has attended the Godfrey Sunday school for the last two years, and was delighted with the Sunday school and church service. Notwithstanding his age, he was a very dear friend of the children as well as the grown-up people of his community, and all seemed delighted to call him "grandpa." Funeral service was conducted from the home, December 30, 1928, by the writer. Burial was made in the Walnut cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

REED—Mrs. Charlotte Bland Reed was born in Ohio, June 29, 1849, and departed this life at the Mercy Hospital, in Fort Scott, Kansas, December 21, 1928, at the age of 79 years, 5 months and 21 days. She was married to Foster Reed on April 20, 1872, at Chillicothe, Illinois.

One son, Elmer, died in 1916. She leaves besides her husband, a sister—Mrs. O. A. Roberts, of Chillicothe, Illinois. Mrs. Reed had lived in Fort Scott, Kansas, for 45 years, and leaves a large circle of friends who are saddened by her death. Mrs. Reed had been an invalid for 8 years, and had been a faithful member of the Christian church for 30 years. She was a woman of great faith and courage in affliction, and her crowning day. Beautiful flowers were evidence of the esteem in which she was held. Funeral service was held in the Konantz parlors, by the writer.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

II. The Brethren Challenge

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

The Brethren Church has an unchallengable position and an irrevocable commission: The Bible our creed; our creed its own interpreter; and "Go Ye" (Matt.28:19). The unbroken devotion and adherence of the Brethren ministry in all its history to these principles, together with a denial, sacrifice and other-worldly zeal of a separated and consecrated laity, give us both a commission and a command for the time to which we have come and the day which we try to serve.

In the measure that we carry forward this message, first to our own land and then to all the world in the spirit of aggressive heroism, boldness and charity, never faltering in either grace, will we be true to our forebears and do the will of God.

It might be said that we are just coming of age. We have not yet fully cleared the deck for action, but steadily, we are making ready. With the standardization of our college in the near future, we must renew our attack on the home field and chronically, constantly and continuously take advantage of every opportunity to plant new churches, revive old, weak ones, and strengthen strong ones and cause them to swarm.

Beside this, we shall need incessantly to court those most like us and try to be one with them (John 17:21-23) as our next great move, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man" (Eph. 4:13). I call upon the Brethren of the ministry and laity everywhere, to measure these things well and resolve to reach out to the limit of our privilege in all these lines.

Signs of the Times

Purpose of this Column

The Infallible Critic

Intelligent but Blind

What of the Night?

by

Alva J. McClain

THE main purpose of this column will be to examine human life, conduct and utterance in the light of the Word of God. No situation has ever arisen in human affairs, or ever will arise, that the Word of God does not have something to say about it. Neither the world nor the church will ever face any problem for which the Bible has no solution. It is the broadest book in existence because it covers the whole of human activity. Nothing, strictly speaking, lies outside its tremendous scope.

NO man is wise enough to criticize human life. But this is the true function of the Word of God. Hebrews 4:12 declares that "The Word of God is a discerner of the thoughts and intents." The Greek word is "kritikos", from which is derived the English word "critic." Holy Scripture, then is a critic, the infallible critic of all human opinions and actions. In its blazing light all things are naked and laid bare. According to its searching word final judgment will be passed upon all that has transpired in human existence. From its righteous verdict there can be no appeal. "God hath spoken."

THERE are two things we must know in order to place a proper appraisal upon human life. First, we must know what men are doing; and second, we must know what God says about it. We have newspapers, magazines, books without end, and now the radio—all devoted to the business of telling us what the world is doing and thinking. We have the Bible to tell us what God has said. In this column it will be our purpose to apply the Word of God to the present situation, to give the church "meat in due season," to discern the "signs of the times."

THE ancient Pharisees were highly intelligent men. Yet they suffered from a peculiar kind of blindness. Christ said to them, "Ye cannot discern the signs of the times." They had been demanding of him a sign from heaven, when as a matter of fact they were entirely surrounded with signs, and to these they were totally blind. Doubtless, these religious Jews were informed as to the events of their day. They knew what was going on. But they could not read the meaning of those events. And this blindness led them headlong into the tragedy of the ages.

WE are on the verge of something in our day. What is it? The world is moving faster than ever before. Where is it going? Events are taking place with amazing rapidity. Startling discoveries are being made daily. What do they signify? The Church needs the gift of interpretation, and this will come only as we look at human affairs in the "mirror of the Word."

ATTEMPTING to conduct a column of this kind every week is no small task for one already burdened with many duties and a "thorn in the flesh." But his Grace is sufficient, and we are confident that our friends will include this extra bit of ministry in their petitions before the mercy-seat.

DISCUSSIONS here are to be brief and suggestive, rather than exhaustive. Much will be left unsaid that the reader may feel should have been said. Sometimes it is best to state clearly the problem, and then stop, leaving the reader to reach his own conclusion. It is not expected that everyone will agree with all the views expressed here from time to time. But we shall expect sympathetic audience when the Word of God is involved. With this bow to the readers of The Evangelist, we shall be ready to begin in earnest next week.

THE text for 1929 is Isaiah 21:11, 12, "Watchman, what of the night?..... The morning cometh, and also the night." More about this next week.

Questions and Answers

Note—I have undertaken to answer such questions as may be thought suitable and worth publishing in the Evangelist from week to week. Perhaps I shall not always reply to the satisfaction of all readers. On many questions there may be serious and sincere difference of opinion. My sole principle shall be—The Truth. I wish to add that this column is not for controversy; on the other hand it is meant to become a medium of information and helpfulness.—J. Allen Miller.

1. Our church has one Deacon and he has become so irregular and unhelpful to the church that he hinders our progress and causes others to stumble. What should we do?—A Member.

Answer—Really you have no deacon. A deacon, as the name itself indicates, is "one who serves." The deacon's office is preeminently one of active service. I suppose your church has the rule of life-tenure in this office. Under the conditions your question indicates that I would advise your pastor, with two or three good brethren or sisters, to pay this deacon a brotherly visit. Go in the Spirit of Christ and with the view to gaining a "brother, for whom Christ died." Be frank with him. Show him that his life and conduct, especially since he is an officer of the church, is hindering the progress of the church. If he will not hear this appeal, call on your Board of District Evangelists for help. Let the church act tactfully, prayerfully and yet firmly. Hold a high standard of Christian life and conduct before all as the model and then elect another deacon or two, if you have qualified men.

2. What is the meaning of a "living sacrifice in Romans 12:1?"—S.

Answer—Romans 12:1 reads as follows: I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service. This opening verse of chapter 12 marks the transition to the conclusion of the whole argument of the Epistle from chapter 1:16. Through justification the believer is put into a new relation to God. What he is henceforth to do is to live in accordance with that relation. "To present." This is an interesting word as the following verses will disclose. It is used of the presentation of Christ in the temple (Lk. 2:22), of Paul presenting his converts (Col. 1:22, 28), of Christ presenting his church (Eph. 5:27), and here as of the Christian presenting himself. There is evidently present an idea of an "offering" which is an essential part of sacrifice. The offering is the body, and, according to verse 2, the Mind as well. In the Christian's new relation to God he is alive and active. This life is by virtue of the union with Christ. It is in the "living" body that every Christian must "present himself a servant of righteousness unto sanctification" (Rom. 6:13, 16 and especially verse 19).

If you take a bucket of cold water and pour on a little every time a bit of exuberant generosity or extravagant optimism shows itself, you can repress an astonishing amount of it. A woman can, if she chooses, chill the enthusiasm of the lover out of the heart of her husband and have left by her side only a man who will do his duty because it is right—that finer something which might have been hers is gone. Parents can, if they will, destroy the bubbling joy of companionship with them out of the hearts of their children and have something left which will honor and obey—but there is an unspeakable loss. The teacher who thinks that the wet blanket is the most suitable uniform for an educator can substitute the habit of enforced obedience to certain regulations in the place of joyous fellowship in a common quest for a fuller life—but the higher ends of education go down in defeat.—Charles R. Brown.

If the Church Succeeds---

Such a caption needs explanation. For either it implies that the church has not succeeded, or that, considering success as a relative term, it has succeeded only to a degree. The first is not our thought. We are not of those who think the church is all weakness and no strength, that its record is full of defeats and no victories, that it deserves only rebuke and no praise. We believe the church has succeeded; it has accomplished marvels; it has a record brighter than any other institution that this old world knows. And it is not surprising that this is so, for the church is of God and has God's wisdom and power back of it. But withal, it has not succeeded in the measure that it might. Its success has been only partial. Its progress has been only a fraction of what it might have been. It has suffered defeat many times when it might have triumphed, and has stood still when it might have gone forward. These are facts which the church's best friends must recognize, and, recognizing them, must be concerned about them. Why has the church not succeeded as it ought? Or, possibly we should turn about and face the question in a positive and constructive manner, and ask, What will enable the church to succeed more fully and consistently? What will enable it to face its enemies in confidence and strength? and to go forward, not haltingly, but with long strides and with power? That is what its friendly critics are desiring to know, and that is what they really mean when they talk about the church failing and what it must do to succeed. And here are some things they are telling us the church must do if it is to succeed.

The church must give of its wealth, if it is to succeed. That the church has wealth, great wealth, and that it is not giving of that wealth to promote the cause of Christ in anything like adequate measure are facts evident to the most casual observer. The great mass of the wealth of the world is in the hands of men who are members of the church. The richest men in the world are prominent churchmen, and the most well-to-do men in practically every community are church leaders. The exceptions only prove the rule. Beside the rank and file of the church population stand much higher on the average than the average of the un-churched population. Yet what the church is spending to advance the greatest cause that has ever gripped the human heart, is small in comparison with what is being spent for some of the world's luxuries and follies. In 1925, according to figures by Arnaud C. Mart and George E. Lundy, directors of financial campaigns for philanthropic purposes, the total contributions of all Protestant churches was $469,871,678, while in 1926 there was expended for soft drinks alone (retail) $497,500,000; for candy during the same year, $1,000,000,000; for gasoline for pleasure vehicles, $1,541,961,000, while during 1927 there was paid for tobacco (retail) $2,031,000,000. What shall we conclude from these figures? It is, that a vast amount of the wealth that belongs to church members is not consecrated to right and proper uses, much less to the advancement of the cause of Christ. Every avenue of the church's interest is suffering for lack of funds. Foreign missions have been until now retrenching; home missions are at a standstill; many church colleges are going under; and church publishing houses are economizing by every manner of means and publications are being combined and others are being stopped for lack of support. Truly, those who say that the church's outstanding weakness is its niggardly giving have facts to make a strong argument, and well may the church take the criticism to heart. Church members have been robbing God; they have not been faithful in their stewardship; the wealth of the world is in their hands and yet the church is hampered by poverty.

Yet recognizing all this, we are wondering if after all the church is supremely dependent on so material a thing as what we call wealth? Is that what it needs most? Is that the one thing which, if supplied, will enable the church really to succeed? We remember that the first church in Jerusalem was poor, so far as this world's good were concerned. But two of those humble disciples—Galilean fishermen—were one day making their way to the temple and were accosted by a beggar. They by confession were penniless, yet they were able to bring the wealth of healing to that dependent cripple and make him to become an heir of eternal life. Centuries later we find the church grown wealthy and grasping; and at the same time powerless and despised. No one was made better by its vast wealth, but out from Wittenberg came a poor monk with a revelation of God to give to the world and so enriched mankind as to make all succeeding ages his debtor. Sated with wealth and smothered with formalism, the church in the days of John Wesley was void of power, and he came forth calling not for more silver and gold but for a personal experience of divine grace and so invested his own spiritual experience and passion as to yield the richest dividends for the benefit of mankind the world around. What these and other makers of the church's life gave was not material wealth, but something vastly more, and we are convinced that the church will find its greater strength in something far better than money. The purse-proud man says, "Money can do anything," and the church is all too ready to believe it, and to imagine that if it but had wealth at its command to fully finance all its noble undertakings it would have the one thing it most needs. But it is wrong. There is much that money cannot do. Money cannot give health in the place of sickness; it cannot give joy in place of sorrow; it cannot give life in place of death; it cannot give purity in place of the blackness of sin; it cannot give spiritual vigor and power in place of lethargy and lukewarmness.

Some tell us that what the church needs supremely to enable it to succeed is the consecration of life in large numbers. That is certainly a most vital need. The church cannot do its work except through the instrumentality of its members. The church is the body of Christ, subject to his sovereign will, and as such, the agency for the accomplishing of his good purposes. He, by his own will, has made himself dependent on the cooperation of the church in building up the kingdom of God in the world. And the only way the church can function is through the lives of its members. When men and women will not be used, the church is helpless, and many are the congregations who are at a standstill today because there is a dearth of those who will serve. The church is calling for workers, calling repeatedly and pleadingly, but many will not heed the call. Death is taking its toll of leadership, some fall by the wayside, or grow weary in well-doing. In these and other ways the ranks are thinning, and the task of recruiting is constantly pressing upon the churches. The call goes forth to those who have named the name of Christ with as much divine urgency and sanction as did the call to Isaiah of old: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" But there is little response, few who are willing to say, "Here am I, send me." Thank God for the few, but often must the church be bowed in disappointment because the volunteers are so few. How slowly must the church make its advances in the face of this weakness! How many are the tasks left incomplete! How many never ventured! Behold the fields are white unto the harvest, but the laborers are few, so very few. That was the burden that rested upon the heart of the Master when he said, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will thrust forth laborers into his harvest."

But just to have workers is not enough. It is possible that a church might have an abundance of workers, splendidly trained, yet be able to make very little progress. We can imagine a church where there is no small number of folks seeking places of leadership and many eager for activity, and in such a place one may count on seeing many things being done. Yet so far as getting forward in the work of the Kingdom is concerned there may be little real advancement made. There are church workers who are like a bicycle rider demonstrating in a show window. He works hard and makes the wheels speed, but he gets nowhere. Not all activity carried on in the name of religion really gets the church anywhere. Something more than activity and more than workers is needed if the church is to succeed.

Other things might be put forward as being very essential to the success of the church. Organization is big in the thought of our day, and its importance from the standpoint of efficiency cannot be gainsaid. But organization is mere machinery and is far from being the thing of supreme importance. Equipment is being emphasized, and so it should be. Many churches are being held back in their progress because they have not the vision or the generosity to provide themselves with the needed equipment, and so they go on trying to do a twentieth century work with a nineteenth century church equipment. But these, and many other things that might be mentioned, important as they are, do not go to the heart of the matter. They are valuable means and agencies, but they have no power in themselves. There is one thing that is absolutely vital to the success of the church, and we must know what that is. The one thing necessary to give power to a man's wealth, to vitalize personality and make service effective, to make a machine throb with life and a building the house of God is a vital union on the part of the church's membership with the living Christ. Mere church membership counts for nothing, neither is there anything else that counts until a soul is made radiant by the impartation of the glory of the exalted Christ and made to speak and act with power through the endowment of the Holy Spirit. When the church gets into vital contact with the Lord Jesus, shares his burning passion, is surrendered to his will, so that it can be trusted with his power, then will it go forward with a success that will put the past to shame. Then will men not treat the church with indifference, for the red-hot fire of the gospel message will take hold of men's lives and change them.

The Ellet (Ohio) Sunday School band will broadcast on Sunday afternoon from 1:30 to 2:30 from station WADC, at Akron, Ohio.

African cablegram arriving through Dr. Bauman says all missionaries and missionary property are safe under government control, which is confirmed by Dr. Gribble's diary published this week.

Our readers will be pleased to receive the first installments of Brethren McClain's and Miller's contributions. They will appear weekly and we anticipate a wide interest in their writings. Members of the Evangelist family are invited to send suitable questions to Dr. Miller or direct to the Editor.

Brother R. L. Humbert writes an interesting letter this week. He informs us that he has given some Bible instruction at camp meetings and other special gatherings. A number of special speakers were recently visitors in his own church. His people take great interest in our Kentucky missions and he is strongly impressed with the importance of educational work to the success of our missions there.

The Business Manager calls attention in his "Corner" to the fact that Publication Day is the last Sunday in January, when, according to Conference schedule, the churches are expected to take an offering to apply on the purchase price of the building which your Publishing House occupies. It is hoped that every church will take an offering for this worthy purpose, and remember that the bigger it is, the sooner the debt will be paid and the interest payments stopped.

Dr. C. F. Yoder reports the opening up of a new mission at Alma Fuerte, where there seems to be good prospects for a permanent work. He has arranged to conduct a Daily Vacation Bible School there, and it is the hope to conduct such schools at all the stations. At Rio Cuarto six new converts have been baptized. The work at Realco has progressed until it is rivaling Rio Cuarto. While most of our readers will be scanning the pages of this paper, they will be conducting a General Conference in the Argentine—January 10-14.

A Correction—We wish to correct an error made last week in our comment on Dr. Gillin's article concerning his experience in the Alps. We mentioned prematurely his observation concerning his intimate association of several months with his son and that "Now their ways part for a season." We wrote the comment from memory several days after having completed the reading of the remainder of the letters that we have in hand from Dr. Gillin, and inadvertently got events in two letters mixed. We beg the pardon of our readers, and especially of Brother Gillin.

The Tenth Ohio Pastors' Convention will be held at Columbus on January 21 to 24 and the program is conspicuous for the number of nationally known religious leaders scheduled. It is the biggest event of its kind in the country, having been attended last year by about 1200 ministers representing practically all Protestant denominations in Ohio. A goodly number of Brethren and Church of the Brethren pastors were there. It has proven a happy get-together occasion for the pastors of the two Dunker groups. The enrollment fee is two dollars and may be sent to the Ohio Council of Churches, 215 Outlook Building, Columbus, Ohio.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, reports his canvass of the church at Waterloo, Iowa, which, as Brother Bell notes, is bound to Ashland College by so many ties of interest. Brother Edwin Boardman is the able pastor of this church. Dr. Bell rightly paid a tribute to the great service of Dr. Beachler in executing so successfully the first real drive for endowment. This is quite proper in connection with this report, inasmuch as Brother Beachler was pastor of this church before and after that endowment campaign. The gift of this church was $5,670.00, which brings the total previously reported to $200,006.20, putting the dial hand past the 200,000 mark. Wouldn't it be fine if we could push the hand around again?

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh makes his first report of White Gift offerings this week. He says some schools show "splendid increases," while others show "rather large decreases." Of course the "increases" make him happy, but we imagine the decreases have rather the opposite effect. This doubtless would be especially true when the decrease outweigh the increases, and it is likely that even those who decreased their gifts would feel a little blue if they had to face the problem of "making two ends meet," when one end is an enlarged budget and the other a decreased income. But, we'll urge him not to feel too blue yet, for perhaps most of the big gifts haven't reached him. Let us hope the grand total will measure up to the total of the challenging and most worthy program undertaken by the National Sunday School Association.

The editor and his co-workers are pleased at the kind expressions of appreciation of the "Golden Jubilee and Doctrinal Number," coming from various parts of the brotherhood. We wish in turn to thank in this public way those splendid men who by their writings helped to make the doctrinal feature so highly prized. We sincerely hope all these articles will ultimately find their way separately in tract form, and also in booklet form published together. If thus published, it would make the most representative, brief, yet comprehensive treatment of our distinctive doctrines in print. We shall be glad to hear from those who think these articles should be so published. The extra copies of the Evangelist printed were exhausted before the orders were all filled. We wish to thank our many friends for their very generous expressions, and hope all who appreciate the Evangelist will cooperate with us in building up a larger circulation. Make as one of your congregational goals for attainment on Publication Day a greatly increased subscription list, unless your church is now on the Honor Roll. Free samples will be sent to those who will try for such a goal.

A Life of Prayer

By Rev. Norman H. Camp

In a recent book entitled "His in a Life of Prayer," Dr. Norman B. Harrison, its author, the pastor of the Brooks Memorial Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, in pleading for such a life, says: "One of the ceaseless activities of the body is its breathing. It is essential to self-preservation. We do it involuntarily. Such is the function of prayer; hence its primal importance. It is the Church's part, practically, in the sustaining of her life. We sing:

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air."

"But it is a law of the body that the more actively and vigorously it exercises the more deeply and freely it must breathe. Under exertion the body demands a quickened breathing, an ampler supply of air to meet its necessities.

"The application to the Church is obvious. She has come upon a day of almost hectic exertion. Her activities are many and varied. She is endeavoring to do things as never before. Hence, acknowledging that she is an organism, this speeding up of activity, by every known law, automatically, so to speak, calls for increased breathing. To sustain her own life she must have more prayer. Physiologically and scientifically judged, to refuse herself an increase of breathing, proportionate to her heightened exertion, must prove fatal."

In the introduction to "Problems in the Prayer Life" by Dr. J. O. Buswell, President of Wheaton College, the author defines prayer as "Conversation with God." He continues: "Our conversation with God is reciprocal. God speaks to us while we pray, though we do not always recognize his voice. We ought always to pray with the words of the child Samuel in mind, 'Speak; for thy servant heareth.' When we pray, we talk with One who hears, who understands, who cares, and who answers!

"This conversation with God need not always be in words, but it should never be broken off. It ought to be essentially continuous in its nature. . . . The continuous nature of prayer may well be illustrated by the conversation of intimate friends. Words are not constantly exchanged, but fellowship is not interrupted. We must not only have regular and frequent times for prayer, but, whenever there is a break in the occupation of our minds, we ought to revert to conscious communion with God just as involuntarily as we should continue in conversation with a friend near at hand."

In his book on "Prevailing Prayer," D. L. Moody says in the opening chapter: "Those who have left the deepest impression on this sin-cursed earth have been men and women of prayer. You will find that PRAYER has been the mighty power that has moved not only God, but man. Abraham was a man of prayer, and angels came down from heaven to converse with him. Jacob's prayer was answered in the wonderful interview at Peniel, that resulted in his having such a mighty blessing, and in softening the heart of his brother Esau; the child Samuel was given in answer to Hannah's prayer; Elijah's prayer closed up the heavens for three years and six months, and he prayed again and the heavens gave rain. . . . Let us remember that the God of Elijah still lives. The prophet was translated and went up to heaven, but his God still lives, and we have the same access to him that Elijah had."

Dr. R. A. Torrey in his book on "How to Pray," which has had a large circulation, writes thus on "The Importance of Prayer:" "The history of the church has always been a history of grave difficulties to overcome. The devil hates the church and seeks in every way to block its progress; now by false doctrine, again by division, again by inward corruption of life. But by prayer, a clear way can be made through everything. Prayer will root out heresy, allay misunderstanding, sweep away jealousies and animosities, obliterate immoralities, and bring in the full tide of God's reviving grace. History abundantly proves this. In the hour of darkest portent, when the case of the church, local or universal, has seemed beyond hope, believing men and women have met together and cried to God and the answer has come."

"It was so in the days of Knox, it was so in the days of Wesley and Whitfield, it was so in the days of Edwards and Brainerd, it was so in the days of Finney, it was so in the days of the great revival of 1857 in this country and of 1859 in Ireland, and it will be so again in your day and mine. Satan has marshalled his forces. Christian Science with its false Christ—a woman—lifts high its head. Others making great pretensions of apostolic methods, but covering the rankest dishonesty and hypocrisy with these pretensions, speak with loud assurance. Christians equally loyal to the great fundamental truths of the Gospel are glowering at one another with a devil-sent suspicion. The world, the flesh and the devil are holding high carnival. It is now a dark day, but—now 'it is time for thee, Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law.' (Psa. 119:126). And he is getting ready to work, and now he is listening for the voice of prayer. Will he hear it? Will he hear it from you? Will he hear it from the church as a body? I believe he will."

In the introduction to a compilation of remarkable answers to prayer, entitled: "I Cried, He Answered," Dr. Charles G. Trumbull, the editor of the Sunday School Times, writes as follows: "We never have to choose between service and prayer. We never have to choose between working and praying. For prayer is service; prayer is work of the most efficient kind that any human can render. The commonly used expression, 'prayer and service,' often on the lips of sincere Christians, is a mistaken one. It implies that prayer is one thing and service another, whereas those serve who pray, and they serve while they are praying."

"For prayer, as has well been said, 'releases the energies of God.' Prayer is asking God to do what we cannot do.

"Every true prayer originates with God.

"Every true prayer is brought from the heart of God by the Holy Spirit to the heart of man.

"Every true prayer, thus originated by God and conveyed to the heart of man, when offered in the only true way in the name of Jesus, is carried back to God by the Holy Spirit.

"And every true prayer finds its efficiency in the resulting work which God himself accomplishes in answer.

"We all have the marvelous privilege of permitting or preventing this working of the omnipotence of God."

In George Muller's narratives of "Answers to Prayer," one of the series of books belonging to the Moody Colportage Library, he assures us that: "The joy which answers to prayer give, cannot be described; and the impetus which they afford to the spiritual life is exceedingly great. The experience of this happiness I desire for all my Christian readers. If you believe indeed in the Lord Jesus for the salvation of your soul, if you walk uprightly and do not regard iniquity in your heart, if you continue to wait patiently and believingly upon God; then answers will surely be given to your prayers. You may not be called upon to serve the Lord in the way the writer does, and therefore may never have answers to prayer respecting such things as are recorded here; but, in your various circumstances, your family, your business, your profession, your church position, your labor for the Lord, etc., you may have answers as distinct as any here recorded."

The author of "Praying Hyde," the Rev. Francis A. McGaw of Akron, Ohio, tells of the amazing prayer-life of a missionary in India whose intercession "changed things" for the Sialkot Revival. He refers to the Punjab Prayer-Union which was started in 1904, about the time of the first Sialkot Convention. The principles of this Union are stated in the form of questions which were signed by those becoming members, as follows:

1. "Are you praying for quickening in your own life, in the life of your fellow-workers, and in the Church?"
2. "Are you longing for greater power of the Holy Spirit in your own life and work, and are you convinced that you cannot go on without this power?"
3. "Will you pray that you may not be ashamed of Jesus?"
4. "Do you believe that prayer is the great means for securing this spiritual awakening?"

5. "Will you set apart one-half hour each day as soon after noon as possible to pray for this awakening, and are you willing to pray till the awakening comes?"

Rev. Gordon Watt of England, in his book on "The Strategic Value of Prayer," has this to say in the last chapter: "There are two forms of weakness in the prayer-life of many. The first is to think that prayer consists only in words. Prayer is more than asking something. It is work, the greatest that can ever be done, and one in which each Christian can have a share.

"The path to the throne of God lies open for all who will tread it. And who can measure the issues for the kingdom of God that flow from prayer? Our ideas of prayer are colored by our limitations. The Word of God views prayer in its unbounded possibilities. A man of eloquence may touch multitudes; the man of prayer touches God. Eloquence may pass away without permanent result: prayer in the spirit, prayer that lays a hand upon the throne and knows how to concentrate upon a recognized need, sets in motion spiritual forces which will influence others near and far.

"The second form of weakness is to think that prayer consists in many words, without any real point or purpose in them. Indefiniteness of petition produces leakage of power. Generalities, whether in prayer or preaching, are ineffective. And it is therefore necessary to emphasize this fact, that prayer is a work, as much a work as preaching, teaching, singing, visiting, or attending some religious service. . . . The thoroughness with which we can do that work is the measure of the thoroughness with which God will be able to do his work through us."

Chicago, Illinois.

When men are led of God, they never live selfishly, nor speak foolishly.

There are some things we ought to forget. A bitter word spoken to us in anger we ought to forget. The habits of life that hinder progress we ought to forget. The evil thing that had a fascination for us we ought to forget. Learning to forget ought to be taught in every theological seminary in the land.—The Methodist Protestant.

The Land of the Southern Cross

By Robert D. Crees

I. Traveling to the Argentine

As a rule most young people like to travel. All of us have the desire to see new places, new things, and new customs. This desire is in a great measure fulfilled for the one who has had the privilege of taking an ocean trip to the Argentine, the "Land of the Southern Cross." Traveling in a boat is very much different from traveling in an automobile. In the first place one cannot get out and walk home. In the second place your fellow travelers are not chosen by you, so you have to make the best of it. In the third place, your "floating hotel" is different from living at home.

The first thing one does after getting on the boat is to get lost. The porter takes you to your cabin. If you can later retrace your steps you have an unusual memory. Finally reaching deck again, you hear the ship's orchestra playing and see the visitors on board saying farewell to their friends. A whistle warns the visitors off and the tug begins to maneuver around the boat. The whistle blows again, the crowd on the dock cheers, the band plays the Star Spangled Banner, and the journey is begun.

Hardly anyone goes below, for all want to get a good, abiding impression of what land looks like before he leaves it. It will be ten days before we see land again and eighteen days before the journey is completed. In New York Harbor we pass two prison islands which reminds us we are prisoners for eighteen days on a floating island. Every other person takes a picture of the Statue of Liberty. Then the bell sounds for dinner and all but the very timorous eat a hearty meal, hoping it will not have to be passed on to the fish. If you travel first or second class you have a choice of three or four kinds of meat and the same number of vegetables. It is much like restaurant service and all the waiters are very accommodating. If you are a third class passenger, you have two choices. Your meal is placed in front of you and you either take it or leave it.

After dinner you try to get acquainted with your fellow passengers. I say "try," because you cannot get acquainted with all of them unless you know about seven languages. If your room-mate speaks a language you do not know, the only thing for you to do is to talk with your hands. Most of the people going to the Argentine speak either English, or Spanish, or both. In the first class some try to live above their station in life for the first two days, after which they become human and sociable. The other passengers get acquainted sooner.

When you get out of sight of land you begin to think of what is ahead of you—6000 miles of water between you and your destination which is Buenos Aires, the New York of the Argentine. The boat is a floating palace and gives one a sense of security. The "Pan-America" is one of the largest boats that travels the east coast of South America. It displaces 21,000 tons of water, is 535 feet long and 72 feet wide. But mighty as this vessel is, it is nothing in comparison with the vast expanse of water through which it plows its way. Just a few days ago a vessel almost as large as the "Pan America" sunk in three hours and over a hundred were lost. This vessel, the "Vestris," was also bound for Argentina. Man can build and guide a ship, but God alone can bring it safely to port. Our boat was favored with fair weather and a calm sea. I only remember seeing one person sick during the entire trip. It was spring weather north of the Equator, at the Equator, and south of the Equator. The seasons are reversed in the Argentine and our winter is their summer. It is now the middle of November, the roses are in bloom, and the vacation Bible schools will soon be under way.

The big problem for passengers on an ocean trip is, What to do with your time—how to amuse yourself. You can play deck-golf, deck tennis, shuffle-board, chess, checkers, and almost all the indoor games one plays while on shore. Even at that one gets tired of such games and once in a while you would find fathers and mothers and “grand-pops” playing “Farmer in the Dell” and “Hide and Seek” for diversion. At sunset all games are forgotten in spellbound admiration of the beauties of nature. The sunset on the ocean makes a combination that one never will forget. The color of the water changes for days, and sometimes it will be green, then black, then brown, then a deep blue. When the boat is near land a host of white sea gulls will follow it for days at a time.

The monotony of the trip is broken when one reaches the equator. At this time there is an initiation service for all the passengers who are crossing the equator for the first time. King Neptune boards the boat, dressed in regal garb and with a flowing beard composed of seaweed. He holds a court and the court clerk reads accusations of one kind or another against those to be initiated. One at a time they are treated by the court barber, a ferocious looking individual, who manages to get most of the soap in their mouth and shaves their face with a rough board. Then they are turned over to the tender mercies of the court doctor who lays the unwilling patient on a board and treats him as rough as possible, finishing up with several resounding wallops that could be heard about a mile away. The shampoo comes next and the poor patient has to meekly submit while his hair, face, neck and hands are completely covered with sour milk and some eggs that have been kept in the sun for three months for the occasion. The climax comes when the patient has to crawl through a narrow pipe in the face of a stream of water from a hose. After coming through all this, the court decides he needs reviving so he is promptly thrown into the swimming tank. After that the patient is allowed to sit on a bench and watch someone else receive justice from the terrible King Neptune. There was an interesting anti-climax to this service I witnessed. Several of the persecuted ones took the hose away from one of the court officials and trained it on the honorable King Neptune. That started a free for all battle which ended in the king and his entire court being thrown into the swimming tank. Everyone had a good time and the only ones that were hurt were the people that laughed too hard.

Nothing much of interest happens after crossing the Equator till the first stop is reached, Rio de Janeiro, the New York of Brazil. The passengers have a chance to visit the town for about seven hours. The harbor is beautiful, with a white sandy beach, and just back of the city are beautiful mountains. Auto trips are taken to various parts of the city. One is impressed with three things in this city. First it seems that every other store is a saloon, and after taking a look at some of them I was glad that we have prohibition in the United States. Then too, one notices the number of lotteries. Every bank has a special window where one can buy lottery tickets that are backed up by the government. Many of the poor people spend all their savings in this manner, hoping that some day they will be lucky and get rich over night. It also seems that the country is expecting a revolution any minute for every fifth man you see is in the uniform of a soldier or policeman. All they carry is a revolver, a dagger, a sword, and some of them a rifle in addition. They are so heavily armed that it is a wonder that they can get around. The language of Brazil is Portuguese and we poor Americans had some time trying to make ourselves understood. I went into a drug store to get some cough drops, but did not know the name for them. Finally in desperation I started coughing violently and the man promptly brought out some cough-drops. A cough is good in any language.

The next stop is Santos, Brazil. It is much the same as Rio de Janeiro, but the streets are very narrow. Here the ship loads bananas, bananas, and then some more bananas, and from then on you dream of nothing but bananas. A short stop is made at Montevideo, Uruguay, but since it is in the middle of the night, hardly anyone goes off the boat. The following afternoon we land at Buenos Aires and our sea voyage is at an end—at least, we think it is, but we have forgotten the customs officials. They come on board, ask a few questions, and if you have enough money with you and have never been in jail, you are allowed to land. We are almost sorry that the trip has ended but we know that before us are many new things in this “Land of the Southern Cross.”

Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

Understanding One Another

By Quinter M. Lyon

I am convinced that we do not understand one another well enough. If we did we should all get along together without any quarrels.

We are afraid to let our light shine. Or we are afraid to let our friends (or enemies) know our real motives. We hide ourselves behind a maze of theories and abstractions. Anything to keep others from knowing us as we really are.

But Christ calls us to just the opposite of this sort of thing. He wants us to be frankly what we are, and to try humbly and unashamedly to be better. This is Christian.

The man of the world does not want any one to know that he is less than his ideal. That is why it is such a struggle for him to come to the feet of Jesus, acknowledging his shortcomings and vowing to live better.

But the Christian knows that no one is as good as his ideal. He knows that the most saintly must struggle against sin just as truly as the youngest convert to Christianity.

The first step toward backsliding in the Christian faith is when we begin to hide our motives, and to scheme and plan secretly. When our motives are not worthy of our fellow men knowing them, surely they are not worthy that God should know them.

The wise parent knows that when his child begins to hide his plans and motives, he has lost his child. His heart is grieved beyond words. And when we try to hide our motives and plans from our fellow men, it is the same in God's sight as trying to hide them from him.

The fact is that we cannot hide our real motives. We may fool some for a while, but there are others who cannot be fooled at all. And even those who can be fooled will eventually find out. The law of the judgment day is a present law as well as a future event. All things tend to become known. Therefore it behooves us, for merely practical reasons, to be frankly what we are.

A frank world will go a long way toward a peaceful world. A frank atmosphere is a wholesome atmosphere. And if frankness in the world is an impossible ideal for the present, certainly it should not be impossible in the church.

If you get what I mean, sometimes there is more faith in honest doubt than in much reciting of creeds. Not that I would encourage doubting, for the atmosphere of doubt is as unwholesome as that of insincerity. Both are to be abhorred, and an honest faith sought. If this is not the position of the Brethren church, then I was wrongly taught.

When through struggle and sincerity we come to an honest and effectual faith in God and in Christ, then we are strong. When, through insincerity, we adopt the faith of another, even though it is a great faith, we are weak.

In a wholesome atmosphere, then, of both a positive faith and an unashamed sincerity, there is joy and peace. Ashland, Ohio.

Living Words

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6:63.

This is a passage which I think is extraordinarily arresting. Here is our Lord speaking about his words, and he claims that his words are spirit and life. They are mystic incarnations of himself. They carry the divine essence. They are the expressions of vital secrets. They come to the doors of our minds as living presences, instinct with the very life of God. His words are alive.

Let us contrast the Master's claim about his words with anything we can say about our own words. Sometimes our words have no content at all. They are empty. They are like envelopes which have lost their living secret in the post, and they come to us carrying nothing. Sometimes our words are delusive. They seem to carry one thing when they are really carrying another. They are like Sacramental cups which carry anything but wine. And sometimes the contents of our words are deadening. There is nothing really vital or vitalizing in them. They are ministers of heaviness and depression. They have no quickening power. They carry no life, no light, no flame. And over and against all our perverse and impoverishing speech we have the claim of our Lord that his words are spirit and life. When we receive his words it is like taking angel-presences into our tent. We are entertaining spirit, and we are offering hospitality to life.

And the words of the disciples can be like the words of the Master. It is to his holy will that, when we speak about him, when we proclaim his mind and will, our words should be spirit and life. He is waiting to hallow our words with his own indwelling, and our speech may be the tabernacle of the living God. When God uses our words, and fills them with his Spirit, our speech becomes sacramental, and even the indifferent will be conscious of a mystic but most real Presence which the cynic and the worldling cannot explain away. If Christ abide in us our words will be like overflowing cups, and our treasure will be rich in divine authority and grace.

A great critic has recently said of Mr. John Masefield that his phrases carry no cargoes of wonder. I do not know what may be the value of this criticism; but I do know that no one ought to be able to say it with truth about any ambassador of the Lord. Imagine a man speaking about the unsearchable riches of Christ, and using words which carry no cargoes of wonder! Every time we speak of the Lord our words should be laden with cargoes of wonder, and so they will be if we are in central and vital fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ. Then shall it be said of us that our words are spirit and they are life.—by the late Dr. J. H. Jowett.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

WHEN SHALL WE HAVE RALLY DAY?

Almost universally churches observe rally day on the last Sunday in September. This is done no doubt in order to begin the new year of work with the first Sunday in October. We have become accustomed to thinking of the first Sunday in October as the beginning of the church school year. Lesson courses are so arranged, and record systems are dated in accordance with this plan.

In his own church school the writer this year moved up the date of rally and promotion day to September 23, thus leaving the last Sunday in September for getting started—enrolling pupils, passing out lesson material, and such other details as are incident to the beginning of the year. Even with this plan, however, we were conscious of the fact that there were at least two Sundays in September when we were just waiting for rally day to come. The pupils really "rallied" to their homes and to their public schools the first week in September. Every child took up his advanced grade of work in public school the day after Labor Day. Why should we delay beginning our new program of work in the church school for a whole month? Would we not do better to make the Sunday following Labor Day our rally day and thus save at least three Sundays for work in the new year?

It is true of course that such a plan would involve some difficulties with respect to lesson materials which are intended to run for a quarter. Many schools however are no longer slavishly following the quarter system and, with Christmas coming in this first quarter of the year, it seems that it should be easy to supplement the material for that quarter so as to carry the classes up to January first. Is not this a place where we need to re-examine our traditional ways of working and perhaps find a way which is better in the light of conditions at the present time?—International Journal of Religious Education.

THE AMERICAN SCHOOL POPULATION

According to Information Service, in 1927, it is reliably estimated, at least 28,000,000 children and youth were enrolled in American educational institutions 22,500,000 in elementary schools, 4,250,000 to 4,500,000 in secondary schools and 1,000,000 to 1,250,000 in colleges, universities and professional schools. There has been little extension in recent years of elementary education, but in secondary education a revolution has been going on. For more than a generation secondary school population has not only increased in numbers but has shown an increase in rate of growth until in 1927 nearly half of the nation's children of suitable age were enrolled in high schools.—The Lutheran.

FACTS CONCERNING ALCOHOL DRINKING

"The Survey" (Social Service Magazine, New York) in its issue of December 15th, carries the review of a recent book published by Appletons under the title, "Prohibition—Its Economic and Industrial Aspects." The reviewer, Haven Emerson, M.D., states in the third paragraph of his criticism:

"We learn (from this volume) and are convinced that liquor consumption was increasing and not declining before prohibition; that death rates from denatured alcohol are not increasing; that none or all the substitutes for alcoholic drinks have cost the people more than a small fraction of the old saloon bill; that good foods at a new multitude of eating shops, and particularly milk and ice cream, have been used in increased amounts as a result of prohibition; that there are no trustworthy data to prove that drug addiction has increased since prohibition; that drink is but now depriving the working class home of many of the things a family needs; industry is enforcing its own prohibition with more severity and increasing success; liquor is no longer a factor of significance in industrial accidents; traveling salesmen no longer rely upon treating as an aid in selling; the hotel business has improved because of the necessity of good management, and real estate values have not suffered; there has been a large loss among distillers and brewers; automobile accidents due to drunken drivers have increased, but from other reasons than prohibition."

Dr. Emerson is explicit in stating that the book is "independent of the rage of emotional morality, quite clear from the mud of propaganda and politics and independent of traditional religious credos." He is obviously endeavoring to commend the findings of Herman Feldman, the writer, as free from bias in surveying the results of this "noble experiment." Yet the conclusions reached are about the same as one hears from the ardent defendants of the Eighteenth Amendment. Why bother then to throw mud at the folk who not only realize the evils of drunkenness but advocate the removal of its cause, since an "unprejudiced observer" reaches the same conclusions? How can "fanatics" and "slaves of tradition" be in agreement with the "apostles of patient research," when both reach conclusions from similar data?

The truth is that we frequently justify our unwillingness to do right by calling the militant advocate of better things crazy or an impractical idealist or an impudent intruder on other people's privileges. We forget that discernment of justice and consciousness of wrongdoing are acts of reason and judgment and not of emotion and tradition. The emotionalist or the reactionary may have a particular way of dealing with a condition unsatisfactory to him, but he can quite as accurately gauge the effects of evil and discover how to remove it as any one else. And heaven will need to help us, in fact heaven will have to do it all, when movements in the direction of bettering conditions on earth must depend for support on folk "without prejudice in their favor."—The Lutheran.

AND CHINA MOVES FORWARD

China has been a keen disappointment to some prophets. These prophets have with emphasis predicted the utter collapse of the Nationalist movement in China and a considerable lowering of her position among the nations. Their pessimistic outlook has not been realized. In fact, the very opposite has occurred. The nation is moving forward in unity, national consolidation, and in world importance. The continued unity of her leaders has been a surprise to other nations. The future of China depends very largely upon the lasting quality of this unity. Progress also awaits an arousing of the spirit of adventure within the people. Nanking, the old capital, has become the new capital of the nation, and leaders are removing from Peking every mark of attachment to the old regime. Changes in customs are marked. Years ago the queue was discarded; now foot-binding has been officially proscribed. The new year has been changed to correspond with that of Western nations and a solar calendar adopted in place of the former lunar calendar. These latter changes go into effect the first day of the new year. China is gradually recognizing the great importance of the work of the missionary within her borders, and the Western church is seeing the fruit of the fulfillment of Christ's commission to carry the gospel to the ends of the earth.—Religious Telescope.

Our Worship Program

MONDAY

LEAVING FAIR HAVENS—Acts 27:12-15. "Because the haven was not commodious." That is the reason given for the captain's leaving a port called "the Fair Havens." And as a consequence he later suffered ship-wreck and barely escaped with his life. Because "the south wind blew softly," he imagined he could make a better harbor and so put forth from Fair Havens. People are still to be found who do not know when they are well off. A man who lived in a part of our country famed for its healthful climate was packing his goods to ship to another community hundreds of miles distant, which he had heard was a very healthful place, and upon being questioned, he confessed he had not heard that his own community was noted for its genial climate. In the religious realm there are those who find the cross of Christ "not commodious" and seek a new and more fantastic haven which is reputed to be easier and more satisfying, forgetting all the while that the cross offers the only safe and satisfying harbor for the soul. But everywhere and in every generation there are those who find the cross of Christ an offense.

TUESDAY

A QUESTION OF FAITH—Mark 9:23-27. "All things are possible to him that believeth." There are those who are saying that the greatest need of this generation is spiritual power. That is doubtless true, but the emphasis needs to be placed not on power, but the source of power and the fact that it may be had for the receiving. One needs only to believe to receive. Faith, then, is the great dynamic and when the church or an individual is powerless, it is because of a lack of faith. Read it again—"All things are possible to him that believeth." Can you accept that? Will you act upon it?

WEDNESDAY

FULLNESS OF JOY—John 15:7-11. "These things have I spoken unto you . . . that your joy might be full." As the cold and sleet and biting winds of winter pinch the warmth of summer out of the earth, so there is much that is cold and bitter and harsh to drive the joy of life out of the hearts of men. But Jesus takes the sadness out of human hearts as the warm rays of spring loosen the grip of winter's chill. But the joy of Christ remains; the soul has eternal springtime who abides in the presence of the Sun of righteousness.

THURSDAY

THE HEART'S RESPONSE—Psalm 106:43-48. "Blessed be the Lord God from everlasting to everlasting, and let the people say, Amen." In the presence of a fresh reminder of the tender mercies of God, can any heart do less than say "Amen" to such an expression of praise? He who has not praise for God has not known the mercies of God. The overflow of the heart with gratitude is evidence that there has been an inflow of grace.

FRIDAY

THE "JESUS WAY"—John 14:3-6. "I am the way." Jesus said it, and the world has witnessed the truth of it in every station and class and condition of men. No matter how deep the sin, Jesus is the way out; or how backward the people, Jesus is the way forward; or how hopelessly enslaved, he is the way to freedom; or how bitterly involved in conflict, he is the way to peace. Jesus is the way to life and all that is great and good and abiding.

SATURDAY

THE GREAT CHANGE—2 Cor. 5:16-19. "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." That is not an expression at the passing of the old year and the entering upon the new. The passing of an artificial division of time changes nothing. But the passing of a sinner under the quickening power of the Holy Spirit changes everything. That makes a new creature.

SUNDAY

HOW TO LIVE—Matt. 4:4-7. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." In other words, the Christian should not feed on the things of this world, but on the things that are heavenly, even the very truth that God has spoken. The emphasis is on the center of your life interest. If your thoughts are of the things of the Spirit, the things that are eternal, then indeed hath your soul the breath of life.—G. S. B.

Things that Tend to Order in the Sunday School

By Rev. H. Eugene Richardson

1. The superintendent's program. It should be well prepared, inspirational, educational, varied, and always worshipful. The songs should fit the topic or occasion. The superintendent should be prompt. In opening the school he should say in a firm, clear voice, "The school will now come to order." If he has a bell he should tap it only once, and then announce the opening hymn of worship. The school may close with a devotional song, and a brief statement of some points worth taking home suggested by teachers or pupils.

2. The teacher making the lesson attractive. Remember that attraction comes before attention, and that it is gained largely by the manner of approach to the lesson. The teacher's personal appearance will help much to win attention; so will a blackboard, some maps, and object lessons wisely used.

3. The teacher's appeal to the pupils' sense of honor. Where there is listlessness or bad behavior, have a private interview with the ones that are inclined to disturb the class. Put some new responsibility upon each pupil. Give them work to do, such as keeping a record of attendance or happenings, taking an offering, collecting the hymn books, etc.

4. The teacher's knowledge of the lesson. His position implies he has this knowledge, and he should not disappoint the pupils. Someone says, "In order to teach a dog tricks you must know more than the dog." The pupil who is under a trained teacher in the week day graded school soon finds out if his Sunday school teacher has nothing to teach. Close the teaching period when pupils show interest. It may be well to say: "The time is up. We are not through with the lesson, but more next Sunday."

5. Consider the pupil the center. You are to teach the pupil, not the Bible. Of course, the Bible and other related material is to be used. Jesus was a wise teacher and he set a child in the midst as the central object of his teaching.

6. Personal friendship for each pupil. No teacher can get very far with his class during the Sunday school hour only. Make personal friends of your pupils. Learn their temperament, likes and dislikes, and their environment. To do this, visit them at home, get acquainted with their family, and get them to come to your church if they do not have one.

7. Special inducements for pupils to attend regularly. Each one should feel that he must be there. Punch an attendance card, or give a certificate, or put his name on an honor roll, or have a contest for new members by dividing the class into two divisions, or have a contest with some other class.

8. Having as an aim the winning of your pupils to Christ and the church. A godly teacher with this aim, which is the real business of the Sunday school, will almost always have order. The teacher who does not know or try to find out whether his pupils are Christians should be "born again."

9. Keeping the minds of pupils busy. Do not try so much to keep them quiet, but keep them busy. The restless and disorderly are usually boys under fifteen years of age, and at this age they are not afraid of hard work. Keep them busy thinking and you will keep them quiet and orderly.

10. Love the pupils. The love element in a teacher is better than simply a teacher-training certificate as a qualification for a good teacher. The worst in the school will respect a teacher that loves them. As a last resort for a disorderly class let them have another teacher, or promote the unruly pupils to another class. Never think of expelling or scolding the bad pupil. "They love a fellow over there," is what one boy gave as his reason for going across the city to his Sunday school class. One teacher I know of, cured disorder in her class by going home and crying. She told them she was not coming back until they were orderly and respected her. The next Sunday the class all came to her home and invited her back with the promise to be good. Love won out.

Martinsburg, West Virginia.—The Otterbein Teacher.

WHAT ABOUT ATMOSPHERE?

By M. W. Brabham

Recently, while engaged in a series of institutes in one of our conferences, the writer visited a community of about four thousand people. While in the church of that town, he went about looking at the equipment of the church for Sunday school purposes. He found in that particular church a large auditorium and one small room. The small room was pointed out as the meeting place of the Primary department. Mental note was at once made of the various objects in that room, and later these were transferred to paper for preservation. The following is a bona fide list of the things found in the room in which a group of children meet every Sunday of the year for the teaching of the Word:

1. Chairs of various sizes and in various stages of disintegration.
2. Two discarded benches from the church auditorium.
3. A clock out of order and not running.
4. A large white star, apparently the remains of some decorations.
5. Two wastebaskets filled with trash.
6. A grass-cutting machine.
7. A stepladder.
8. A garden rake.
9. Dust pan and duster.
10. Stick broom.
11. Old papers from packages of literature (on the floor).
12. A banner for offering.
13. A large wall chart.
14. Two bookcases with a few scattered volumes unarranged.

15. A table with small call bell and birthday bank on it.

16. Wood stove needing polish.

17. Old coffeepot.

18. Epworth League charter of former years.

19. Several old seats apparently stored away until they might be destroyed.

20. Stick basket.

21. Two vases.

Is it not in order to ask that our boys and girls be given a place of better type than the foregoing in which to cultivate the spirit of worship? Is it fair for a child, with his powers of association, to be compelled to think of disorder and uncleanness when he thinks of a truth which he has learned?

That same room could be made attractive, even though it should not be possible for any reason to have it fully equipped. It needs a process of elimination by emphatic rejection and ejection. Where should it begin? With the things in the room? Maybe. With the teacher who allows it to be so? Perhaps. But that a change should be made admits of no doubt.—Selected.

WHITE GIFT OFFERING

The first report of White Gift offerings received to date is herewith submitted. Several schools show splendid increases over last year's offerings—notably, Dayton, Ohio, while several show rather large decreases. It is hoped that every school will report as early as possible. If every school would show an increase of five dollars it would mean that we could meet our enlarged program and it seems as if the new members in each church could easily take care of this increase. Let us pray for rich gifts for our King that rival the gold, frankincense and myrrh of old.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

Some Great Christian Teachings

III. Christ the Savior

(Lesson for January 20)

Scripture Lesson—Luke 2:11, 30-32; 15: 3-7; John 3:14-17; 10:9-11, 14-16, 27, 28; Acts 3:1-18; Rom. 5:1-11; Phil. 2:5-11; 2 Tim. 1:9, 10.

Printed Text—Luke 15:3-7; Rom. 5:6-10.

Devotional Reading—Isa. 53:4-9.

Golden Text—And thou shalt call his name Jesus: for it is he that shall save his people from their sins.—Matt. 1:21.

Introductory Note

It is a great, broad, and deep subject that we are to study today, the very foundation of the Christian religion. If Christ is not our Savior, then the heart of the Gospel is false and we are feeding on husks. But he is our Savior, as has been demonstrated in millions of lives and in our own hearts. The Saviorhood of Christ is the central theme of the New Testament and the references are too numerous to mention, but the few given above should be studied along with others that may easily be found by the use of a concordance. Only two of the references should be printed. Christ's parable was spoken in Perea about the year 30 A. D., during the last three months of Christ's ministry. Paul wrote his Roman epistle from Corinth in the course of his third missionary journey, in 57 A. D.

The Repentance of Sinners

A reading of Luke 15:1-10 reminds us that the "publicans and sinners" were objects of contempt and hatred on the part of the Pharisees and, as the editor of "The Illustrator" says, their "proud traditions prevented their receiving such persons into their houses, or eating with them in public." The same commentary continues: "The object of the parable, Vs. 3-9, was to instruct and reprove those men whose conduct had more of nature than of grace in it, who were concerned more for their own honor and pride than for the glory of the Most High. The repentance of sinners is a great event in both worlds—the only thing probably which with respect to man, gives joy to angels. vs. 7, 10. The repentance referred to, means nothing less than an entire change of the whole course of life, a turning from sin with unfeigned abhorrence; a confession of it at the footstool of mercy, and an imploring of pardon through the blood of the Atonement. Rom. 5:11. Were men really righteous, they would not need repentance, Luke 18:9. Christ himself testified that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to it, Luke 5:32; strictly speaking, there were no righteous men to call, Rom. 3:10; but Jesus is a perfect Savior to all who hear and heed his call, Matt. 1:21. 'In all our wanderings,' said the now sainted C. H. Spurgeon, 'the watchful glance of the eternal Watcher is evermore fixed upon us—we never roam beyond the Shepherd's eye. In our sorrows he observes us incessantly, and not a pang escapes him; in our toils he marks all our weariness, and writes in his book all the struggles of his faithful ones. These thoughts of the Lord encompass us in all our paths, and penetrate the innermost region of our being. Dear reader, is this precious to you? Then hold to it. The Lord liveth and thinketh upon us: this is a truth far too precious for us to be lightly robbed of it. If the Lord thinketh upon us, all is well, and we may rejoice evermore.'"

Why Christ Came

Christ came to earth, we are told in John 3:16 and Rom. 5:8, (1) because God loved, not because God was a stern Judge needing Christ's death to satisfy his desire for revenge, but because God is the supreme Lover. (2) Because God loves all the world, "whosoever," and wanted to reach all the world as he could not through a merely human teacher and leader. (3) Because God is generous, eager to give, lavish in pouring out upon us what we have not earned and are not entitled to, anxious to bestow upon us his best and dearest, the life of his life, the outgoing of his own self, his only begotten Son. Christ is explained only by this universal, generous love of God.

Our Lord made many statements of the reasons for his coming to earth. Another of great loveliness and of deep meaning is Matt. 20:27, 28. Speaking of himself by his lowly title of Son of man, Christ said that he did not come as a king, that others should serve him, but as a servant, that he might minister to the suffering and needy. More than that, he came to minister to their most terrible needs in the most thorough way; for men are slaves to sin, chained to evil, held fast in the dungeons of Satan, and Christ came to free them with his own blood, to give his life for their ransom, and lead them, a happy enfranchised throng, to their eternal homes. Not even God could show greater love than this, and no one has ever imagined anything more than this that even God could do to win his erring children back to himself. "He died because he chose; he chose because he loved."—Illustrated Quarterly.

He Saves You First

But the world will never be saved wholesale. The work of salvation begins in individual hearts. When men are really saved and hearts of stone become hearts of flesh, then they begin to redeem neighborhoods and nations. An English historian says that the night on Aldersgate when John Wesley "felt his heart strangely warmed" was the greatest day in the history of England in that century. John Wesley's warmed and vitalized heart sent him out on horseback to preach a gospel to England which changed its history and held it for God and righteousness. What Wesley did by prayer and preaching and personal consecration in England Napoleon tried to do by force in France. It has been a striking contrast between the two "men on horseback" and a lesson which the world—at least the Christian world—must never forget.—Herald of Gospel Liberty Magazine.

"God's Plan of Salvation." And Other Fundamental Truths

(As Arranged by Mrs. Henry V. Wall and Given to the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Long Beach, California, in May, 1927. Many Requests Came for this Simple Plan of Salvation, Therefore it was published in Tract Form, from which we are reproducing it.—Editor).

- 1—Why does the world need a Savior? Romans 3:23.
- 2—What is the penalty for sin? Romans 6:23.
- 3—What is God's plan to save the world? John 3:16.
- 4—What is God's first promise of a Redeemer? Genesis 3:15.
- 5—What is our part in this great plan? Romans 10: 9, 10; Eph. 2:8, 9; John 1:12; Mark 16:16.
- 6—When do we get everlasting life? John 3:36.
- 7—When will you lose it? Answer—"I will never lose it." John 10:28.
- 8—What did you have before you received everlasting life? Answer—"We had death." Romans 5:12.
- 9—What is death? Answer—Physical death is separation of soul and body. Spiritual death is separation of soul and spirit from God.
- 10—Why did Adam die? Answer—He disobeyed God; he believed Satan rather than God, and sentence of death was upon him.
- 11—Who belongs to Satan's kingdom? Answer—"Those who reject the Lord Jesus Christ and his shed blood." 1 Peter 1:18, 19.

- 12—To what kingdom do you belong? Answer—"The kingdom of God; but as long as we live in this earthly body we will be IN the kingdom of this world, but not OF it."
- 13—Will you die? Answer—"My body may die, but that will make me absent from the body, 'but present with the Lord.'" II Cor. 5:8.
- 14—Will your body ever be raised? Answer—Yes, when Christ "comes for his saints." I Cor. 15:51-53.
- 15—What kind of a body will you have? Answer—"A glorified body of flesh and bone." Luke 24:39.
- 16—When the Lord Jesus Christ comes, will he have the same body in which he arose and ascended? Answer—Yes. Acts 1:11.
- 17—Do you believe in the miracles of Christ? Answer—Certainly. They are little samples of the power of God's kingdom given by Christ when he was upon this earth.
- 18—Suppose I said I believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, but did not believe he was born of a Virgin, or that he shed his blood to save me, or that he raised Lazarus from the dead, or that he arose in his body, what would you say? Answer—"We would say that you did NOT believe in the Lord Jesus Christ." Acts 4:12.
- 19—After accepting the Lord Jesus Christ as our Savior, what should be our conduct toward others? Answer—Eph. 4: 31, 32; I John 1:7.

20—What does the Lord Jesus Christ say about his coming again? Answer—I Thess. 4:13-18; John 14:1-3.

"EARLY TO RISE"

The old proverb which implies that "early to bed and early to rise" is the sole formula necessary for securing health, wealth, and wisdom is undoubtedly an exaggeration, but the fact remains that the young fellow who lies abed in the morning as a concession to self-indulgence is likely to be snoring when opportunity knocks. A day's work is a day's work, any time in the twenty-four hours, but the young persons who have not sufficient command of themselves to get out of bed early will find some other stumbling-block in the way of self-indulgence later in the day. Early rising has this advantage, that it draws the line between the lazy and the quitters and those who are willing to pay the price of success.—Young People's Weekly.

evening meeting of our little chapel several accepted the Lord Jesus. How thankful I am for the chapel here and that it is not in the forbidden direction!

Sunday, October 28th

Morning meeting in the chapel. God's blessing was especially with us. Forenoon spent in writing. In talking with one of our Sergeants found they were less informed on one point than I myself. Showed the Lieutenant my letter from Yaloke which we translated together. Always greatly fatigued at noon. Afternoon re-reading letters and reading papers. Evening meeting at the chapel. Several patients, among them one of the sergeants who has an attack of fever.

Monday, October 29th

Marguerite's thirteenth birthday. Thank God she is safe in the Lord's care. There are times when I wish she were with me, but today I can praise the Lord that she is at least spared the discomforts and suffering which I am undergoing. Morning meeting in the chapel. Commenced a special class for teaching the converts. How good God is! Another talk with the officers. The expedition starts today. I am to remain in the camp until they return. How wonderful to have the privilege of preaching and teaching daily. "Then they that were scattered abroad, went everywhere preaching the Word." How much I have to pray for—my four boys in prison, Yaloke station about to undergo evacuation (?) personal tests and trials without number—but God! I believe him! He is able to deliver my boys from prison, he is able to keep Yaloke station from evacuation. He is able to care for me in my sudden catastrophe! It has not been sudden to him. I do not now remember ever having had more joy and peace in believing.

October 30th

I am so glad that the reports given me by the government officials (that is, the subordinates) were not actually true, as they had been incorrectly informed. Not only Yaloke, but the false prophet who is at the head of this movement against the government, has absolutely forbidden anyone to touch any of our missionaries at any of our three stations. I could not imagine Yaloke turning against us, yet being everywhere confronted with the assertion, was finally constrained to believe it and to write it. The governor himself gave me this refutation which corresponds with letters of a previous date received from the mission stations. Yaloke's youngest son, Joseph Nguede, the boy whom I had with me at Leopoldville is (with Yaloke's nephew, one of our evangelists and one of our school boys) being held at the Boal government post as a hostage.

The expedition left this morning. The officer came to my door at 5 A. M. to say farewell. I did not rise until 6, when all was over, for it would have been needless fatigue. They took the mail for Yaloke station, my first opportunity of communicating with the missionaries since my last letter was written from Leopoldville. When and where I shall see them again. I know not.

Writing today to send by runner who leaves tomorrow. Trying to improve the arrangement of my primitive household equipment as well. One bed, one bag, one trunk, one suitcase, two chop-boxes, one chair, no table, a dirt floor, etc. I don't have the ammunition any more, as that left with the expedition this morning. They had intended leaving yesterday, but had to wait

After the dedication of the new church building in Tancacha, reported in a former letter, we held a meeting for two weeks which resulted in the conversion of a number of new people and in strengthening the church. Brother Yett then returned to Rio Cuarto to attend to his work as treasurer, while Brother Siccardi and I went to Alma Fuerte with the Bible Coach, feeling that the Lord would have us open a new work there. We found that truly the Lord had an open door. The town is small but has a great future on account of the great government dam being built near there. There is no priest, except one who comes about once a year when called for some funeral. He is disliked by the people on account of his avarice and immorality.

We found considerable sympathy for the Gospel. Some men told us they were evangelicals, but on questioning them we found that they had never even attended a Gospel meeting, but from tracts which we had distributed from time to time in the town, they knew something of the Gospel and liked it. We also found one prominent family that has been converted for several years and has been praying for a mission. They cared for us royally while there. Another man next door, a Norwegian engineer, gave us the free use of a hall. We held meetings for children just after school and for everyone in the evening. Heavy rains interfered, but quite a number became interested, and we arranged to return and conduct a vacation Bible school several weeks in December.

On returning to Rio Cuarto we baptized six more converts and made preparations for the summer Bible schools. We hope to have them in each of the missions. During the past few months several more families of faithful members have moved from Rio Cuarto to Rosaria, making a total of more than fifty that we have lost from the Sunday school and church during the year. However, many new people are becoming interested, and the church is filled for the Sunday meetings.

We are almost being surpassed, however, by the people in Realcoo where the attendance is also near two hundred. Brother Adolfo Zeche is doing a fine work there and has an open field, for there is no priest and the people do not want one. Brother Sickel and family are now back at Huinca Renanco so that Brother Zeche can give his entire time to Realcoo. Brother Yett and family will be moving next week to Tancacha where he will have charge as pastor. It will be difficult to have a charge and at the same time go with the Bible Coach. We need at least another American missionary. The Bible Coach will have to be in the garage until after Christmas. We hope that when it goes out again it will have a new chassis and be equipped for evangelistic meetings as well as colportage work. But the coming year we hope to give all coach has been supported by Rio Cuarto, but the coming year we hope to give all the missions the chance to have a share in the good work. The harvest is just beginning and many families go to the country to work on account of the harvest wages. We are preparing to hold a General Conference January 10-14. Pray for it. C. F. YODER.

Dr. Gribble's Diary and Military Situation

(Concluded from last week)

Campement Militaire—Irimo,

October 26th, 1928.

The morning has dawned bright and fair. I have just been out to have a little meeting with one of the village groups and have arranged, God willing, to have a large meeting tonight. Now, during the day's heat I have returned to write and to pray. Shocking news was received last night. Joseph Nguede, the boy I had with me at Leopoldville, who is a son of Yaloke, one of the leading rebels, Allen Tijara, another of my personal boys and nephew of Yaloke, Ngo, one of our faithful evangelists, and Mbaua, one of our older school boys are political prisoners at Boali. I could not take them with me in the auto and they started to walk, having both personal and government passes, but they were taken by four men, presumably soldiers, and returned to Boali. These are days of war and we could not expect otherwise "dans un pays dissident," yet our hearts bleed none the less. We have found peace in committing them to One who is able, and joy in knowing that they are imprisoned, not for wrong doing, but for faithfulness to me, his servant, and therefore to himself.

Saturday today. An opportunity occurred to send the mail by automobile, for which I had been praying and for which I am very thankful. Spent most of the day writing. Much time spent in prayer. At the for Sergeant Gemot's recovery. One of the soldiers in charge of the camp asked me to witness to the number of cartridges in his possession. I obligingly complied. There is a little rest room in our chapel, but I have not asked to go there—my request would have doubtless been refused, but worth trying had it not been that by remaining in camp I can teach both the soldiers and their wives (all wives were left behind), as well as making my daily excursions to the chapel. As I pass through the village streets the bell automatically rings (?) and the crowd follows me to the chapel—not as numerous as I would like yet, but very attentive and devout, though not having recovered yet from the grippe, my voice is uncertain. When I am no longer able to talk they sing in Sango or Banou. It is surprising how well they know and remember the songs we have taught them. And then the prayers! Our native caretaker is much concerned about my hoarseness and wanted to know if the trouble was in the larynx or in the bronchi—I told him both. He was much concerned and said "I will pray for you." He is overjoyed to find me better today.

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise.
November 7th, 1928.

Dear readers:

The events of the last week have been stirring ones indeed. There was constant coming and going at the military camp, both of officers and militia.

Sunday the administrator rebuilt the bridges and went through in an automobile to Yaloke. Sunday afternoon I was sitting quietly in my mud room at the Military Camp, reading about the Dyaks of Borneo, and feeling a burden of intercession for them, when a boy rushed in telling me the "push" from Yaloke had arrived. The Sergeant had come for me! We left at 3 A. M. and reached Yaloke between 12 and 1 o'clock. We were indeed tired, I having made the whole distance (45 kilometres) in the push, and the Sergeant having traveled in the tepoi.

There was joy and rejoicing indeed in camp. We could not be separated. The wonderful way in which the Lord had worked in not permitting the military occupation to bring about missionary evacuation and in even permitting the Sergeant himself to escort me home was a theme of continual praise.

The Captain from Bozoum had established a military poste on October 24th. The Lieutenant arrived on October 31st with full intentions to evacuate the station, and found the missionaries had been authorized to remain by the commander of the previous occupation. So they finally decided they might as well get me too!

Surely God is good, and has worked a miracle in my behalf, as well as in behalf of the other missionaries and the Mission.

The villages are devastated and burned, but the rebel chief is still at large. Military occupation is to continue three months longer.

My four boys are still in prison. They spend their spare time preaching and praying and are already beginning to bear fruit.

The wife of one of our faithful evangelists died tonight in perfect peace and victory.

God is good and keeps us believing in HIM. We are assured that his Name shall be glorified.

Faithfully,

to the college by ties like Dr. Gillin, who served for a time as President of the school; Dr. Beachler, who led the way to bigger things financially and in making the college better known to our people; Professor Milton Putebaugh, a present member of the faculty and teacher in the science department; Brother Sam Hoover, who is a member of the Board of Trustees; the pastor, Brother Boardman, a graduate from the school and in that the church made the largest subscription in the former campaign.

In face of the most discouraging financial situation that any section of our country has to meet and in the loss of some of the best financial supporters of the church by death, Waterloo gave to this campaign $5,670.00. I say that is good under the circumstances.

LAKE ODESSA, MICHIGAN

The Lake Odessa Brethren to all the brethren everywhere, beloved of God, called to be saints, grace to you and peace from God our father and our Lord Jesus Christ.

First, we thank God, through Jesus Christ that he has continued to bless us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places. We also thank him for the abundant health bestowed upon his people at this place, only two having "fallen asleep" in over two years. We also thank him for the material prosperity, enabling us to promptly meet all financial obligations through our good treasurer, Lewis Clum.

Our Homecoming was well attended, not only by the members of the church but by their chickens as well. Brother E. A. Duker and family were the guests of honor for the day.

In August, Brother Stephen Smith of Plainwell, Michigan, who a number of years ago worked in our mission in Kentucky, gave us a very profitable talk on the work of the Brethren church at Lost Creek. On the morning of July 8, Mr. J. O. Duffey, director of the Correspondence department of the Moody Bible Institute, preached for us. In August Walter Teeuwissen, who was home on furlough from the Norton's Belgium mission, gave us a very welcome visit, telling of their work in that country so long held fast by the Pope of Rome.

The writer of these notes gave his Bible Chart lectures at the Bible study periods of the Southern Michigan U. B. Camp meeting. Much interest was in evidence, some 1500 people crowding the tabernacle on Sunday afternoon. I also gave them at a two weeks' union meeting of the churches of Freeport, Michigan.

This church is very much interested in the work in the Mountains of Kentucky and loaned their pastor for some meetings in the fall. In the close observation that I have had in several trips to these stations, I feel assured that they are in truth doing the work of the Lord. They are centers from which young people scatter, carrying the Gospel far up into the interior. There seems to be but one way to do this work and that is by bringing the young people together in the school work. Other denominations are increasing their work along this line and many schools have been established, for only in this way can the work be carried on. We also sent several hundred pounds of goods to Krypton and an electric washing machine to Drushals.

The pastor rejoiced in the opportunity afforded by his congregation in attending National Conference this year. We always look forward to these periods of reunion

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

WATERLOO BOOSTS ASHLAND'S ENDOWMENT

The Waterloo church has always been a friend of Ashland College and has given largely in past days of need to make possible a school for our church.

It was while Brother Beachler was pastor of this congregation, that they sacrificed their pastor to the endowment campaign several years ago. Let me say right here that the church owes a debt of lasting gratitude to Dr. Beachler in blazing the trail for financial support to the college. Up to that time we were asking our faculty at Ashland to make brick without straw, receiving wages that barely gave them an existence, having to work with poor equipment and continually harassed with unpaid bills. Since that time under the capable administration of Dr. Jacobs, with a highly efficient staff of co-workers, the school has gone forward beyond our fondest hopes. The Brethren church need no longer be uncertain as to the standing of the college. Let us not forget those men of past days who struggled, sacrificed, and worked under the most discouraging circumstances to keep the doors of the college open. It is due to them that we have a college today.

It gave me a peculiar pleasure to canvass the Waterloo church, as this was the first pastorate I ever served. I followed Dr. Gillin in 1902. Many changes have taken place since then. Under Dr. Beachler a fine and imposing church structure was erected. I missed many of the stalwart and loyal members who have been called to their reward. Waterloo has suffered severely in the last few years by death taking many of their leaders and strong financial supporters, and the pathetic thing is that many of the sons and daughters of these people are not filling the ranks and following in the steps of their parents.

It was a real pleasure to get better acquainted with Brother Boardman and his family. He has been pastor of the congregation a number of years. He is well trained and qualified for the work and has an equally efficient wife. Brother Boardman is a graduate of Ashland College, a warm friend and booster for the school. He gave me encouragement and aid in my work.

It does one good to work with people who are sympathetic and interested when you are on a mission like mine. I felt at home and among friends. Waterloo is fastened with old friends. We did not forget the admonition of St. Paul to be "Always abounding in the work of the Lord" for we passed many Gospels of John in the trains and threw some 2000 tracts from the windows. At one time, in passing out Gospels in a train, a negro porter professed conversion.

While in Kentucky one of the students at Riverside told me that she had a sister living in Michigan. I learned that it was some twenty miles from here, so told her to pray for her sister and I would visit her. Some weeks later, I entered her home. How the Holy Spirit had answered the prayer of the girl in Kentucky I know not, but before I left she said, "I was just sitting in the other room thinking of these things." From the actions of her two daughters I believe it was the first time they had ever seen their mother kneel in prayer.

We are very glad for the interest these people manifest in "sowing the seed" during their vacations. One car, going to Niagara Falls, scattered hundreds of Gospels and tracts along the way. Another, going into the far northern part of Michigan, did likewise, and another going to Pennsylvania.

Our Sunday school picnic was held at a lake some few miles distant. (Lakes are not scarce up here, 85 being in one county.) Brother Ivan Zuschnitt of Grand Rapids, anticipating a good meal, joined us at the noon hour and hurried back to his work in the city. After song and prayer, prizes were given for winners in contests of scripture quoting, racing, etc.

The Foreign Mission work is well remembered by this church. In December a fine box of Christmas presents was started on its long journey to South America. We have had the rare privilege of having both our mission stations represented. Sister Bickel spoke to us of the Lord's work in Africa and Sister Nielsen gave us a message from South America. We do rejoice at the good reports from these two fields and are praying that our offering from this church will reach several hundred dollars.

We held our communion services in October. Some seventy percent of the members surrounded the tables in obedience to the commands of our Lord.

On Thanksgiving Day we met with the Church of the Brethren where I spoke to a large audience in the forenoon. Tables had to be spread the second time to feed the crowd that was present at dinner.

I am writing these notes on the first day of 1929 and my wish for all the pastors of the Brethren church is that we may all take Colossians 1:28 as our motto, for the coming year, and preach Christ, warning every man what not to do and teaching them what to do, so that we may be able to lead our flocks into the presence of the Chief Shepherd and present every one of them perfect, without spot or blemish. May we all abide in him, that when he shall appear we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

R. I. HUMBERD.

AT LUCERNE AND BERN, SWITZERLAND

(Dr. Gillin writes more directly to his wife this week, but kindly permits Evangelist readers to share his observations.)

John and I got out early this morning and went up to see the Lion of Lucerne and the Glacier Gardens. You will remember that you and I on our previous visit here visited the Lion in the early morning. Well, it is just as beautiful as ever.

As you recall it is a figure of a great lion hewed out of the solid rock of the hillside within a kind of shallow cave. It is a figure of a lion dying from wounds it has received. A spear is embedded in its back, and the handle has broken off down near the body of the Lion. It is dying with his head upon his paws. It was chaselled from designs by the Scandinavian sculptor, Thorwaldsen. It is intended to commemorate the Swiss who died in defending the King of France and his wife in 1792 at the time of the French Revolution. At that time the Swiss soldiers were mercenaries in France acting as a guard in the Royal Palace, just as they act as guard to the Pope today. The Swiss guard at the Vatican is a well known feature of a visit to that place. We saw them on our recent visit to the Vatican in Rome. They wear gaily colored uniforms. Well, at Paris 26 officers and 760 soldiers, natives of Switzerland, were killed in that awful outbreak known as the Reign of Terror in the French Revolution. They were faithful unto death in trying to protect the royal family they were hired to defend. But the terrific hurricane of anger against the royal family swept these men away to death. This stone lion is their only memorial.

Just above it is one of the most unique geological exhibits I have ever seen. Among other things this glacial garden contains a number of what are called "glacial mills." They are great pot holes or kettles worn in the solid rock by the action of water flowing down upon a stone of granite which has got caught in a spot upon the limestone floor on which the glacier rests. The water turning this granite boulder round and round finally wears a hole in the softer limestone. There is one hole here 26 feet across. In the bottom is still a giant boulder which did the business. There are many lesser ones. What is especially interesting is that they have an actual model in operation except that the thing which is going round and round in the whirlpool in the mill is not a stone but something which looks like a stone, but which floats; it would take too much water to make a real stone whirl around. Besides the volume of water at present is insufficient. There are great stone surfaces exposed which show the striations upon their surfaces made by the slowly moving glacier with small or large bits of hard stone on its under surface. These remains are supposed to have been made by the Reuss glacier which filled the whole valley in which Lucerne now lies during the last glacial epoch some 30,000 years ago. There is also a fine museum right in the Garden bearing upon the Swiss geology and prehistory. In fact right here in these Swiss Alps one can see how ice and running water have carved out the gigantic features on the basis of a very much wrinkled earth through thousands of years of history and prehistory.

At 10:50 we took the train to Alpnachstad, from which place the cog railway runs up to the Pilatus. From the tops of one of its peaks, the Essel, another fine view of the whole of the Alps around here is visible.

This mountain is much higher than the one we ascended yesterday. Rigo was about 6,000 feet above sea level. The Esel peak of the Pilatus is just about 7,000. The cog ascends often at an angle of 45%, occasionally even 48%. It is a wild looking scene as the car goes up over precipices often dropping down below for a thousand feet. We trailed along the side of this gigantic mountain, up through the pines as far as trees grow, then up among the rocks, winding around and tunnelling through where the engineers could not find a way around until at last we came to the top. There were two hotels there. Also today there was plenty of snow there. We shall send you some of the pictures. We had taken our lunch from the hotel and we ate it on one of the higher points above the hotels and the station. From where we ate we could look down just a mile to the bottom of an almost straight drop. After lunch John and I climbed up to the highest point on this massif, about 100 feet above the hotels and the stations. From there we could see a magnificent line of peaks in all directions except to the north. Oh, one is bankrupt for language to describe the majesty of the scene. These gigantic masses reaching up into the sky way beyond the height at which we stood makes one feel the puniness of man. The snow upon their tops glitters in the sunshine like polished silver. The clouds floating above them cast broad shadows upon the snow and glide over them in strange fantastic shapes. Yet, science tells us that the present mountains have been much eroded down from what they were when the ice and water began their work upon them. These jagged peaks were once only parts of immense folds of the earth's crust, which towered above what they now are as high again. But the climate grew colder, ice accumulated upon these heights, glaciers moved slowly down between the folds, grinding off great masses of rock. As the climate grew warmer, this ice, often thousands of feet thick, melted and the water ran off carrying with it great masses of loosened rock and grinding it to sand and mud. Chemical action was also taking place and helping in the process of disintegration. Well, these great mountains are only the survivors of that long process. We came down after two hours spent there feeling that we had been looking into the laboratory of Nature for a little peep.

We Go to Bern Tomorrow

We left Lucerne this morning at 1:30 and were there in two hours. The ride was one of the finest we have had. It gave us a view of the Swiss farm which we have not had before, except the few we saw way up on the mountains. We came up a fine valley this morning, or rather through two valleys and into a third. It was like riding through some of those nice wide valleys of Pennsylvania. All the farms were so neatly kept. They were small, the houses being so close together that social life among the farmers must be very different there from what it is in the isolated valleys and mountain districts. Very different too from what is in our large farms in some parts of the Middle West.

Everyone seems to keep cows. Brown Swiss cows are here in their native haunts. Much of the ground is given up to pasture and hay. The cows look fat and sleek, some of them wearing blankets. We saw no pigs. There is no evidence that Indian corn is raised here.

The fields are well kept, the houses and barns in very good condition. Everything looks prosperous. From the looks of the houses and barns people here live very comfortably. Often the house and barn are one building. Aside from that striking feature and that the farms are so much smaller I might have thought that we were riding through Somerset County, Pennsylvania, on this journey this morning. There is the same neatness about the premises, the same signs of good farming, the same look of prosperity as when I visited Pennsylvania 15 years ago. Moreover, the lay of the land is much the same, rather hilly, but not so much so that farming is impossible. The farms here do not hang upon the hillside so much as they do around Lucerne.

The women work in the fields here. In this I was reminded of the French women in that community where we lived when I was a small boy. It was just on the edge of a French settlement. The women always worked out in the fields with the men, especially in the planting and harvesting seasons. In these wider and levelled valleys they have plows, clumsy looking affairs with a double share and mould-board attached to a set of wheels. This share and mould-board can be turned over from one side to the other, and like the hillside plows in America can be placed at any slant desired. But usually there is one horse pulling the plow, although I have seen two, or two oxen. But one man holds the plow and another or a woman or a young person leads the horse, or horses. On the steeper parts the ground is broken up by mattocks, and levelled by women and children with hoes and rakes. I can imagine that after a man has swung one of those mattocks all day he knows that he has done a day's work. Often the whole family apparently is out in the field, the children playing at one side while those able to work are digging in.

The people we have seen in Switzerland are a fine looking bunch physically. They live much out of doors. The women work out in the air and develop good muscles. They are not the slim willowy type so much affected by our flappers, young and old, in America today. John remarked this morning that since we have been in Switzerland he has not seen what could be called a flapper, male or female. They are a sturdy lot, and seem very prosperous and happy. One cannot blame them for being happy in the midst of these beautiful surroundings. No more beautiful place exists, I suppose, on the earth. Moreover, many of the distractions of life we have, have not yet penetrated here. The women go to the markets for their Saturday shopping. We saw hundreds of them this morning. Then there are the women selling things in the markets. It is much more simple than the markets I have seen in Dayton, Ohio. They do not have those fine market wagons in which they have brought and in which they display their goods.

The stores here are very good. Under these arcades built out over the streets, which is a peculiarity of Bern, and which we saw 20 years ago, the best stores are to be found. Styles of shoes, of men's clothing, and of some of the women's dresses are not quite the styles you will see in Cleveland, Ohio, Pittsburgh, or Chicago. The men's shoes seem to be more pointed here and in Italy than they were when we left home.

The movie, or as it is called here, the cinema, is here, but not in such abundance and with such pictures as we have in every town of 25,000 inhabitants in the United States. But American pictures are coming in. One is running here in Bern now called Der Alte Fritz, a German picture. In Italy, Egypt and even in India and Japan we found that the American movie had been introduced. In Japan and India they have to have interpreters to tell the audience what the different events are about, as the titles are in English. The auto is here, as it is everywhere we have been. Right here and also in Italy American machines, while present, are not found in as great numbers as French and Italian. The Fiat is the most popular of these European machines. It is something of the same rank in price as the Ford or the Chevrolet compared with the more expensive machines here. All of them are much higher than similar machines in the United States.

Coming over the Alps from Switzerland a few days ago we saw a number of machines belonging to American tourists being shipped through the tunnel. They had driven them that far up the mountains and rather than go over the pass, put them on cars and sent them through the tunnel. Touring with foreign cars here is very expensive. Besides the high tariff tax, there are several other kinds of taxes. The price of gasoline is usually about 70 cents a gallon, oil accordingly expensive. Then you run only a hundred miles at the most and you reach the border of another country, and go through the bother again of paying taxes, etc. It is bad enough to get baggage through on the train or on a boat.

John has been out this afternoon seeing some museums. My tramping down the mountain day before yesterday, and climbing that peak yesterday left me rather stiffened up, so I went to bed for a nap and rest. I feel better now. I find this hustling pretty tiring. We certainly have been going since we struck Italy.

I went to the Commissioner of Police today after getting here in order to talk with him about that farm colony at Witzwil, which we want to visit, but found that they were all away until Monday. So we shall have to stick here until then. I have an appointment at 9 A. M. I suppose that we shall get out for Geneva Monday some time stopping at Witzwil on the way. We shall not remain long in Geneva, but get on to Paris. Hope to be there a week from today.

WHAT SPIRITUAL GIVING WILL DO

1. It will develop abundant material for the every-member canvass.
2. It will take the "pain" out of every campaign for money.
3. It will change many "supper rooms" into "upper rooms."
4. It would make preachers out of "preachers."
5. It would give God a chance to prove and own his Word.
6. It would multiply the church's power beyond comparison.
7. It would make Christians out of many church members.
8. It would inspire faith in God's promises.
9. It would give the church her greatest test—the consecrated purse test.
10. It would reveal the main objective of church work—soul saving and soul feeding.
11. It would prove personal consecration and sanctification.
12. It would extend the Kingdom and relieve every present emergency.
13. It will forever settle the question—"I'm giving as much now." Try it!—Dr. K. E. Irvin, in The Lutheran.

THE SECRET OF A PLEASANT SMILE

By Frances McKinnon Morton

Her Indian father called her Cactus-Flower, because when he went outside his tent, after she came into the world, a beautiful yellow cactus-flower was the first thing he saw in the woods. Indian fathers often name their children just that way, and Cactus-Flower was very well pleased with her name. She was a very pretty dark brown Indian girl, with shining black eyes that hardly ever missed seeing anything that moved through the woods.

It was with those sharp black eyes of hers that she had first seen Ruth walking in the woods on the mountain-side. Ruth had golden hair, pink-and-white cheeks and wide-open blue eyes. Her father was a doctor, her mother was the County Nurse and her two brothers were Boy Scouts, so Ruth knew a good many things to do when people were sick or hurt. People said about Ruth that she wasn't afraid of anything or anybody.

But poor little Cactus-Flower belonged to a tribe of Indians that people call bad Indians and Cactus-Flower was afraid of many things. First of all, she was afraid of white people—"Palefaces," her people called them—and she thought "Palefaces" must be terribly bad because she knew her people were always planning things to do to hurt the Palefaces. She thought it must be because they were afraid of these queer-looking, pale-faced people, so she meant to stay quite away from them herself and never let one of them come near her.

Still it was lonely to be the only girl in the camp and she would slip away sometimes and watch Ruth at her play near the camp where her father and mother had decided to spend their vacation. It was a beautiful camp, high up on the sheltered side of the mountain, with tall shade trees around the cabin door and a clear bubbling spring close by.

That afternoon Cactus-Flower had stolen softly through the woods all alone to spy out what the white girl was doing. Cactus-Flower had on her buckskin shoes; and a rabbit would have made almost as much noise as she did, creeping along from bush to bush and tree to tree. She was almost in sight of the white man's camp when she saw Ruth picking wild flowers under the trees. She laughed to herself when she saw that Ruth was alone and she thought of throwing stones at her to make her go back to her own camp.

But when Cactus-Flower stooped to pick up a stone she slipped and fell, rolling down the mountain-side almost at Ruth's feet.

Ruth looked up in time to see a little brown girl come tumbling down the hill toward her and she said in the friendliest way, "Oh, I hope you didn't hurt yourself."

But Cactus-Flower didn't understand a word of it, and, anyway, all she could think of was getting away from the terrible "Palefaces." She tried to get up and run, but one of her knees was sprained too badly—it would not even hold her up, let alone run for her; so down she sank on the hard ground with a little moan of pain.

Naturally Ruth ran to her and when Cactus-Flower opened her eyes after she had almost fainted with the pain, she saw pale-faced Ruth bending over her and trying to lift her up. Now Cactus-Flower didn't mean to let anything like that happen so she began fighting Ruth off with both of her hands just as hard as she could.

"Here, this will never do," said Ruth, "I'm only trying to help you—you've done something bad to your knee."

But Cactus-Flower didn't understand a word of it so she kept right on fighting at Ruth who was trying to help her. Then Ruth decided to stop that, so she took the belt off of her dress and tied both of Cactus-Flower's hands fast together. Then she took some pine boughs and tied them together, and lifted the Indian girl up and set her down again on the pine boughs. Then she dragged her thus down to the camp where she put her on a cot and looked at the swollen knee.

Then she did what her Scout brothers had taught her to do for a sprained knee, she got some wet clay and bound up the knee with a thick paste of the clay around it.

All this time the little Indian girl lay very quiet and looked at her—she seemed very small and helpless with her hands tied and the frightened look she gave Ruth made Ruth say, "Why, you poor little thing, I believe you are afraid of me—here take a drink of cool water and then I'll untie your hands."

Cactus-Flower didn't understand the words but there was something about Ruth's smile that she did understand, so she smiled back at her.

Then, just as they began smiling, an old Indian woman appeared at the door. She looked very grim and angry at Ruth, but Cactus-Flower told her in the Indian speech, "It's a secret I tell you, Grandmother, when she smiles—you smile and she is very good to me."

After Cactus-Flower learned about smiling and being kind, she and Ruth became great friends and she stayed at the Paleface camp until her knee got quite well.—The Presbyterian Advance.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING

Millions of Christmas and New Year greeting cards have been exchanged by the American people within the last two weeks, and in all too many instances the greeting was formal only, and in reality carried but little of the spirit of good will.

The greetings that have been most acceptable to those of us who are giving our time and strength to the work of the Publishing House have been the good words that have come to us in commendation of the anniversary number of The Brethren Evangelist that was published two weeks ago. The words of praise have been heartily expressed, and they have been greatly appreciated.

Experience has taught us that too often it is—

"Knock, and the world knocks with you,

Praise, and you go it alone.

There are plenty of rocks to aid in your knocks,

But praise comes forth with a groan."

So we appreciate all the more the nice things that have been said about this special number. We printed a goodly number of extra copies, but they have nearly all been sent out and we are afraid our supply will be totally exhausted before all calls are filled.

Renewals

We have received a large number of renewals during the last few weeks as well as a goodly number of new subscriptions, which we wish to incorporate in our report next week; but this week we wish to stress briefly the next BIG thing that we hope to accomplish is a worthwhile offering on

Publication Day

For a number of years we have sought to enthuse our people along the line of Brethren publications and to enlist them in a more generous support of our only Publishing House; but we feel there is nothing we can say that should carry any more weight than the thoughts SUGGESTED by carefully reading that Special Anniversary Number. If one did not become enthused by reading that we will confess we do not know what would enthuse any one.

Sunday, January Twenty-seven

That is the day that has been set apart by the General Conference as Publication Day, the day when contributions are to be made to the fund for paying for the building we occupy.

We did all we knew how to do to acquaint our readers with the situation as it now is with the Publishing House. We frankly told you the building was bought on credit with the expectation that the brotherhood would pay for it in due time, as it is the property of the entire brotherhood; but still there is an indebtedness of $115,000 on the building.

How easy it would be to clear up the entire indebtedness in one victorious offering, if, if, if we only felt like it and would ALL join in the opportunity, for it is an opportunity.

The Faithful Few

Always there are a faithful few that can be depended upon in any crisis. One good brother and wife have invested hundreds of dollars in this proposition, but during the last year the faithful wife passed on to her eternal reward, yet just a few days ago we received another substantial check from the aged survivor whose desire is that the good work shall continue, and he did not care to wait until the regular time of the offering. We should all remember that "four days are as grass," and no one knows how soon they shall wither and be consumed.

Pastors, we all realize that you are the key men in every situation like this. Can we count on your prayers and your co-operation?

The "Tragic Joke"
The Devil's Tail
Also the Night
The Morning Cometh
Mr. Babson and Isaiah
Agnosticism and Prayer

by
Alva J. McClain

The beginning of a new year always arouses interest and curiosity about the future. Toward it there are two extreme attitudes. One is optimism; the other is pessimism. The philosophers might call the first unqualified Idealism, and the latter Realism. The Christian view, which always avoids narrow extremes, recognizes some truth in each of these attitudes. "Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh, and also the night" (Isaiah 21:11-12). Here is truth worth remembering during the New Year.

Ahead of us there is both the "morning" and the "night." We live in the night, there will be night in 1929—don't forget that and you will not be disappointed. But more important still, the "morning" cometh, it may come in 1929—remember that and you will not be overwhelmed or discouraged by the night. He is coming surely, the Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings. The night is far spent.

How dark is the night? Signor Salvador de Madariaga, Oxford professor, said in a recent lecture, "Alcoholism, prostitution, slavery and war, like the four black hounds of the legend, are close on the tracks of the white hares of the Knight of civilization. The harpy colonization vainly seeks to cover her nakedness with the fig-leaves of the mandate system. The pulpit preaches that men are equal, but class barriers and race distinctions keep them apart. Millions of socialists proclaim themselves pacifists but secretly dream of class war. The small nations are looked on merely as markets. Vast territories are given to be administered by a handful of obscure but powerful men in the interests of a trust. Open diplomacy is controlled by secret finance, and the League of Nations is used by diplomats as a basis for hostile intrigue. Chaos reigns in the intellectual world, in the world of material relationships, in the whole course of events."

The Signor should know something about world conditions. He was formerly chief of the Disarmament Section of the League of Nations. But don't forget that "the morning cometh." The Son of God can do more than the League of Nations.

In the rendition of "Faust" the Chicago Opera Company is considering seriously the elimination of horns and spiked tail from the costume worn by Mephistopheles, an evil spirit who represents the Devil. They propose to dress him up in a more attractive costume.

The world, at its best, is never very accurate when dealing with Biblical matters, but this is an evidence of increasing intelligence. The leering Devil with horns and tail, so dear to the newspapers, is wholly an invention with no foundation in Scripture. Read Second Corinthians, the eleventh chapter, verses 14 and 15, for a true description of Satan. The great Deceiver is wiser than his dupes.

Ralph D. Blumenfeld, Editor of the London

Daily Express, has been touring in the United States. Having returned to England, he describes Prohibition in America as "a tragic joke." He says, "I went to many private dinners in all parts of the country, and with only one exception, I never saw a prohibition table."

That is nothing. Before the 18th Amendment there were many men who could never find anything but saloons when they went to town. But what they said was not taken seriously. Doubtless the Editor's experience proves that conditions are bad in this country, but it also suggests that while here his hosts must have been chosen with remarkable foresight.

We have other troubles besides Prohibition enforcement. Roger Babson, noted business expert, discussing prospects for 1929 points one out as follows: "Prosperity cannot last forever in a country where the speculators are making most of the money while the producers of the necessities of life are barely making both ends meet. . . . When a man buys a stock or a commodity and merely sells it at a profit in the same market form and quantity he is doing the country no good. But when men raise fruit on the Pacific Coast or Florida, when men plant wheat or corn in the great Central West or when men grow cotton in the Southland, they are creating real wealth in which everyone ultimately shares."

This from anyone else than Mr. Babson would be called Socialistic. There are too many mere "buyers and sellers," and they are getting more than the "producers." It will not always be so. Read what Isaiah says, Chapters 65, verses 21 and 22. The "producers," at least, ought to pray for the Return of Christ and the establishment of his Kingdom.

An Agnostic was in trouble and a friend suggested that he pray. "How can I pray," the Agnostic answered, "when I do not know whether there is a God or not?" Said the friend, "If you are lost in the forest, you do not wait until you find someone before shouting for help. But you shout to find out if some one is there." It is strange how men seem to abandon ordinary common sense when dealing with questions about God and religion.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

3. Are we to believe that St. Paul's last visit to Jerusalem was made contrary to the will of God as revealed by the Holy Spirit (Ephesus, Acts 20:23; Tyre, Acts 21:4; Caesarea, Acts 21:11) and that he suffered the perils, indignities and eclipse of his missionary activities, even resorting to dubious compromises (Acts 21:23-26) because he lost sight of the "heavenly vision" and followed his fearless self-determination?—W. S. C.

To escape confusion in considering this question let us dismiss the assumptions that seem to underlie it. There is no hint in the sections of the Acts referred to that Paul went contrary to the Holy Spirit's leading, that he disregarded the "heavenly vision," or that his conduct at any time involved compromise.

Let the reader take his New Testament in hand and carefully note what is said in the above references. Instead of going contrary to the Holy Spirit the whole intent of Paul's declaration in Acts 20:22-27 is a vindication of his purpose and sincerity. He can do nothing else though the Spirit makes it perfectly plain that bonds and afflictions await him. It is to be said that Paul appeared to be acting contrary to the warnings of the Spirit. But it is his purpose here to show that on the contrary he is acting in full harmony with the purpose of God. Already at that very moment he stood "bound" before them. Acts 20:22. If now we keep in mind Acts 19:21 we can easily follow Paul's thought in justifying his course. His purpose is plain and the obligation becomes more definite. Is it not a clear instance of the Spirit witnessing with his own spirit? Now, although not outwardly bound, he feels himself bound in the spirit to go to Jerusalem. From Acts 21:4 we learn that the disciples of Tyre foresaw the Apostle's danger and warned him not to go to Jerusalem. The scene at Caesarea is not different. Except that here the friends of Paul yield to his decision as the will of God. Acts 21:11-14.

What shall we say as to Paul's conduct as set forth in Acts 21:23-26 and 23:5? Two separate questions clearly. As to the first, we put it briefly. St. Paul lived and acted normally as a Jew whenever a Christian principle was not at stake. In ordinary life Paul conformed to the requirements of the Law or of Jewish custom. Recall the references to the several Jewish Feasts, the Passover and the days of unleavened bread, at Philippi (Acts 20:6); Pentecost (20:16); see also 18:18 and 27:9. Such references indicate his attitude.

As to the meaning of 23:5 the best answer to the apparent difficulty is the following: The overbearing conduct of the High-priest stirred Paul. In his indignation against the man, who had in violation of the Law commanded Paul to be struck on the mouth, Paul forgot his office. It may indeed be that he did not know that the man who had spoken was the High-priest. The High-priest wore no distinctive garment when not in actual service. The words may be very literally and accurately translated,—Brothers, I did not know that he (the one who had just spoken—is High-priest.

The Way That Leads to War

War seldom comes suddenly or as the result of a single event, but usually is the consummation of a series of events or is arrived at after long preparation. It is true that many nations have suddenly made decisions that plunged them at once into war, but usually such sudden decisions were made on the basis of much preparation having preceded, or after the long cherishing of some grievance. It is scarcely necessary to recount the events of history to prove the statement; any one who is at all familiar with the past will agree that the men who suddenly brought on the terrible havoc of war, first made preparation for the awful thing they were about to undertake. First there was often the fostering of an overmastering ambition; then there was the building of the machinery of war; then there was the provocation, or the immediate occasion for the conflict. Or again, there was the instilling into the hearts of the people certain ideas of race hatred or national superiority; the building up of the martial spirit, the idealizing of war and the justifying of its barbarities. In these or in other ways preparation has been made for most of the wars that have cursed the world. Seldom have they come about accidentally, or as bolts of lightning out of a clear sky. Successful war must be prepared for, and because that is true, there is hope that a nation's life and interests can be so directed as to avoid war. If we know the way that leads to war, there is the possibility of keeping out of that way.

Training men in the art of war leads to war. Naturally when men are taught and become skilled in a profession they want to put that new training into practice. And the first opportunity that opens up along their line they are ready to seize. Train a man to fight and build into his life the spirit of the fight and he is very much more likely to resort to that means of accomplishing his ends than if he had not been so trained. And when such training is put into the lives of a large proportion of the citizens of a country, or, as our militarists would have it, when all our young men are required to take such training, it is easy to see how such a nation would soon be in the grip of the war spirit and would be ready to fight at the drop of the hat. Prussia before the war is a striking example of how such widespread military training reacts upon the people as well as the leaders. It is no imaginary danger that we see in the popularizing of military tactics and the enlarging of our professional militarists; it is very real, and in this day when the world is being challenged with the proposal to outlaw the whole war system, we ought to take an inventory of our country's international attitude toward the mechanics of war and see if we are indeed preparing ourselves to be the leaders in world peace that we claim to be.

The building of great military and naval equipment leads to war. When a nation is strongly fortified, possesses many and great engines of war, is supplied with vast stores of deadly explosives, has a mighty navy and multitudes of war planes and large quantities of every other war paraphernalia that science has invented, there is every likelihood that that nation will put great dependence in her arms for her security and the achievement of her aims. Being conscious of the possession of great material power inclines people to be independent and cocky. Let a nation be armed to the teeth and you have lessened the chances of its being conciliatory in case of international difficulty, and the more sensitive it is likely to be of its so-called "national honor." The more it spends for arms the more it will be inclined to want to brandish them about, to make a display of them, to send its magnificent navy on a training jaunt around the world, and such things, which do not add any to the feeling of comfort and satisfaction of the other nations. The possession of great armaments does not incline a nation to build into its life the spirit of peace, nor does it so impress its neighbors. Implements of war are not built for peace but for war, and everybody knows it, no matter what their race or tongue, and no amount of argument can convince people otherwise.

The spending of an overwhelming proportion of the national government's income for military purposes is inclined to make military interests supreme in the popular mind, and to encourage a spirit and a concern that leads to war. And according to the Wall Street Journal we are doing that very thing. It informs us that out of the $3,601,000,000 which the government expects to spend during the fiscal year of 1930, $3,216,000,000 is to go for military purposes, that is to pay for past wars and to prepare for future wars, while only $585,000,000 is to be used for all other phases and activities of civil government. In other words, five dollars out of every six paid in by the taxpayer is to go to pay the cost of former wars and the maintenance of an army and navy fit for the next war, which some are telling us is not far off. Only 16.25 per cent of the total government expenses is to be spent for peaceful activities. Concluding its comment on these figures, "The Christian Century" says: "In a world in which it is impossible for the most wild-eyed jingo to point out a single nation that would seriously consider attacking the United States, such a state of affairs as the new budget discloses is sufficient to explain why the plain citizen opposes navy building and supports all measures looking towards peace." Any one can see that a situation that permits and demands the spending of such a preponderance of the government's income for military purposes and so small an amount for all other purposes combined, is leading in the way of war.

A spirit of aloofness and selfish nationalism that makes many of our political leaders unwilling to cooperate on an equal footing with other nations of the world for the promotion of peace, and unwilling to agree to sit down together and talk over all possible difficulties that may arise, and deny ourselves the right to go to war for any cause—such a spirit leads to war. We have made splendid progress, officially, along this line recently, but the reactionaries are still loud in their voicings of suspicion and fear. And it is such an attitude that has prevented nations from getting together in an effective way ever since peace talk has been popular. It was just such fear and suspicion that led the nations to war in 1914. And the effect will not be different today. It seems strangely foolish that the nations could not have gathered about a council board before they went to war instead of waiting until they had slain the best of the world's young life and destroyed an inconceivable amount of its wealth. For after the awful havoc was wrought, it was found that nothing was settled and that no one had gained anything, that their difficulties, greatly exaggerated, must still be settled by peaceful means, and that finally they were compelled to face each other as equals, victor and vanquished alike, and talk over their problems in a give and take manner. Only then did they reach anything like a workable agreement, and even yet they must continue to endeavor to see their problems more clearly from each other's viewpoint.

But nations are like men, it is hard for them to lay aside their selfish pride and agree to talk over their problems calmly and frankly. An old legend tells of two knights riding in opposite directions along a certain road and coming together beneath a large tree from one of whose branches hung a shield with one side made of gold and the other of silver. One knight said, "What an exquisite golden shield!" "Golden shield?" responded the other, "the shield is not gold; it is silver." Whereupon there were bitter words which led to blows and a fierce fight that ended in the unhorsing of both knights. As they lay panting on the ground each glanced up and saw the opposite side of the shield from that which he had first seen. Then one spoke, saying, "How unwise we were not to have looked at both sides of the shield before arguing and fighting." "Yes," replied the other, "we were both right in our contention and we were both wrong, for we saw only part of what is to be seen. If we had looked at both sides we would never have fought." Neither would nations fight if they would look at both sides of the problems that arise. But looking at one side only and refusing to consider another's viewpoint, even of so delicate a matter as "national honor," is the way that leads to war. Let us avoid it. Let us adopt the right, the Christian spirit and attitude as individuals, and at this time of opportunity let us insist and urge that our representatives at Washington shall adopt a like spirit and attitude. May God lead us, our nation, and the world, not in the way of war, but of peace.

Why a Publication Day Offering

There is a goodly number of our readers who do not need to be told why it is important to have a generous Publication Day Offering; they fully appreciate the need and respond accordingly. But there is another considerable portion, larger than the former group, who have not yet been brought to understand the need and are asking "Why?" And we are glad for this opportunity of bringing this matter to their attention again, for among this large group there are many real friends of our publishing interests.

1. The very evident reason for the taking of this annual offering is to pay for the three-story building in which our publishing interests are housed. We bought the building, as has frequently been said, on faith, and depended on the offerings of the churches to meet the payments, and unless offerings are taken the payments cannot be made as planned.

2. This offering is important and should be large in order to cut down as much as possible the interest money that is being annually paid out on the money that was borrowed to buy the building. This debt ought to be liquidated soon so as to save this interest money to be used in kingdom extension through the printed page.

3. The churches ought to contribute by this means to the purchase of a home for our publishing interests because the publications that serve the brotherhood could not possibly provide their own home and equipment when the field of their market is limited to a constituency the size of ours. It would cost very little more to produce a literature for a church many times as large as ours and the receipts from the sale of such literature would be increased many fold. In such a case we might talk about our literature being self-supporting in certain of its departments, but such is impossible with conditions as they are. It is true that money is made from job printing done by our Publishing House, but that can scarcely be made adequate to meet our needs, because competition is so rife and machinery necessary for successful competition on a large scale is prohibitive in price.

4. The churches ought to contribute to the support and provisioning of its Publishing House because the making of a denominational literature, which is the purpose of its existence, is a moral investment and not a financial proposition. We have no more right to ask if the making of a church literature pays from a dollars and cents standpoint any more than we have to ask if foreign missions or Christian education pays financially. It is a matter of promoting a cause that we are concerned with, and not a business enterprise. It is the task of propagating the Whole Gospel plea that challenges us. That being the nature of the case, the membership of the Brethren church far and wide have an inescapable obligation for the support of its Publishing House.

Much more might be said, but this should be sufficient to bring to all careful readers some conception of the reason and urgency for a Publication Day Offering, and we pray that the spirit of God may move upon the hearts of our people and cause them to respond as the need deserves.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Business Manager is asking this week for a large Publication Day offering, and we have voiced that call repeatedly and again say, Amen.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, General Home Mission Secretary, reports that new life is being manifested at Krypton Kentucky and that the results are very gratifying. This work was at a very low ebb when Brother and Sister Fred Kinzie went there and took charge, and under their sacrificial labor a much brighter prospect has developed.

Upon his return from Chattanooga, Tennessee this week, where he was in attendance at a Convention of the Association of American Colleges, Dr. E. E. Jacobs supplied us with another brief installment of College News.

Brother Gearhart's report of Home Missions receipts for the two weeks from December 1 to 15 shows a splendid response on the part of the churches. This is a most vital phase of the denomination's task and deserves our most hearty cooperation.

Brother E. M. Riddle, President of the National Christian Endeavor Union, urges the observance of Christian Endeavor week and the taking of an offering by the societies for the work the Endeavor organization has undertaken at Krypton, Kentucky.

From Elkhart, Indiana, where Brother W. I. Duker is pastor, comes word of another quarter's successful ingathering of finances for the building debt. The amount raised was $1,045. Brother Duker's emphasis of group objectives and leadership is unique and at the same time is very successful.

Our correspondent from Falls City, Nebraska, church reports the work progressing nicely under the energetic leadership of Brother and Sister Rowsey. Ten accessions have been received since the last report. A special nine day campaign by the Charles English Musical Company was enjoyed by the congregation.

Brother H. M. Oberholtzer is delighted with his new field of labor at Clay City, Indiana, where he has been since about the middle of December. This is his second pastorate at this place. He finds a splendid group of ready and efficient workers, among them a goodly number of young people.

The supply of extra copies of the "Golden Jubilee and Doctrinal Number" is exhausted and calls are still coming for copies. If any of our pastors received more papers than they could use, it would be a great favor if they would mail them back to our office so that we can provide some with copies who did not receive any.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, Treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, gives his second financial report this week, and it is encouraging to note that the White Gift offerings seem to be increasing in size. The total reported to date is $2,032.71. These two reports have averaged better than a thousand dollars; if they keep coming in this fashion the Association will reach its goal.

From Warsaw, Indiana, comes word through the pastor's letter of a successful meeting resulting in nineteen additions to the church. It was conducted by the pastor as evangelist and the Richers as song leaders. Brother Riddle informs us personally that he is working to build up the largest country religious training school yet conducted in his county.

Brother C. A. Stewart writes of his work at the churches at College Corner and Mexico, Indiana, which are showing marks of progress under his leadership. At College Corner the Sunday school has made marked gains and ten were added to the church as the result of a meeting conducted by Brother Ora Lemert, and at Mexico a meeting conducted by the pastor resulted in two additions.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports his canvass of the churches at Hudson and Pleasant Grove, Iowa. Both these churches have been hard hit financially, especially the Hudson church, but they are to be commended in that they were willing to do what they could. Brother Forest Byers is the pastor at Hudson, and it was reported recently that Brother Homer Anderson has been engaged as pastor at Pleasant Grove. Their total gift of $582 makes the Endowment Fund stand at $200,588.20.

An interesting report of the return trip of the Sickels to their field of service in the Argentine is published this week over the signature of Sister Loree Sickel. It was a "wonderful trip," she says, and apparently enjoyed from every standpoint. Of special interest was their passage through the Straits of Magellan. The outlook is bright for the work at Realico and the sacrificial interest of some of the people, particularly the woman who regularly walked six miles, carrying her baby, in order to hear the word of God, is challenging to the lukewarmness of many of our North American church members.

Our Publishing House

By Prof. C. L. Anspach, Chairman Executive Committee of the Publication Board

A large number of the readers of the Evangelist are a little more familiar this year with the publishing interests than they were a year ago, because of the visit, during Conference, to the Publishing House. Those of you who visited the plant at that time are, without doubt, aware of the fine plant we have here. Therefore, it is hardly necessary in an appeal of this kind to call your attention to the fact that we are obtaining a valuable piece of property for the Brethren church. Your visit made you aware of that fact. It is necessary, however, to bring the Publication Day Offering, soon to be taken in our church, before you. It is necessary, for many think that such a plant as we have should be self supporting. There is some question, as to whether this can be done. Some time in the future, it may be that we will arrive at the place where it will be no longer necessary to appeal to the church for an offering in support of the Publishing House. I know that the time has not arrived when we can run the business without financial support from the church.

The building, in which our interests are now housed was purchased some years ago, and through the efforts of the church, the debt on the building has been reduced to the present amount of eleven thousand, five hundred dollars ($11,500). We are not in a position at present, whereby we can earn enough money on job work to pay off this mortgage. The interest on the loan is approximately eight hundred dollars ($800.00). Now, to earn a sufficient amount of money to pay off the principal would involve the completing of a rather large volume of business.

Profits in a business of this kind result from several sources; first, profits on the publications. It may be pointed out that we ought to make money on our publications, for the prices charged are standard with other publications. It is true that our prices are standard, but we forget that the circulations for our publications are limited. The additional expense to us on an increased circulation of five thousand would be very little, but the profit on the increased circulation would be large. Because of the size of our church membership at large, it seems we can not increase our circulation; therefore, we must be content with a small profit on our publications.

If our profit on publications is limited, we must turn to some other source for profit. We have turned to job printing; not to the extent that we are capable of doing, but at least to as large a degree, as seems possible now. In fairness to those in charge of these interests, it should be pointed out, that because of the very nature of our business it is difficult to do some types of job work. Our literature, The Evangelist and Sunday school papers, must go to press on certain days. On those days, the entire staff must be engaged in that work, which makes it difficult to arrange for job work, at certain periods.

However, an honest attempt is being made to increase the volume of job work, which we hope in time will increase the profits of the business. With this idea in mind a foreman for the printing department, was obtained in order to relieve the Business Manager of certain routine details, that he might have more time to go out and solicit business. Next year's volume of business should show an increase.

At present we are faced with the problem of the mortgage on the building. The money given in the offering is not used for salaries, etc.; it is applied against the mortgage. The money used in this way, is not lost but is being placed in a building, which is an unusual investment. Thus every dollar contributed is saved. So we ask for an offering with no apologies.

Permit your Brethren loyalty to function. Get behind this offering and make it worth while. The larger the offerings, the sooner the mortgage will be paid off.

A SUSTAINING FUND

The religious periodical is just as vital to the life of the denomination as is the college. Indeed, we have no hesitancy in asserting that it is just as vital to the future idealism and welfare of the country and of the kingdom, as is the Christian college. . . . Nothing would be more reckless and short-sighted statesmanship for any church than to permit its periodicals to pass out of existence for lack of support.—Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, Editor "The Herald of Gospel Liberty."

"Then just within the gate I saw a child—
A stranger-child, yet to my heart most dear;
He held his hands to me, and softly smiled,
With eyes that knew no shade of sin or fear;
'Come in,' he said, 'and play awhile with me;
I am the little child you used to be.'"

—Henry Van Dyke.

"FROM THE GOSPEL MESSENGER"

It is with considerable pleasure that we recognize the very kind and appreciative words of our contemporary, "The Gospel Messenger," organ of the Church of the Brethren, relative to our "Golden Jubilee and Doctrinal Number." Because we believe this generous comment is indicative not merely of a very gracious spirit on the part of our fellow-editor, but also of a growing spirit of friendliness and goodwill between members of the two branches of Dunkerism involved, we are sharing it with the Evangelist family. We thank the Editor, Brother Edward Frantz, both for his words of commendation and also of lending his influence thereby to the promotion of the spirit of good fellowship between the churches. Following is "The Messenger's" comment:

"The Brethren Evangelist," official organ of the Brethren church, rounded out 1928 with a golden jubilee and doctrinal number that is one of the handsomest pieces of church literature that have come to the "Messenger" desk in months. This special issue of the "Evangelist" tells the story of the paper from the date of its founding fifty years ago. Other special features are a fine series of articles on some distinctive phases of Brethren belief and practice, liberal use of photographs and an appropriate cover. The editor of the "Evangelist" is to be congratulated on the splendid issue dated December 29, 1928. Nor would we forget the Brethren Publishing Company and the excellent printing to its credit in the publication of the golden jubilee and doctrinal number. An editor may have his dream of what a paper ought to be, but it can not come true without the friendly and efficient help of the printing department. The "Messenger" is happy indeed to extend congratulations to the "Evangelist" on its fiftieth birthday.

The Keystone to the Arch

By Charles A. Bame, D. D., Member Executive Committee of Publication Board

Publications are the mainstay, the keystone to the arch of our whole denominational structure; therefore, Publication Day is of paramount importance. Evangelism has to do with building up and gathering into the membership of our home churches; missions carrying out to the far-flung lines of the uttermost parts of the earth; education with finding and training leaders; but without the printed page to propagate and harmonize and inform, there would be no unity, no harmony, no concord. Just where we are at fault with regard to the use of printer's ink, is not in the scope of this missive to relate. Suffice it to say, that as long as we are burdened with debt and mortgages, we shall not be inspired nor able to do all we should in the way of publicity and propaganda, without which nothing goes in this day of high-pressure promulgation of everything from airplanes to hair- tonic.

The object of Publication Day is to sometime be able to rid our plant of debt and mortgage so that we might come to the place where we shall have some money with which to do more aggressive work with the printed page.

It would be hard to conceive of a better opportunity to have a surplus for publicity and propaganda than the one we should have, if this obligation were liquidated. With 20 apartments from which to receive rent, and with the plant almost taking care of its running expenses without them, we should here have an income which ought to inspire a church to great activity in the publication of books, tracts and literature which would make our voice heard many times further than is now possible. For seven years, and in most of the churches of the brotherhood, my voice was lifted for this and other causes for the advancement in our brotherhood. That it has been silent for some time, is not a sign that I have lost interest and if one should think so, let him now be undeceived. It must happen; the debt must be lifted. The sooner it is, the better we shall be from every angle of our denominational work. It is an investment we should make for the rewards immediate and future that we would reap. Picture yourself, a member of the Publication Board, or manager of the house, or editor, going in and out of this building time after time, with visions of what could be accomplished if some Publication Day, some good member or many good members should say, "This is the last appeal that shall be made for this issue; it is all paid off right now." Some one could do it. Either alone or by challenging others of financial power, it could be done.

I have made a will. In these days of accidents and epidemics and crimes, I think each one who has property should make a provision such as I have made for some cause that is dear to his heart. If by any cause all my family should be wiped out, I have made a provision in my will that my property shall be held in trust by the Publication Board of the Brethren church for the purchase of books for the ministers and missionaries of our church. That provision has been made for many years. That is my own interest in the value of the printed page. I know of no better disposition of property to make than this. No better way to keep telling the story. But I do not want to wait till I am dead. I want to help now. Do not you? Will you not do better this year than you have for many years? Let us get rid of debts and become of age, pushing forward without encumbrance. How easy, if all would do a share!

A Challenge to Devotional Training

By W. H. Schaffer

(Delivered at Mid-West District Conference, October 11, 1928)

In our Christian life program if there is anything which is most needful and yet most neglected it is our devotions.

Out of the 1440 minutes of the day we are ready to give a half hour to reading the newspaper's story of the political campaign, the latest gang uprisings in Chicago, the baseball or football scores. Yes, a half hour probably would not be time enough and we are ready to listen a whole evening to some nonsense over the radio and many other things too numerous to mention. But we cannot find as much as ten or fifteen minutes of the 1440 to read or listen to God's Word, or to speak to him in prayer. We call God "our Heavenly Father," and I am sure that if we listened to our earthly father as little there would be no question as to the outcome. If we enjoy blessings from our earthly fathers because of obedience, is it right for us to ask blessings from our Heavenly Father when we are not willing to be obedient to him?

It is said, "You cannot teach an old dog new tricks but it seems that a lot of them have forgotten the tricks they once knew. It is safe to say that a good majority of this audience knew what the family altar was in their younger days. But it seems as if most of us have outgrown that most important duty on our part and obligation as Christians to those within our walls.

If we are beyond teaching—and God help us if we so claim—then let us turn to younger blood and see what fields and opportunities lie open to us.

Recently in a tour through an automobile factory the guide informed us that the men who assembled the engines were carefully trained in their line of work. If we are to be successful in our Christian life we will have to be trained in our devotional life, and training in the devotional life should be considered important in the highest degree. We realize that the church needs it and that she is dependent upon it for its existence.

If human society is deeply interested in the religious training of her youth, why should not the church be especially concerned about it? Our government, although not dealing directly with religion, is deeply interested in the religious welfare of her youth, for she cannot be indifferent to it. We are reaping the results of neglecting the religious training of the youth in the ghastly butchering, murders and the demon plans that are never executed. It is time now, tomorrow may be too late, to begin teaching the youth of our land, the men and women of tomorrow, at least some of the principles of Christian living, as taught in the Bible and can be had from no other source. It has been well said that, "It is moral suicide for any community to neglect the religious training of the young."

In some localities there has been added to the curriculum of public school education, religious education. As excellent as that may be, yet we realize that religious education in our public schools is quite limited. It may give the pupil a great deal of knowledge and information bearing upon that wide term "religion," yet it may not lead him very far into the Christian devotional life. Even our church colleges, distinctly Christian, give little if any time to training for the devotional life.

Christian education is a more efficient term than religious education, and to complete the circle of its significance it must include the proper cultivation of the Christian life of the individual. Christian education in its broadest and most inclusive sense belongs fundamentally to the church.

If the young souls placed under our care had no real religious nature we might well despair of training their devotional life. Man is inherently religious; nature has put that mark upon him and he cannot escape it. Man without his religious nature would immediately descend to a lower level and the men who do not cultivate this inborn nature soon find themselves in the care of those who have not neglected. Our alms houses and penal institutions house them, and if we refuse to spend our money in training and cultivating that religious nature in our youth, we will have to pay it out in taxes for their support in our jails, penitentiaries and poorhouses.

The statistics of crime prove that colleges and universities, even Sunday schools and churches furnish a considerable number of criminals. Not that our colleges, universities, churches and Sunday schools produce them but that they have failed while giving instruction to create such strength of character as would prevent criminal life.

A constant effort in all the instruction we furnish should be bent in the direction of developing the religious nature and to stop short of this is not truly to educate. Training the devotional life is more than merely imparting religious instruction, it is the cultivation of the personal religious life of the soul. Presenting the facts of the lesson does not cover your full duty of a Sunday school teacher; you must seek to make the lesson contribute to the pupil's devotional life. We do not have to create a religious nature in our children, it already exists in them, but we do have the great task of conserving it and directing its development into the full realization that is possible through the efficacy of the shed blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, on the Cross of Calvary, the only way God has provided for our salvation and communion with him. This is no slight obligation.

A maker of telescopes related that the men in his factory had labored a long time to produce lenses for a new and powerful telescope. One day a party of visitors went through the factory. A lady of the party put out her gloved hand, and, before she could be stopped touched one of the delicate lenses. It required six months to eliminate the effects of that light touch! The soul is more sensitive than we perhaps realize and marks made upon it in tender years may take years to erase, if it can ever be done.

That we have problems is well recognized, but how to deal effectively with them is not so quickly recognizable. What are the different elements that go to make up the devotional life? We rapidly realize that the devotional life is not one element alone but a grand composite and as such must be treated. The terms by which these contributing elements are described are: faith, trust, reverence, worship, obedience, testimony, prayerfulness, service. All these are not like some far off planet but integral parts of the personal Christian life. Each of them must be cultivated or developed. Benjamin Franklin tells in his autobiography that some days he practiced the virtues of patience and truthfulness, another day the virtues of purity of thought and strict honesty, and so on. This plan would not be very satisfactory in the teaching channels of today. While emphasis must be placed at various times upon different elements, such as prayer and obedience, a harmonious development of all should be constantly sought. For example: faith should promote obedience, prayerfulness should assist reverence and worship, obedience should result in service.

We must keep in mind that the purpose of devotional training is not to produce a religious machine that does things because it is organized and fixed to do them but to nourish and develop a life. Christianity is more than a religion, it is a life! It is the devotional life we must train. These various elements, such as faith, reverence, prayerfulness, are not to be considered as mere rules or methods of the devotional life, but as so many small streams flowing into one large stream of Christian devotional training.

But you may ask, "Why is it necessary to train the devotional life?" There is a disposition among some to say that the wisest method for a babe in Christ is to leave him alone as far as the devotional life is concerned. If you leave your garden to itself you will not reap a very goodly supply of vegetables. Yet men who know that on the farm in order to raise successful crops the ground has to be cultivated and worked and cared for, will turn face about and say "no" when the Sunday school needs more room or better equipment to help mould the Christian characters of her youth. They should not wonder why, in later years, the youth are so reckless, irreverent and unchristian. They have given opportunity for the weeds to grow and flourish, while the fine vegetables have been left to do the best they could.

We have seen stunted minds, we have also seen stunted Christian natures. Why? Wrong ideas of Christian life, preoccupation of the soul with worldly thoughts, postponement for decision, lack of a definite plan for life, the tendency to drift, the formation of sinful habits—these are a few of the influences that repress or dwarf the devotional life, and the church is largely responsible for the crop of virtues or vices she raises in her youth. These ideas—good or bad—spring from within. If the outside influences do not help to correct them, then there is little chance for their correction.

God does his part by giving the child a religious nature and it remains for parents and teachers of the Word to conserve this precious endowment in every way possible. There are natural laws of the devotional life, which laws, if carefully studied, will greatly assist in the forming of the right life.

Let us not endeavor to do as the unwise father who brought his son to his pastor and said, "Here is my son, I want you to make a Christian out of him." What a task to give a minister of the Gospel when the home has not helped to contribute its small but precious part.

We speak of the law of heredity, but did it ever occur to you that every child born into this world no matter what parentage has a birthright of religion?

We speak of the law of environment, and environment plays no small role in the lives of us all. How often we have read or seen with our own eyes, young people whose ancestry was far from helpful, lifted by strong Christian influence to a wholly different plane of living in Christ Jesus? How often we have seen young men and women in the very bloom of life start out into the world and become a part of it because you and I have not placed about them the proper Christian environment.

But the question might remain in your minds as to what is, or what would you term the devotional life? In the mind of the writer the devotional life is that personal, intimate, relationship with your Heavenly Father through his Son Jesus Christ, by a careful and prayerful study of the Holy Scriptures, as revealed by the Holy Spirit, resulting in a demonstration of God's Will in our everyday living. The devotional life is practical; it is a vital living force for righteousness and holiness in the lives of fully consecrated Christians.

But you say, "I attend all the church services on Sunday and the prayer meeting during the week; is that not enough?" Enough! Who has ever reached the state where a man or woman can say, "I've had enough, I'm satisfied, I'm content!" No, it is contrary to our real Christian natures. Your devotional life consists of more than attending the set meetings of the church. You are neglecting the greater part of it if you are not daily reading, meditating, deliberating, and making God's Word a living part of your very life. It is the devotional life that puts the "U" in push, and the reason so many Christians count for so little is because the "U"—Christ living in you, that personal living, vital force, is left out and all that is left is like the passing of the wind, -p-s-h. It is the devotional life that puts the power, the dynamic, the dynamite, if you please, in every successful Christian life and enables us to move things when we get under the load. It is that deep devotional life that consoles in time of trouble and deep distress. It is that deep devotional life that makes men and women soul winners for Christ. If we neglect this very important part of our Christian life we can never expect to impart it to others.

As a Sunday school teacher do not endeavor to return to your class and instruct your scholars along lines of devotional living if you, yourself, are not willing to set the example and realize what possibilities are in store for you.

As Christians we have been lax in this part of our Christian life. We do not take advantage of the fine outlines for daily study as found in our church papers and magazines. We neglect the urge of our pastors to read the Bible daily and pray unceasingly. Let us not then, when we realize our opportunity, stand idly by, but make a constant effort on our own part first, and then encourage it on the part of others, to stamp indelibly on character that personal touch and communion with our Heavenly Father so that it will influence the manner of our living.

Hamlin, Kansas.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

METHODISTS INCREASE MISSIONS

At the meeting of the Foreign Mission Board of the Methodist church, $3,451,500 was appropriated for its work in thirty-two countries. This marks a high point in the appropriation of the board for a number of years. This sum will be used in carrying forward the work until the thirty-first of next October. So large an appropriation was made possible by an increase of $105,000 in the giving of Methodists to foreign missions. The Foreign Board feels that this increase in giving marks a rebirth of interest on the part of Methodists. There have been indications among several denominations that the slump into which benevolent giving had fallen was coming to a close, and that increases in gifts might be expected. For the church boards these signs will be most welcome, because for the past few years they have been sorely tried by the failure of the churches to give, and the necessity of carrying on the work. In almost every denomination serious retrenchment has been unavoidable, and work consequently has been crippled.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

PEACE SEEMS ASSURED

It is very gratifying that late reports indicate that there will be no war between Bolivia and Paraguay. The former, on Christmas Day, agreed to submit the questions at issue to the international panel of nine judges established by the Pan-American arbitration conference sitting in Washington. Paraguay had already signified its readiness. The general terms of the mediaion protocol, as drafted after word had been received from both countries as to the conditions under which they would be ready to have conciliation proceed, have been submitted to the two governments, and there is great confidence that they will be accepted. If so, there can be no war before six months or more, and with that much time granted, and an international panel of nine judges working on a settlement, it is all but certain there will be no war. The developments growing out of the threat of war are very interesting. Both Bolivia and Paraguay were members of the League of Nations, and the League very naturally acted promptly in the interests of peace. They were both also members of the Pan-American Union, which was in session and acted promptly. The most interesting thing is, that at the crucial moment the League withdrew from the field, recognizing the paramount right of the Pan-American Union. This may lead the way to a broader Monroe Doctrine, underwritten by all American republics.—The Presbyterian Advance.

OUTLAW CHILD LABOR

In this good year of our Lord, 1928, children are still employed in many, in most, in fact to some extent, in all states of the Union to their harm. This is a matter to be ashamed of just as slavery, peonage, white-capping, and traffic in women were matters to be ashamed of.

Worse, still, children are employed to their hurt in many, to some extent in all, states with the full sanction of the law; for what the law does not forbid, it sanctions by its failure to forbid.

Then, too, in many, perhaps to some extent in all, states child-labor and compulsory-school-attendance laws are violated with a sort of half sanction. It is no unusual thing to find legal agents keeping purposely ignorant of, or slurring over, or winking at violations of one or both of these laws. Prosecuting attorneys sworn to enforce all the laws without fear or favor refuse to prosecute violations of these laws because, forsooth, they do not believe in them. Child labor will continue as a well-established social practice until it is outlawed.

The year 1929 ought to be a banner year in that the people of the different states, realizing the injustice and cruelty of child exploitation, will actually demand that the legislatures outlaw it. Public opinion in all these states ought to be sufficiently enlightened and crystallized to outlaw forever the practice of making beasts of burden of young human beings. Is it?—Mrs. Gertrude Folks Zimand in "American Child."

VICTORY FOR BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

A notable victory for the study of the Bible in the public schools has just been won. On October 15th, Attorney General Smith of Tennessee ruled that the teaching of the Bible in the public schools of that state was not in violation of the State Constitution. The ruling was given in response to a request from the State Commissioner of Education for an interpretation of the article in the Constitution on religious liberty as related to this matter.

"I have no doubt," says the Attorney General, "and it is my clear opinion and judgment, that neither the spirit nor the letter of the Constitution referred to would be violated by any State authorities by including the Bible in the regular course of study, either in the grammar school, high school or university."—Christian Statesman.

THE SACRED PLACES OF PALESTINE

Fanaticism as a substitute for righteousness dies only after long exposure to the storms of ridicule and the light of truth. Just now the Moslems are trying to arouse a cry against the Jews who, very justly it seems to many observers, are unwilling to abandon their claim to a place for prayer at the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem, which marks the bounds of the sacred area of the ancient Temple grounds. The agitation now on between the Arabs and the Jews is a revival of those century-long conflicts which have darkened the pages of history as it records religious rivalry in the Holy Land.

Many of the Christian sites are in the hands of Roman and Greek Catholics, and are most sacredly guarded by the various religious Orders that devote themselves to such interests. It is felt that in the main these places are wisely and reverently protected. Some Christians rightly feel, however, that there are far too many restrictions placed upon those who would reverently enter these shrines. None but Moslems can enter the tomb of our common spiritual ancestor, Abraham, though Jews are more reasonably entitled to visit that historic burial place than the roving sons of Ishmael and Esau.—The Presbyterian.

NEGRO CHURCHES AND MEMBERSHIP

The Department of Commerce announces that, according to the returns received, there were in the United States, in 1926, 42,585 churches, with a colored membership of 5,203,487, as compared with 39,592 churches and 4,602,805 members in 1916.

The total for 1926 is made up of twenty-four exclusively colored denominations, with 36,505 churches and 4,558,795 members, and 6,080 churches, with 644,692 colored members in thirty white denominations. The corresponding figures for 1916 are nineteen exclusively colored denominations, with 34,258 churches and 4,070,286 members, and 5,334 negro churches with 532,519 members in twenty-one white denominations. Two of the denominations reported at the census of 1916, composed exclusively of colored members, have gone out of existence. The data for both census periods relates to churches composed entirely of negro members, and the membership reported does not include negro members belonging to local white churches.

At the census of 1926 the total expenditures were $43,024,259, as compared with $18,529,827, in 1916. Under this item are included the amount expended for salaries, repairs, etc., for payments on church debts; for benevolences, including home and foreign missions, for denominational support, and for all other purposes.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

THE KELLOGG PEACE PACT "WAS MADE TO BE BROKEN"

So says a leading imperialist American daily. Certainly; all laws are made to be broken. The opinion of the law entertained by the "rogue who feels the halter draw" is well known, is never surprising, and is often exemplified even in high places by persons having sinister interests. But the Kellogg pact is not even a law. It is a gentlemen's agreement among nations. Presumably none but gentlemen will sign it. If any others do so, their own hypocrisy and cynicism will be their everlasting stigma. Although not a law, the pact will define a world attitude, set a world standard and fix a world status for every civilized nation. Any nation will still be free to make war, but in doing so it will forfeit its standing as civilized. It will stand before the human race self-branded as a barbarous nation. And what is war? It is any act of physical or economic compulsion directed by one nation against another. The pact clears the ground for the creation of adequate machinery for international justice and peace. Let those who dread international justice and peace sneer at the Kellogg pact.—The Baptist,

MONDAY

A STUDY OF HUMAN HEARTS—Matt. 13:3-8. "Behold, a sower went forth to sow." Jesus is giving his hearers an insight into the differences in human hearts. These vast differences are manifest in the greatly differing reactions observable toward Christianity. The word of God, which is a constant quantity and unchangeable, is sown in the hearts of men and one man reacts towards it as if his heart were like hard ground in which the truth could not possibly find root. Another is like shallow soil over underlying rocks; it can stand no persecution, it has no persistence. Another heart is like thorny soil, too much preoccupied to give room for Christian growth. Then there is the heart that is like the good soil, cleared of all hindrances and renewed and made mellow to its depths. In such a willing, obedient, serious, submissive heart, the truth grows into rich fruitage. But the sobering part of the parable is the closing admonition—"Take heed how ye hear"—we are responsible for the condition of our heart. But if it be hard, God can change the heart of stone to a heart of flesh.

TUESDAY

YE ARE BEING BUILT—1 Cor. 3:9-13. "Ye are ... God's building," Moffatt says, "Ye are God's house to be built." In other words, we are in the process of being built. We have the foundation prepared for us; on that foundation, which is Christ Jesus, we are to build the superstructure. The materials that go into the building are our thoughts and aspirations, our words and deeds, our struggles and perseverances, our successes and failures. We can make of it what we will. But let us remember that the building is God's, and we should build it strong, noble and true.

WEDNESDAY

NEVER GIVE UP—Phil. 3:13-16. "I press toward the mark." I doubt not that Paul often became discouraged; in fact, his letters show that he did, but he was never a quitter. He often made mistakes, but he never gave up the battle to the tempter. He often was hard-pressed and severely persecuted, but he allowed none of those things to move him. He went steadily on. He kept his eye upon the goal. He saw the glimmer of the distant scene, and that gave him cheer and kept him rivetted to his purpose.

THURSDAY

SURPRIZED AT GOD'S WORK—Mark 16:1-4. "They saw that the stone was rolled away." The women, as they made their way to the tomb, were troubled about how the stone would be rolled away, and when they arrived, they found that God had been working for them, doing the thing that was impossible for them. How often are men and women surprised and made to marvel at the working of God's power, when they have been faithful to him. Truly, he does for us exceedingly, abundantly above that which we ask or think.

FRIDAY

MAKING UP OUR LACK—Matt. 11:1-5. "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see." And the thing they saw and heard was men of all types and needs receiving from Jesus just the thing they lacked, the thing they stood in need of. The blind received sight; the deaf, hearing; the leper, purity; the poor, the gospel. And that is what Jesus does to the very limit of human need. No lack is left unmet. Even the supreme lack of all men, life eternal, he makes good unto all who will receive it.

SATURDAY

ANSWERING GOD'S CALL—Isa. 6:1-6. "Here am I; send me." That was Isaiah's answer to God's call, and every man whose name has gone down in history as a builder of the kingdom of righteousness has been a man who has responded to the call of God. In fact, the history of the church is a record of men who have heard and heeded that divine call. Such a call comes to every man and woman.

SUNDAY

THE GROUND OF ASSURANCE—Matt. 18:15-20. "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." The ground of assurance of God's presence, power and sanction in the work we are to do for him is not in the smallness of the number, but in being gathered IN CHRIST'S NAME. That spells efficiency and acceptability in our service for God.—G. S. B.

Adult Teaching and Teacher

By Rev. C. W. Brewbaker, D.D.

Telling is not teaching. Lecturing is not teaching. Standing before a group of men and women asking questions found in a Sunday school periodical is not teaching. Expressing one's opinion or criticising what others teach is not teaching. Teaching is imparting knowledge and the truth in such a way as will draw out the interests of the pupil and inspire him to make the truth taught a real part of himself so that he will express it in his life and service among others. Teaching is really giving life.

The adult teacher should have a rich, vital Christian experience. He is teaching the Christian religion from the Bible and experience. He should be able to say "I know him whom I have believed." He must be a genuine Christian. Men and women will not stand for a sham, a human counterfeit.

The adult teacher must be a student of the Bible. He should know the Old Book thoroughly and teach from it. It is the teacher's text book and should be mastered. In our public and higher schools of learning we require teachers to know their subjects. They must be masters. Why not know the Bible and be intelligent teachers of the Old Book? Some teachers of adult classes kill their classes by riding a religious hobby. They know a few passages of scripture that they think prove their claims and use them so repeatedly that they become offensive. A thorough, orderly knowledge of the whole Bible is a valuable asset to any teacher.

The adult teacher must be a reader and student of other books and of periodicals that will help clarify and interpret the Bible lessons which he teaches. It requires much and constant study to be able to present successfully the real heart of the lesson to a group of men and women so that they will go out into life with higher ideals and a strong passion and purpose to do the will of God in the establishing of his Kingdom on earth.

The adult teacher must study and know his pupils. They are different. They come from all walks of life. Their interests, their needs, their traits, their activities, their environment are different. A teacher should know them personally and be able to fit what he teaches into their lives personally without which his work as a teacher will prove a failure.

A real teacher makes much of prayer. Our Lord, the Great Teacher made much of prayer. He practiced and taught it. The teaching of Gods' word should be coupled with prayer. Do you want your adult class to grow, its members to be faithful, the unsaved to become Christians? Then pray. Pray for them by name. Enter into their life problems. God will hear and answer definitely. Test it by practice.—The Otter-bein Teacher.

THE TRUE MASTER

For one is your Master, even Christ. Matthew 23:10.

The door of the home! The heart door has sometimes opened when the home door is carefully guarded. In many a home Christ is honored as a guest, but not acknowledged as master of the house. A guest is treated with utmost courtesy, and honored with every thoughtfulness and attention. But he is not expected, of course, to alter the appointments and traditions of the family life in the home. He comes, sojourns a while, and goes. The master of the house abides; he directs and controls all, making changes, radical or slight, as he thinks to be good. The home becomes the reflection of his personality. It takes on the shape of his character.

Jesus is a Master. He would dominate us, and then our homes through us, if he may. Would you go through your home quietly and slowly, arm-in-arm with the unseen Christ, and let him suggest changes in appointment and custom, and daily round? This is the Master's right.—S. D. Gordon.

AGGRESSIVE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK IN MEXICO

Just before President Calles retired from office, he was asked by a prominent Protestant leader in Mexico what he thought of the future prospects for evangelical Christianity. To this he replied, "I have broken the ground, and have made the furrows; it is for you to sow the seed."

With the issuance of such a challenge, leaders of the Mexican evangelical churches, both missionaries and nationals, have united their efforts in a National Council of Evangelical churches through which they may work together in behalf of a common cause.

It is significant that their first united request is for aid from America to enable them to have a general Sunday school worker for all of Mexico. Thus do the leaders propose literally "to sow the seed."

In response to the request of these leaders in Mexico, Dr. Robert M. Hopkins, General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association, accompanied by Dr. Marion Stevenson of St. Louis, Editor of Sunday School Literature of the Christian Board of Publication, and Dr. J. Kirkwood Craig of Pittsburgh, General Secretary of the Allegheny County (Pennsylvania) Sabbath School Association, met a group of thirty-five leaders from all the churches in a conference held in the Union Seminary, Mexico City, which lasted from December 3 to 6. Subsequent conferences with denominational groups were also held, the Methodist Episcopal leaders in Puebla, the missions of both Presbyterian Church U. S. A., and Presbyterian Church U. S. in Cuernavaca, the Disciples of Christ in San Luis Potosi, the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Monterey. Representatives were also consulted from the Baptist Churches, the Congregational Churches, the Friends and the Nazarenes.

As a result of these conferences, a program was developed by the Mexican force which has the hearty approval of the World's Sunday School Association and the Committee of Cooperation in Latin America, and which looks toward the placing of a strong leader in the field to develop the religious education work which is so earnestly desired at this time. This program with the necessary budget for its support has been placed before the seven outstanding mission boards interested in its operation, and it is hoped that their favorable action will insure its inauguration at an early date. Mexico has guaranteed for the first year twenty per cent of the financial support required in offerings from local Sunday schools and interested friends.

The eyes of all Latin America are upon Mexico at this time. If evangelical Christianity wins out in the test which it is now undergoing, the whole cause will be set forward a generation. This religious education worker is greatly needed just at this juncture.

the grace and reveals the truth of Christ. It will be helpful to note some instances of his manifestation and work as recorded in Scripture. Peck says: "In many respects the mission of the Holy Spirit in former dispensations was like his work now. He strove with the ungodly, Ge. 6:3; regenerated men as He. 11 shows; comforted God's people, Ps. 51:10-13; brought revivals of religion, as in Josiah's reign and in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah inspired men to teach and write, as in the case of the prophets; and empowered others to do miracles, as Samson, and Elijah and Elisha. Before the day of Pentecost also, he especially filled Simeon and Anna, Mary and Elizabeth and Zacharias, and John the Baptist. But the peculiarity of his mission now is to witness to the fact of completed redemption through Jesus Christ, and to unfold and convey its benefits; and with this intent he has a work in convicting sinners and empowering Christians."

Comforter

"Comforter" is a translation of the Greek word which has been taken over into English in the word Paraclete, which means "called to ones' side," as a lawyer or advocate, to plead one's case in court. "Comforter" (from the Latin fortis, "strong," and con, an intensifying particle) is one who makes very strong, as a powerful advocate would. All this describes perfectly the work of the Holy Spirit.

Jesus, thyself to us reveal,
Grant that we may not only feel

Some dawns of thy grace,
But in communion with thee live,
And daily from thy death derive

The needful strength to run our race.
—Illustrated Quarterly.

No Special Manifestation Now

The special manifestations and outward expressions of the presence of the Spirit we do not expect or desire, as indeed they were only very occasional in the apostles' day. The guards that protect and sustain the young tree we take away when it has become strong and firmly rooted. But the great reality remains, and is as useful to-day as it was in the early church.

"The simple truth is that Christianity itself, with this Somebody left out, would be more of an incredible miracle than the most wonderful acts that have ever been ascribed to the spirit of Jesus. There is no other explanation possible for the rise and power of the religion of Christ except the irresistible power of an omniscient, omnipresent, supernatural Spirit."

The gifts of the Spirit are various, but the fruit of the Spirit is in every life the same; all Spirit-filled Christians are full of love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance. If we lack any of these, it is because we do not allow the Spirit to have his perfect way with us.—Ibid.

Reprove of Sin

God employs three agencies in bringing conviction to a human soul: conscience, Jn. 8:9; the Holy Spirit and the Scriptures. Their work is usually so united that it is impossible to say that one power has been used to the exclusion of another. The Holy Spirit is always present when there is conviction, working with man's conscience or through Scripture, or with both.—Moody. The Rev. McKay observes: "I recently visited Inverness and met there three young men from Skye, whom I spoke to about their souls, and invited to the Savior, 'No,' replied one, 'I cannot come; the Holy Spirit has not yet called me. For six weeks I have been very anxious and waiting for him, but he has not yet come to me!' 'You have been troubled about your soul for six weeks,' I answered, 'then who is it that made you so anxious?' The young man thought for a time, then said very slowly, 'I don't know.' 'Was it the devil?' He smiled and replied, 'Well no; that is scarcely in his line.' For six weeks the Holy Spirit had been striving with that young man, and he was most miserable, almost in despair; all that time he had been doing his best to quench him. I pleaded with him long and earnestly; he wept and sobbed as though his heart would break; but I am glad to say that before we parted he came to a decision, and closed with Christ. How many, like this young man, are waiting for a special manifestation, a special call, while all the time they have the most personal of invitations in the Bible, to trust in Christ for pardon, acceptance, and eternal life."

Our Indifference

"That, for the most part, we are so indifferent to the presence of the Spirit of God is infinitely surprising. The presence of the Spirit,—which Christ himself declared was to be something greater than his own presence, was to bring clearer light and firmer strength, and complete access into the kingdom of God,—does not fill us with wonder, with hope, with exulting thankfulness. If the Spirit, grieved by our indifference, were to rebuke our sin he might speak to us in words not unlike those in which our Lord himself spoke to the Jews of his own time: 'Think not that I will accuse you to the Father; there is One that accuseth you, even Christ on whom ye have set your hope. For if ye believed Christ, ye would trust in me and reverence me, for he spake of me.'"—R. W. Dale.

A Message from Our National President

Dear Endeavorers, Greetings for a Prosperous New Year: Our first letter this year to you, has to do with the celebration of the birthday of Christian Endeavor. February 2nd, 1881 is the date when this mighty organization had its beginning in Williston church, Portland, Maine. Consequently, Christian Endeavor Week will be observed this year, February 3rd to 9th. We would like to urge that every society in our church plan at once for some effective way of observing this birthday and provide ample emphasis for C. E. Week.

Last year we directed our attention to our missionary program in Krypton as a part of our celebration. Every society was asked to present their title for that week for this worthy aim—that of supporting this mission field. This year we are asking no less. We feel it is the best plan we know and the most appropriate time to stress the needs of Krypton.

You will please watch this page for the next few weeks and note what our associate President has to say. Rev. Vanator is our representative on the Mission Board and the head of this Booster committee.

If you have a Christian Endeavor cake with 48 candles on it, write us and report the event. Any questions, write us.

E. M. RIDDLE.

THOROUGH PREPARATION

The great orator, Webster, once asked to give an address on an important occasion in the near future, declined on the ground that the time was too short for him to make the necessary preparation. "But," protested the man who had asked him, "the people so enjoy hearing you talk, they will gladly listen, even if your preparation is limited." "Yes," replied Webster, "that is the very reason why they listen gladly, because I never speak without first making careful preparation."

On one occasion, the noted French statesman, M. Theirs, was congratulated on having introduced into one of his speeches before the French assembly a brilliant impromptu paragraph. "Yes," replied the statesman, "I rose at five that morning to prepare that impromptu paragraph; my brilliant impromptu paragraphs are always prepared with great care well in advance."

One day a noted Sunday school worker was present at the opening of a widely-known Sunday school, and was so deeply impressed with the opening prayer of the superintendent that he spoke to several persons about it, and learned that the superintendent uniformly studied in advance his opening prayer, beginning that study the Sunday night before and letting the lesson and the points of the prayer simmer in his mind all the week.

A wide and varied field is covered by these illustrations. In each case, careful preparation had been made. "But," says an objector, "advanced preparation is often impossible." Perhaps, if the wording is held to rigidly, but in nine cases out of ten it is easily possible. In nine cases out of ten an impromptu speech can be anticipated. The intellect is a singular machine; it wonderfully anticipates expected labor. Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as an extempore sermon or address; with rare exceptions they are prepared at five o'clock the morning, or hours before their delivery.

Careful preparation for every address, before your Sunday school class, before the young people's meeting, at the Literary Society, everywhere! Why? First of all, it places honor upon your audience. They may be few in number, but they are kings and queens in common clothing. They honor you by listening to you. You ought to honor them by careful preparation of what you are to say. Remembering who they are and what they are and what possibilities may be wrapped up in the undeveloped minds before you, you have no right to impose unprepared matter upon them. By a little hard thinking, common argument may be put into such wording as to vastly increase its influence.

You may well respect your own mind by preparing your message. A wonderful thing is the mind of man. It is a marvel that has never yet been fully appreciated. Mountain, plain, sea, sky, earth, are crowded with its achievements; and each passing decade adds to the wonders it brings into human view.

You may well respect the message that you are to utter. When first coined in your own mind, it may seem commonplace. It may not be. If so, may be used in a remarkable way. That has happened again and again. If it is not a real message, worth honoring you would better let it lie unspoken. If it is a real message, honor it by putting it into the choicest form in your power.—T. G. Brownson, in Young People.

Sea-Voyage of the Sickels to South America

Huinca Renanco, F. C. P., Arg.
December 10th, 1928.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

At last we are back on the field, after many months of waiting and longing to be here. Needless to say, we are very, very happy to be home again and the welcome that has been given us has made us feel that it is indeed a homecoming.

We had a wonderful trip this time, under the Norwegian flag. We had everything that one could desire for a perfect journey, rest, quiet, comfortable quarters, good companions, the freedom of a big freight ship, in which we could go and come as we pleased, and the most picturesque of mountain scenery. This ship, Brandanger, followed a straight line from San Francisco to the Straits of Magellan, and at one time we were twenty-five days without sighting land, in fact, one part of the journey we were as far as twelve hundred miles from land. A very rough sea kept us waiting for two days outside the Straits for favorable weather in which to make the dangerous entrance. When the weather did clear we were rewarded with a perfect day. We will ever treasure the memory of that one day's trip in our bag of memories. All day we travelled through a narrow channel, varying in width from one-half mile to one mile of the deepest blue ocean water that I have ever seen, and from its edge arose jagged mountain peaks, snow-capped and glacier-crowned. It is not often that one is privileged to travel all day in such close proximity to both ocean and mountain.

A very interesting change is noticed both in the aspect of the country and the climate as one makes the trip through the Straits, even though the distance is comparatively short, being only about three hundred and twenty miles. West of Cape Forward, which is located at about the central part, the land is a mass of abrupt mountains, mostly of granite or slate, bare on the upper parts but covered either with thick moss or dense beach forest on the lower slopes. The scenery here is grand and savage. The snowcapped peaks supply ice and snow for the numerous glaciers which descend almost to the sea in many places and frequently crown the precipices. Many waterfalls and cascades some of which are of great height fall into the bays. Many times during the day we found ourselves completely surrounded by snowcapped peaks, seemingly forming a barrier to our progress. Through this portion of the Straits we felt extreme cold, but, passing Cape Forward, it seemed that we were opening the door to an entirely different country. We no longer felt the cold, and the country gradually became more and more level until on the eastern side it is low and covered with grass though not a tree is visible. We passed through this part at night, about ten o'clock, so we could see the lights of Punta Arenas, which is the most southern city in the world.

We were up to enjoy both sunrise and sunset those days. Our Norwegian captain told us that there is no place in the world where they are so wonderful, as at the Straits. The entire sky is a mass of wondrous color. Over and over again the words of the Psalmist came to us, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." Early the next morning we were once more in the open sea, headed north.

We were able to take our baggage off at Bahia Blanca, making a shorter trip home for us. One day's trip brought us to Huinca Renanco, where we found a great number of friends waiting for us though it was past midnight. As we gradually fit into the work again, it seems almost as though we had never been away.

We have found much to encourage us. The work at Realico is very promising. It is a town much the same size as Huinca Renanco, but without a Catholic church. The people refused to allow a church to be built there. At the evening services we find a few more new faces each time. The attendance runs between one hundred and seventy to two hundred, and in the Sunday school we have the privilege of teaching eighty bright-faced boys and girls. Many of them make sacrifices to come and hear the preaching that few of us would make. I wonder how many of us would walk six miles to and from services, carrying a year old baby in our arms, and hardly miss a service.

Here at Huinca Renanco we are continually seeing new faces, especially are we encouraged with the fine group of young men who have begun to attend so faithfully, though they have not as yet made the surrender. Please pray for those who are hearing the Word preached that they may be willing and obedient. Also, pray for the number of members of the Huinca Renanco church who have moved away to other places that they may continue to be faithful, even though away from Christian influence and fellowship. Pray for us that he may lead as we seek to present the Whole Gospel in this rapidly growing town.

Yours in his Service,

LOREE SICKEL.

Goodness is the only investment that never fails.—Thoreau.

New Life at Krypton, Kentucky

It is indeed encouraging to know that the work at Krypton is progressing in splendid fashion under the leadership of Brother and Sister Kinzie, who have been in charge of the work for several years. Considering the comparatively small amount of money allowed this mission point, by the National Mission Board, we are well pleased with results. If you have been reading the splendid articles from Brother Kinzie from time to time, through the columns of the Evangelist, you doubtless have rejoiced with them in their accomplishments. We feel that our young people making up the National C. E. Organization will not need to think that the money they have been furnishing to help in the support of this work, is spent in vain.

The evangelistic campaign held recently with Brother R. I. Humbert in charge, resulted in great good, we believe. Their Thanksgiving offering amounted to $31.75, which we consider very good for the Krypton people. We want all Brethren people throughout the Brotherhood to pray for the work and give as the good Lord would direct.

W. A. GEARHART,
Home Mission Secretary.

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF COURTESY

There has been a marked increase in courtesy in business in recent decades. Formerly it was hardly safe to ask a question or make a request of a railroad conductor or ticket agent for fear of being answered by a gruff refusal and snap of the jaw. Now with exceptions so rare that they prove the rule these servants of the company are also servants of the public and are the soul of courtesy and attention in looking out for the needs and comforts of travelers. Even railroad companies found that courtesy paid. A great merchant recently called his clerks together and said to them: "The customer is always right." This bit of advice marked a great advance over the day when the customer was always wrong, and on going into a store and not finding what suited the question was how to get out again without offending and being offended by the clerk or proprietor who had subtle ways of making it plain that any one coming in must buy something before going out. Now you feel perfectly free to take the goods or leave them according as you, and not the clerk, is suited; and if the goods are not found in that store, the clerk or proprietor will freely tell you where they may be found. So it is all along the line of business. Courtesy in any business place is a good advertisement. Courtesy pays. Is this commercializing courtesy? Well, why should not it and all virtues be commercialized? Is not godliness profitable for all things?—Selected.

"Jesus made himself responsible for all our offences, our iniquities, our transgressions, our liabilities, all that was or ever could be against us; He, blessed be his peerless and adorable name!—made himself answerable for all, and died in our stead, under the full weight of our sins."

Love is not the same as service. There may be service without love. Real service flows from love as the sunbeam from the sun.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

HUDSON AND PLEASANT GROVE CHURCHES

Hudson

This church is located only a few miles from Waterloo. Hudson has gone through one of the worst financial upheavals I ever encountered; Florida has nothing on them. I do not think there is a family there that has not suffered. Some of the strongest financial members of the congregation were left penniless. Inflated land values, bank failures, high money rates, taxes, with many other factors, have wrought a financial havoc from which this generation will not recover. What is true of Hudson is generally true throughout Iowa. This is an agricultural state with only a few industries to hold things up and some of these industries went to wreck in the crash; they are however slowly coming back.

The church at Hudson was forced to dismiss their pastor on account of being unable to support him. During the past two years they kept the church opened by maintaining a Sunday school and having preaching services occasionally. Recently they called Brother Forest Byers as pastor who is their present leader, a portion of his salary is being met by people who are not members of the church, who desire to have the church continue. My hat is off to this heroic group of people who are breaking their half loaf to maintain the church. I was entertained in the home of Brother Byers and his family of which I feel like a member, as both Brother and Sister Byers joined the church in Johnstown while I was pastor. The work is going forward very promising with Brother Byers, who with his wife are taking a very active part in things both inside and outside the church. Under the tremendous handicap Hudson did "their bit" and gave $335.00 to the endowment.

Pleasant Grove

This church is often called Williamsburg, as it is located near that place. The building is located in the country and was the outgrowth of the labor and sacrifice of Brother Myers and others.

I found here a small group of people who love the cause of our Lord and who stand faithful and loyal to the church. The people here like all in Iowa have suffered from financial reverses.

They had not been having any regular preaching services, but I understand that arrangements have been now made to do so.

Let us not get the idea because a church is small that it does not count. I find that some of these small isolated churches are often making the largest contributions to the cause in workers and money. Some of the largest personal gifts I have received in this campaign have come from small churches.

While the Pleasant Grove church has not given largely in money, yet they have contributed more workers to the field than some of the larger churches. At the present time there are three from the Pleasant Grove church on the mission field of Africa and another waiting for things to shape up so he can follow. Two of Brother and Sister Myers' daughters are now in Africa and one son is waiting his time. This must give great satisfaction to parents to see their children give their lives to the cause they love.

I enjoyed my stay and work with this group. A church with such a spirit cannot die. The gift received here was $247.00.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

I have just returned from Chattanooga, Tennessee, where I attended the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges, in which Ashland College maintains membership. There were many good papers read and some important topics discussed, but nothing that directly affects our own institution. However, changes are so many and rapid that it is important that we know first hand what is being done and contemplated in the world of colleges.

One encouraging thing happened, we sent a telegram by resolution asking the United States Senate to ratify the Kellogg peace pact.

School has reconvened with the students here and things are moving off as usual. There are but two more weeks before the end of the semester. The week of the 27th, the Girls' Glee Club expects to be in northern Indiana.

Professor C. L. Anspach was at the University of Michigan over the week end.

Ashland City observed the week of prayer, Dr. Bame and our church contributing our share.

We defeated Wilmington in basketball recently, 26 to 20; Baldwin-Wallace in a second game at Cleveland, 42 to 27; and Otterbein, 54 to 36. We lost in an overtime game to Wittenberg, our only loss.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

In response to the unanimous call of the Brethren of this place we are back again in Indiana. It was our privilege to labor with this loyal group of Brethren in the beginning of their work, even before they had a building of their own in which to worship, and we appreciate this expression of their confidence. It is a joy to renew the fellowship in the service of Christ that in former days was so delightful. We have found many former friends both in and out of the church who with others have received us most cordially. It was in this town that our daughter, who is now in Ashland College, was born. Her holiday vacation spent at home was therefore of special delight to her.

Our first Lord's Day service was held December 16, which had been set apart as Homecoming Day, held in celebration of the thirteenth anniversary of the dedication of the church. The pastor preached both morning and evening. The anniversary service, consisting of songs, readings, a brief history of the church and other short addresses, was held in the afternoon. A sumptuous dinner was served in the basement at the noon hour and a delightful fellowship period followed, which afforded a splendid opportunity for us to get acquainted with the membership. Each service was well attended. Several came from a distance. A Christmas program was rendered by the Sunday school on the Sunday evening before Christmas.

We find the midweek prayer service well attended by both old and young, which indicates life and spirit in the work. A wonderful interest is manifested in Bible study, which speaks well for former pastoral and lay leadership. It is evident that former pastors have diligently taught the Word and that the laity have responded appreciatively and have helped to make the Bible precious to the youth. I am especially delighted with the number of children and young people attending each service and with the devotion and interest they manifest. They promise much for the future.

We have not been long enough on the field to make any definite plans yet for the future. We will probably hold a revival meeting before many weeks pass and will otherwise press the cause as time goes on. The work seems to be well organized with a considerable percentage of the laity wide awake and active in the service. Our field is probably not large enough to yield large results, but the prospects seem bright and encouraging. I am thankful and hopeful.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

WARSAW, INDIANA

The Brethren at this place experienced a very profitable two weeks meeting the early part of December. The churches of Warsaw, with one exception, engaged in a simultaneous campaign. Our church made plans early last spring and succeeded in securing Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Richer to assist in these services. The pastor did the preaching and it was a real joy to preach, when everybody was so well prepared for the message, after a wonderful service of song. Pastor and people had a splendid two weeks with these consecrated leaders. They were important factors in the campaign, because they drew to our church many friends at every service. This was no small thing when all the churches were open. The pastor feels that our church had one of the best meetings in this simultaneous campaign, even having the largest number to add to the membership. There were nineteen added to our church, three by letter and the others by baptism. The following week, 65 to 70 from this church journeyed one night to North Manchester to worship with the Richers and Dr. Schutz in their meeting.

Immediately following the special services, all plans were carried out for a splendid Christmas. The children's workers presented the morning service December 23rd, and the same evening the Young People presented the pageant, "To All the People," to a capacity house. (Mrs.) Joyce Saylor directed it.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

COLLEGE CORNER AND MEXICO, INDIANA

Dear Editor: There may be others who are interested in the progress of the churches I serve, so I will proceed to write, first of

College Corner

This is a small rural church in Wabash County, Indiana, but by no means an inactive class. It has been my good fortune to see this Sunday school grow from a small group of about fifty to as high as one hundred and twenty-five under the leadership of Brother John Knee as our superintendent. Brother Knee has served in that capacity for eight years. Our services are well attended and our room is crowded, especially for our Sunday school classes. Our young people didn't have an adequate place for their class, so they shouldered the responsibility of building a class room on the church, which is nearly complete. We have a large group of young people who are very loyal to the church. A more loyal class cannot be found, either among the young or old. But, as in every community, the "fit" has taken a heavy toll of our attendants. Many are sick and many are convalescing which brings down our attendance. In October Brother Ora Lemert of Bryan, Ohio, came to us for a meeting. We were glad when he accepted an invitation to come and preach for us. For two weeks he gave us some splendid sermons. He preached a whole gospel with mighty power. The visible results were ten. Eight of these were men. There was one reconsecration, and the eight men and one by letter were all baptized at one time in the river and received into the church, for which we give God the glory. We consider this to be a good meeting. The field has been well gleaned in past years and was by no means an easy field to work. Every department of the church is active. The W. M. S. is a very live organization. There are not so many, yet they are very much alive, doing the best they can in their field.

Mexico, Indiana

We have now been on this field as pastor eighteen months. We have not made any great growth nor gone by leaps and bounds, but we have made a steady and healthful growth. Our Sunday school under the leadership of Brother Edd Donaldson has gone forward and made some substantial gains. We do not have so many young people here, but we have a mighty loyal class of people who are always willing to stand by every movement for the upbuilding of the kingdom, and who believe in every interest of the church and never seek to shun any financial obligation which is for the church's good. While only few in number yet they have done their part in swelling the ranks of our college students. We have two students at Ashland and one teacher, all of which we are mighty proud.

On November 18 we began a revival meeting, and for two weeks we labored hard, preaching the gospel in our weak way. Mr. Glenn Wagoner of Goshen led our music and the Lord blessed us with many fine messages in song, for which we were grateful. Our visible results were not what we would have liked to see. Two were baptized and received into the church. Yet I am told that never has there been such co-operation among the churches of the town and especially on the part of the Church of the Brethren. I am glad to see some of the prejudice on their part and ours breaking down. We have no alibi. We did our part as best we could and the members did their part and we had fairly good weather. Every one was praying and working. We had good crowds every evening and many evenings the house was full, but so few unsaved were present. We feel that all concerned did their best and we are willing to leave the results with God. We praise his name for victories won and for opportunities for service. Here too there has been much sickness and some deaths, and as a result there has been a heavy toll on our attendance. But everything is looking better now and we are hoping and praying that things will soon be back to normal. Every department of the church is working in a commendable way. Our new superintendent is Brother Charles Balsbaugh, and the W. M. S. is under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Mildred Newman. We are looking forward to greater things under the leadership of the Lord.

C. A. STEWART.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

"Another year! How swift they fly!
As days, and weeks, and months roll by.
But soon shall dawn eternal day,
And all earth's shadows pass away.
Another year! How sweet the thought,
And one with solemn gladness fraught,
That Christ is drawing very near:
Ere this shall close he may be here."

These lines by Phillips Brooks came to mind when recalling that it has been over six months since the last report from Falls City was submitted to the Evangelist. Since the return of our pastor, Brother H. H. Rowsey and wife, from their vacation during August much of interest to our local church has taken place. In this report, however, only those of general interest shall be listed.

The respective visits of Dr. E. E. Jacobs, Miss Florence Bickel, Mr. John Hathaway, and Miss Johanna Nielsen were made here during the months of October and November. We appreciated having these consecrated Christian workers with us. Their messages were intensely interesting and inspirational.

Brother Rowsey was instrumental in obtaining the services of the Chas. English Musical Family for a special campaign of nine days' duration. Previous to their coming he had prepared lists of the names of non-church goers of Brethren preference. These families were visited and invited to the scheduled services. He also emphasized, to the membership, the fact that sincere heart searchings and intercessory prayer are imperative factors for a successful revival. The English Family consists of Mr. and Mrs. English and their daughter and son, composing a congenial and truly consecrated family. The love of God was the dominant note sounded through the series of meetings by unique music and illustrated messages. The youngest members of the family are wholesome young people, interested and happy in the Lord's work with their parents.

The W. M. S. and S. M. M. under efficient leadership are carrying out their programs of activities. Besides meeting regular obligations the W. M. S. collected and sent a bag of clothing to each of our missions in Kentucky. The energetic patroness of the S. M. M., Mrs. Rowsey, has succeeded in lining up a fine bunch of young ladies who are busily engaged, at their monthly meetings, in doing something for "Others." At their last meeting they prepared bandages for our African missions, and at previous meetings they worked on scrapbooks and dressed dolls which were sent to our Kentucky missions for Christmas.

Our Christmas program, under the direction of the Departmental Superintendents, was rendered by the children of the Sunday school. The White Gift offering amounted to $109.55. We consider this a splendid offering as it came so close to that taken for the English Family which was approximately $200.00. A part of our Home and District Missions' Offering had also been received previously. Our local church apportionment for District Missions is $200.00. Besides the White Gift offering a large quantity of food was donated which was distributed to a number of needy families.

The six cooperating churches here observed the Week of Prayer. It is to be deplored that so few church members took advantage of this means of grace.

There have been ten accessions to the church since our last report. Nine came by baptism. Four of the accessions were adults.

Brother and Sister Rowsey are consecrated young people of vision. Less optimistic leaders might become discouraged when lukewarmness and complacent worldliness hinder the efficiency of the church. Evidently most churches have a handicap of greater or less proportions. To warn against discouragements, for laborers in his vineyard, we have this kind admonition and precious promise: "Let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

MRS. H. J. PRICHARD,
Corresponding Secretary.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The work in Elkhart is moving forward steadily but surely. Our work here is rather unique in a way, as we function in organized groups—each group is for certain work rather than individuals. These several groups are working together for a very definite objective. Sunday, January 6, was our quarterly cash offering day, and $1,045 was turned into the building fund. This represents much hard work, yet each group takes a keen delight in "going over the top."

Sister Florence Bickel made her last public appearance, December 30, before her return to the African field. The W. M. S. served a banquet in her honor just before the holiday season. To know Sister Bickel is to love her, and because we know her, we have a deep interest in her work on the foreign field. May God keep her as his own for his work.

We are looking forward to our revival to be held in February by Brother Whetstone of Nappanee. A revival is not the work of one but of the church—We will be ready when he comes.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

OUR LITTLE READERS

JESUS LOVES ME

*In the crowded railway train,
Dimpled cheeks against the pane,
Sang a baby, soft and low,
"Jesus loves me, 'is I know."*

*Then unconscious, clear and strong,
"Little ones to him belong,"
Rose the dear voice at our side;
"Jesus loves me, he who died."*

*Hushed the hum of voices near,
Hoary heads bent low to hear,
"Jesus loves me, 'is I know,
For der Bible tells me so."
So 'mid silence, tearful, deep,
Baby sang herself to sleep.*

*But the darling never knew
How the message, sweet and true,
Raised one heart from dull despair
To the "love" that lightens care;
But I think, beside the King,
I shall some day hear her sing,
"Jesus loves me, this I know,
For the Bible tells me so."—Selected.*

A GOOD SET OF RULES

Here is a set of rules which every boy and girl would do well to follow. It appeared previously in the Canadian Churchman. Read slowly and ponder each item:

Be brave. Courage is the noblest of all gifts.

Be silent while your elders are speaking, and otherwise show them deference.
Obey. Obedience is the first duty of every girl.

Be clean. Both yourself and the place you live in.

Be the friend of all harmless wild life. Conserve the woods and flowers, and especially ready to fight wild fire in forest or town.

Word of honor is sacred.

Fair Play. Foul play is treachery.

Be reverent.

Be kind. Do at least one act of unbar-gaining service every day.

Be helpful. Do your share of the work.
Be joyful. Seek the joy of being alive.

Business Manager's Corner

THINGS WORTH WHILE

This issue of the Evangelist comes out sufficiently early in the year to make it permissible to mention a few things that should receive special attention during the year 1929.

It is true that New Year's resolutions are so infrequently kept that it would seem better in many instances if they had never been made. So we are not going to ask our readers to make any resolutions at this time, but we are going to ask them to do something a great deal more practical than making resolutions. This generation demands action, deeds, not resolves and good intentions, and the sooner the church and the members of the church, and even the members of the Brethren church awakened to that fact the better it will be for all concerned.

Now Is the Time

There are occasions when delay may help matters, but on the other hand there are times when immediate action is essential to success.

For many years The Brethren Publishing Company, through its publications and its pleas has given its best support to EVERY movement and EVERY organization of the church. It has stood back of every missionary campaign, both home and foreign, of every educational campaign, of every Sunday school campaign, back of the Woman's Missionary Society, the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha and of the Christian Endeavor movement of the church. It has given of its services without stint to all these movements, and it expects to continue to do so. Would it seem strange then if the Publishing House should ask the devotees of these movements to turn their thoughts for a time to the needs of an institution that has been "backing them up" so strenuously for all these years and to give some heed to its call for support?

Why This Urgent Plea

We have told our readers over and over how The Brethren Publishing Company bought the building it occupies entirely on faith, and how it has always had faith that the church would supply the funds to pay for the building. Please keep in mind that The Brethren Publishing Company is an organization of the Brethren church, that it owns nothing for itself, but that all its property is the property of the church and it is controlled by the General Conference, so whatever money you supply is not to be considered as a gift, but as an INVESTMENT in the property of the church.

A Great Day at Conference

It was a great day when the General Conference of the Brethren church in assembly at Ashland last August adjourned for a period one afternoon to give the delegates in attendance an opportunity to visit the Publishing House and to see it in operation, and when more than FOUR HUNDRED visitors passed through our office and work rooms to see THEIR publishing house printing and mailing THEIR Brethren Evangelist. It was a happy and cheerful throng that seemed pleased from the greatest to the least, and we are quite sure the pastors who had members of their congregation among these visitors will receive a sympathetic hearing from them if they will themselves prove sympathetic and enthusiastic in making a plea for the LARGEST Publication Day offering the church has ever made.

We will frankly state that $11,500.00 are still needed to complete the payment for the building which in itself is worth at least $45,000.00.

We are not asking any one to pay for a "dead horse." We know that is always unpleasant. But this is a proposition that is very much alive, and we are convinced it is worthy of your support.

Illustrating the Plea

We are making no attempt to catch your eyes and your attention by fancy embellishments and pictures this week. We used up that material in the special anniversary number a few weeks ago, but that all our readers may see how much alive The Brethren Publishing Company has been for the past thirteen years we are inserting here a portion of our annual report as given to the General Conference in Ashland last August.

Thirteen Years' Growth

Do It Now

Sunday, January 27th is the day set by the General Conference for Publication Day, and to give all our churches an opportunity to invest in this special institution of the church. The need is imperative and the opportunity is here. Why not improve it?

It can readily be seen that five and ten cent offerings will not pay off this debt, and not much is gained by saying if each member of the church would contribute FIFTY cents the debt would be paid. There are thousands of members in the church that do not have fifty cents to spare, and it will be necessary for many members to invest fifty dollars rather than cents in this proposition to insure its success. There are many men in the church who can do that. The contribution we reported last week as an advance offering from a good brother was that amount.

Pastors Must Act

We have sent personal letters to our pastors requesting their cooperation in this plea and we trust our requests may be heeded.

Please send all contributions to the Business Manager.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

III. By G. W. Rensch, D.D.

I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth.—III John 1:4.

With amazing tenderness, the dear, old, faithful apostle would thus reach our hearts. With gray hairs and smiling face, with voice as gentle as a mother's, he is saying, "no greater joy;" "no greater joy." But, "no greater joy" must have a substantial foundation—a strong and deep root that there may be flower and fruit. There can not be abounding joy with a feeble life. Strength is not an accident. Growth does not come by chance.

It is the "tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season." Its roots spread wide and strike deep. "My children" who "walk in the truth," are like that, the apostle is saying. "Thou God seest me," should not overwhelm us with fear; rather it should fill our hearts with reverent joy. The All-seeing Eye and the All-pervading Power are our Father's. He knows when his children walk in the truth. He looks on us in love, and is around us for good.

With such a sense of his nearness, prayer can be but a dear delight.

We should covet a deep solicitude for the church. The church is "the pillar and the ground of the truth." Why try to belittle it; it is of God. It has put the Bible into our hands, and been the means of preaching the gospel by which we have been saved. Having been saved through its efforts, why should we not cherish it? Think about it. Study over it. Pray for it. Work for it. Aim to be helpful. Such solicitude will not be lost. It will strengthen the church, save the lost, and greatly enrich our own lives as we thus "walk in the truth."

How can we forget the danger from worldliness in these days of tragedies? There is the lust for power, for wealth, for pleasure; for all that the world calls success. Jesus said, "The cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word." If temptations are greater than ever, never have there been so many good books and papers, good music brought right into our homes, harmless amusements, and good people, as now.

Shipshewana Lake, Indiana.

Signs of the Times

Mr. Rickard and Dr. Torrey
Hoover and the Millennium
Babies and Gas Masks
Sunday in Brazil
Good News from Africa

by
Alva J. McClain

As this is being written, the newspapers announce the death of Tex Rickard, ex-saloonkeeper, gambler and promoter of prize fights. To this event over two and one-half full pages were devoted by the Examiner, leading morning paper in Los Angeles. The story of Mr. Rickard's life will follow in later issues, published serially.

A few weeks ago a man lay dying in Berlin, Germany. Daily dispatches reporting his condition were given front page publicity in the city newspapers. His main distinction was marriage to and separation from a screen star.

Not long before, Dr. R. A. Torrey died, a great Christian preacher, evangelist, author and educator, under whose world-wide ministry hundreds of thousands had been brought to accept Jesus Christ and to live a life of righteousness. If the passing of Dr. Torrey was given any notice in the newspapers, this writer did not discover it.

If you are surprised at this peculiar blindness of the world to the worth and work of a great servant of God, read what the Apostle John says about the Master whom Dr. Torrey served, "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and THE WORLD KNEW HIM NOT." (John 1:10). The WORLD is still blind.

Does the election of Mr. Hoover indicate that the Millennium has arrived? It was a great victory, but here are some interesting figures. According to Current History, there are in this country 21,409,215 voters who believe in the ideals of Mr. Hoover. And there are 15,042,366 voters who swear by Mr. Smith's ideas of government. The margin is exactly 6,366,849 voters.

It looks impressive, but how long will it last? The strength of the Democratic candidate was in the large cities, while Mr. Hoover was strongly supported by rural districts and smaller towns. Population is concentrating more and more in the large cities. How long will it take to wipe out the Hoover margin? There is still need for prayer, even if the President-elect does all that is expected of him.

Medical authorities of the world, but especially of America, are doing wonders in reducing the high rate of infant mortality. Babies for whom there would have been no hope fifty years ago, are now being saved to lives of health by medical skill. This is worthy of applause.

At the same time, military experts from Europe declare that when the next war arrives it will be necessary for even the babies in the cradle to wear gas masks. And they add that the next war is on the way.

Not yet is the world made safe for human life, to say nothing of democracy. The world needs a King, that King who took little children into his arms and blessed them. He will protect the beneficent work of science from the devilish machinations of the war-makers. Read Isaiah, chapter two, verse four.

On Sunday, December twenty-third, Herbert Hoover left Brazil for home. In the morning he attended the American Union Church, where the pastor prayed for his safety and happiness. At noon he gave a luncheon to the President of Brazil. In the afternoon he was taken to the famous Hippodrome race track where the feature race was named Hoover in honor of the distinguished guest.

One wonders whether Mr. Hoover really enjoyed the afternoon. Also what George Fox and William Penn, both great Quakers, would have done under similar circumstances. But this is only the beginning of Mr. Hoover's troubles. It will be more difficult to please the politicians of Washington than the rulers of Latin America.

In a letter just received, dated November 8th, Dr. Gribble says, "Never has the Hand of God been more manifest or prayer more signally answered in the history of the Oubangui-Chari Mission." This is the important sentence in her report regarding the native rebellion. The French government, which had ordered the missionaries to evacuate the Mission at Yaloke, has not deemed this extra step necessary. Dr. Gribble, who had been detained at Irimo by the military forces, has been escorted to Yaloke under military protection where she found the missionaries safe and well.

The native rebellion is not yet over, and the soldiers will continue to reside at the Station for some time. But the missionaries are being given the utmost consideration, and are able to go on with their work. It pays to pray.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

4. What does it mean to be sanctified?—B.

This is an important and an interesting subject of Holy Writ. It must be said at once that within the compass of this reply only the barest outline of the Doctrine can be indicated. The answer must take the form largely of an outline.

(1) The subject of Sanctification belongs, to my way of thinking, to the benefits which Salvation bestows upon the believer in Christ. The beginning of the new life in Christ on man's part is a supreme act of faith. On the divine side it is the supernatural regenerating act of the Holy Spirit. When the initial work of salvation is completed the believer stands accepted before God in Christ. The finishing act is justification and it brings a man into the state of divine acceptance. To justify is to declare just, not to make just. Neither does it mean to acquit in the ordinary sense. The first would make it a mere fiction ascribing a character to man which he did not possess and the latter would mean that he had done no wrong. To justify is the divine declaration of the gracious acceptance of the man by God and that on the sole condition of the faith of the man. The ground for God's action is the finished work of Christ.

(2). In regeneration the new life is begun. In justification one enters into a state of acceptance with God, that is, a state of grace is entered. Rom. 5:1-2. Being in this state one is to grow, that is, in grace. 2 Peter 3:18. Cf. 2 Peter 1:4-8. Paul's doctrine of growing up into full-grown men is fully set forth in Ephesians 4:11-16. In another place he writes, "But we all, with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit (2 Cor. 3:18). There is a human as well as divine side to this perfecting process. The human may be illustrated by the words of Paul in 2 Cor. 7:1 where he says, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The divine side is shown in such passages as, "...Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." But the passage that expresses the goal is Romans 8:29-30. The ultimate goal is nothing less than "to be conformed to the image of his (God's) Son."

(3). This brings us directly to the supreme factor in the development of the spiritual life in Christ, namely, Sanctification. To sanctify, in its simplest New Testament usage means to separate for or to dedicate to God; to consecrate. Since only what is pure, blameless, guileless, can be offered to God the verb comes to mean to purify ceremonially, as in Heb. 9:13. Then to purify by expiation as in 1 Cor. 6:11 and Eph. 5:26. Thus we come directly to the dominant idea of the word, namely, that of separation unto, consecration to, or a setting apart for the service of God. Sanctification is thus also a divine work. The Father is said to sanctify, 1 Thess. 5:23; the Son, Christ, sanctifies, 2 Thess. 2:13; the Holy Spirit sanctifies, Rom. 15:16. Sanctification embraces the whole man. The ministry of the church is set for this very thing. This is

Selecting Sunday School Teachers

One of the most difficult tasks for many of our Sunday schools is to secure enough qualified teachers to care for the required number of classes. There has been not a little emphasis on the importance of Sunday school teachers being really prepared to teach. We have called attention to the steadily rising intellectual standards of public school teachers, and have rightly insisted that we must lift higher the standards for teaching in our church schools. We have said we need trained teachers—teachers who know the word of God, who know human nature, and who know the art of teaching. We have urged the importance of these teachers being the equal to those who face our children in the public schools. And as an ideal it is a good one, and though the ideal can seldom be fully realized, yet we ought not to cease to stress it to the end that no school shall be satisfied with less than the highest possible development of its teaching possibilities.

There is one qualification for a Sunday school teacher, however, that stands out above that of intellectual training or natural ability, and that is, a life truly consecrated to the Lord Jesus Christ. And this qualification has sometimes been overlooked in our zeal to get teachers of training and ability. And at times the teacher problem has been so acute that we have been ready to accept as a teacher almost any one who had the willingness to teach, without regard to any particular qualification. We have the utmost sympathy for those in charge of schools facing such a situation. The problem is not easily solved. The classes must have teachers, so we think, and any one who indicates a willingness to answer our need, we are ready to lay hold on without question or requirement. Or our problem may be not a dearth of teachers, but of efficiently trained teachers, and we are feeling the demand from the classes for teachers of a better quality. The bane of poor teaching has gotten hold of our constituency and dissatisfaction is being voiced. Under the pressure of such a situation we are in danger of overlooking or passing lightly by the spiritual qualifications of prospective teachers who may be well trained, or whose popularity may cause a demand for their services. That is often the easiest and least troublesome course to pursue. But it may not be the wisest in the long run.

Happy is that superintendent or pastor (and the pastor ought to be concerned about the teacher problem) who finds the trained teacher also possessing these higher qualifications, but where such is not the case, the issues are too vital and too far-reaching to be indifferent to the situation. He will need tact, foresight, resourcefulness, patience, skill, positiveness, and a lot of other qualities to deal successfully with the case, but the possible consequences of a do-nothing attitude are too serious to be encouraged. We do not suggest that the situation be handled "without gloves," or that a dynamite bomb be thrown into the teaching problem; a true leader does not use "big stick" methods. But by prayer, caution and kindness the problem must be faced. The unconsecrated teacher must be brought to a realization of her high responsibility for leading a consecrated life and for encouraging her pupils to follow in the highway of true holiness, or else be relieved of her leadership.

It is not too much to place as an essential qualification for teaching a spiritual vision and attainment above the average. We have come to take it for granted that the intellectual training and native ability should be above the average. If one is to occupy a position of leadership, he should have the qualifications necessary to lead. And whether one aspires to religious leadership as a preacher, as a deacon, or as a teacher in the Sunday school, that one ought to realize that the world and the church not only expect but have a right to expect more of him or her than of the rank and file of church membership. It is not enough that a Sunday school teacher shall be an average Christian, any more than it is that a pastor shall measure up to the standard of averages.

They are both leaders in the cause of Christ, and if they are true to their leadership, they must lead not merely in matters of the intellect and formal religion, but in spiritual attainment as well. It is not necessary nor desirable that a teacher should be able to demonstrate that she stands ahead in spiritual attainment of those whom she would teach, but she should show herself ready to deny and discipline self in any way that the Holy Spirit may point out in order to make for her greater efficiency as a teacher and leader of souls.

An unconsecrated and worldly-minded teacher can do serious injury to the school and occasions are not wanting when entire churches have been held back in their progress because of the unrendered and uncircumspect life of a teacher. In one school about which we read recently an incoming stranger offered her services as a teacher and was given a class of boys, and was permitted to supervise the young people's activities. Later the pastor was endeavoring to have a revival and much to his surprise found the young people decidedly opposed to him and averse to attending the meetings. Upon investigating the situation it was discovered that this teacher had been in the habit of inviting young folks to her home to dancing and progressive euchre parties. She had influenced them against the pastor and superintendent, telling them that they were altogether too strict. A quarrel with, and a separation from, her husband about the time her worldliness was discovered resulted in her removal to another city, but it will be a long time before that school will recover from the effects of her evil seed-sowing.

Superintendents and pastors have a right and a responsibility to exercise care in selecting their Sunday school teachers. And in our Sunday school emphases, we need to bring forward the spiritual qualifications of our leaders, and particularly of our teachers. Set the intellectual standards as high as all reasonable resources will justify, but do not put technical efficiency above nobility of life.

Conversion, the First Objective of Evangelism

This is the time supreme for evangelism; let us think of the thing supreme in evangelism. We say it is the time supreme for evangelism in the sense that it has proved to be the time in the year most favored for special evangelistic efforts. We do not believe evangelism ought to be confined to any particular season; rather it ought to be perennial in the church. However, during the beginning weeks of the year and the lenten period intensive evangelism seems as natural and as much to be expected as wheat harvest in July. And during this time when the spirit of evangelism is in the air there is good reason to call ourselves anew to a consideration of the first objective of evangelism, namely, conversion.

There are times when it seems that the idea of conversion is not much in the popular religious mind during evangelistic efforts. Other objectives are allowed to obscure the necessity of and to usurp the supreme place of conversion. The thing we often place first in our evangelistic meetings is the getting of church members. We want to increase the numerical strength of our church. Now the getting of church members is a perfectly laudable ambition, but no church should desire members who are not converted, and before church membership is stressed conversion should be pressed. Sometimes we are actuated by a desire to get financial strength, and we put forth frenzied efforts to enlist the interest of certain substantial individuals, urging upon them the church's need of just such persons as they are. Any church leader knows the importance of men and women of means to the growth and efficiency of the church, but it may be questioned whether any one of wealth, no matter how liberal, is really an asset to the church unless or until such individual has been converted. And the first appeal to the man of wealth as to the man of little means, is that he be converted. Not infrequently in our revivals church workers are actuated by a desire to improve the social standing of their church by the addition of men and women of prestige and character. It cannot be denied that persons of influence and leadership in a community are a great source of strength to a church if they come in by the door of conversion. Any church may well covet such leadership, but God deliver us from being so eager for men and women of social standing that we are willing to compromise the entrance requirements. Jesus made it no easier for Nicodemus to enter the Kingdom than for the sinful woman at Jacob's well. And we dare not. It would be a sad day for the church if the time should come when we would fill up our membership roll with names of people of social distinction and positions of influence without their first having experienced a change of heart. Jesus did not throw open the doors of the Kingdom to the rich young ruler merely because of who he was, but said, "One thing thou lackest." Our first message to the high, as to the man of low station, is "Be ye converted." That points the way to salvation, and it is the salvation of souls that should be our chief concern and not the visible prosperity of our church.

You will read with profit the interesting letter of Dr. J. L. Gillin this week, who reports his visit to a Swiss penal institution.

Those who have problems of a religious or Biblical nature are invited to write them to Dr. J. Allen Miller who is conducting our new "Question and Answer" department each week. Questions may be sent to the editor or direct to Dean Miller at Ashland, Ohio.

The Christian Endeavor Service Superintendent is giving some splendid service, as may be seen by reading the Christian Endeavor department this week. Brother Homer A. Kent answers some questions, and is ready to answer more if those who have problems will take the trouble to write him about them. Address him at 1542—25th Street, S. E., Washington, D. C.

Brother Lester King, pastor of the church at New Lebanon, Ohio, offers a suggestion intended to help keep tab on the isolated members and thus reduce the loss about which there has been much complaint. His suggestion is that the names of non-resident members be published, so that pastors of nearby churches may get in touch with them. Read it, think it over and give us your comment or suggestion.

Brother M. L. Sands, pastor of the church at Muncie, Indiana, informs us that they are in the midst of a revival with himself doing the preaching and Brother Glenn Wagoner leading the singing. The interest and attendance are good and the prospects are bright. The average Sunday school attendance last quarter was 154, and for January 13th it was 168. Church services also are increasing in attendance.

Some are having difficulty in getting money for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund to the right party. It should be sent to J. J. Wolfe, North Manchester, Indiana, and not to Herman Roscoe who formerly handled the money. That reminds us to say that the next special offering after you have taken your Publication Day offering is the two fold offering to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund and the Brethren Home. The date is February 24th.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, gives his third report of White Gift Offerings, and this week again, we notice some very commendable gifts, though this week's total does not quite reach the thousand dollar average of the previous reports. The amount reported to date is $2,922.14. Lanark, Illinois and Hagerstown, Maryland are the two highest this week, both being considerably over the hundred dollar mark.

"Home Dedication Day," suggested by the copy provided this week by Prof. Stuckey on Sunday School page, is worthy of observance and we commend it to our people. Few things are more important than that the home shall be purified, exalted and made more Christian. And the most effective way is to begin within the home itself to build up the right spirit and appreciation of family life. Here is a suggestion that impresses us as being practical and adaptable to all sorts of home conditions.

Dr. C. F. Yoder reports interestingly and encouragingly concerning the mission work in the Argentine. It would seem strange to us to observe Christmas during the summer harvest time, as they have recently done. The growth of the work at Rio Cuarto is especially noted. At Alma Fuerte a mission was launched with a vacation Bible school and a Christmas program. Brother Robert Crees, an Ashland graduate of last June and a visitor in the Yoder home, gave assistance.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie tells of the disasters that have combined to paralyze business in the county in which Krypton mission is located in Kentucky. The latest stroke to the community's life is an influenza epidemic, which has caused a shut-down of schools and churches. One of the greatest needs of the community is adequate and competent medical care. Brother Kinzie says a graduate nurse, equipped with an improvised dispensary and a saddle horse would be a great boon to the work.

President Jacobs' "News of the College" will be read with interest by every friend of the College. His faithfulness in keeping the brotherhood informed concerning the various college activities has had much to do with the growing interest in the task of higher education in our church. A number of things point to the rise of Ashland College in popular estimation in the city of Ashland and the country round about, but particularly the increased demand for the services of its faculty members for special addresses.

Brother W. R. Deeter writes of his change in pastorates from the Clayton-West Alexandria, Ohio, circuit to Carleton, Nebraska. Five were added to the Clayton church and nineteen at West Alexandria during his pastorate. He has been well received at Carleton and has received substantial tokens of the peoples' good will. Four have been added by letter and three await baptism. Brother Deeter is a consecrated and hard-working pastor and with the cooperation of the splendid group of workers with which he is surrounded we may expect a successful work for God in this field.

The correspondent from Harrah, Washington, informs us in a personal communication that a union tabernacle campaign was closed in December, resulting in eighty-seven confessions and fifty-five consecrations for service. "There is no local minister within nine miles with the exception of a Gospel Hall man who preaches at the Union Sunday School twice a month," says Sister F. B. Gould, and she is convinced that "the field is white unto the harvest." They need a pastor who is consecrated to God and to work, and who will stay by the field and develop it.

A pamphlet issued by the Federal Council of Churches gives information concerning Race Relations Sunday, February 10, 1929, and suggests various ways of observing the day. From a small beginning in 1922, says Dr. George E. Haynes, the idea has spread through Home Mission Boards and thousands of local churches and other agencies. "We feel that the widespread recognition of Race Relations Sunday is having a great influence in bringing about a better spirit of cooperation and understanding between the various racial groups in the United States." Among the suggestions for the observance of the day are the exchange of pulpits by white and Negro ministers, visits of choirs, joint interracial meetings by young people's societies, and other groups.

A number of new subscriptions have been coming in since the first of the year, among them being a large increase from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where Brother George Ronk has succeeded in stirring up an enlarged interest in the Evangelist. We thank him for this support, and hope still others will succeed in their intentions of bringing up the subscriptions in their communities. The new features added this year, Brethren McClain's and Dr. Miller's departments and the special messages on first page, seem to be meeting with approval. We also thank our friends for the encouraging words written about the editorial and other departments. For the sake of the larger good we may do, we covet a greatly increased circulation of the Evangelist and a growing feeling on the part of our readers that our church paper is indispensable in their homes.

God's Portrayal of His Church

By Homer A. Kent

For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.

Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.—Ephesians 3:14-21.

The marvelous prayer recorded in Ephesians 3:14-21 is made on behalf of the Church. For the Church Paul desired the mighty strength of the Holy Spirit. For the Church he sought the ever conscious presence of the Blessed Christ. For her he prayed the realization of the knowledge of the love of Christ that is beyond expression, that transcends human thought, that thus she may be filled with the fulness of God. As he thus prays he has in mind not Israel whom he loved as his own soul, though Israelites were included, not alone a local congregation such as that at Ephesus, but the whole "ecclesia" of God. His prayer is for the Church. The Church which is founded upon the person and work of Jesus Christ, which had its beginning at Pentecost and continues to this present day, whose executive head in this world is the Holy Spirit.

The Church therefore is that body of believers who have named Christ as Savior and Lord. It is an invisible body. Its outward expression is the visible churches we see all over the world who acknowledge Christ as their Head. This epistle of Paul to the Ephesians is given over to a portrayal of the Church and the functions of that Church in the world. In depicting the Church he has symbolized it by certain objects which are well known to us all and which serve to help us see the Church as it really is in relation to the heart of God and to the heart of the world. May God help us to understand the Church, which is the grandest institution upon which the sun shines. God honors the man who honors his Church. The man who touches the Church touches God. He who speaks a word against the Church speaks against Christ. It is God's institution.

I. First, the Church is symbolized as a building, a temple. We have it in Ephesians 2:20-22. The church is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth into a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

The building is a growth. We shall not fully appreciate what Paul is talking about until we understand a bit about the method of building temples in ancient days. For example, there is the Ephesian temple of Diana. It took 220 years to build it. It was made of shining marble. Some of the shafts were sixty feet long. The temple was of immense proportions. It was not one building but many. Porticoes, great halls, covered walks. But all "growing" together to give the aspect of one immense building dedicated to the worship of the goddess Diana.

Or take the temple at Karnak, the largest in the world, with its great colonnades, its mammoth pylons, its avenues of sphynxes, its statues, its graceful obelisks piercing the sky, its great corridors, its halls. It covers acres upon acres of ground yet it is so unified as to grow into one temple.

What magnificent truth is hidden away in the symbolism of the building! All believers are parts of the building of God. That building is "growing" upon its foundation, Jesus Christ. A part of it is in heaven today, a part of it is on earth. It shall continue to grow until Christ comes and puts on the capstone. Then we shall have a completed temple. Each individual believer is a temple of the Holy Spirit but no believer is big enough to hold all there is of God, so he dwells in the aggregation of believers which we call the Church. And in that unified body he expresses himself to the world. What dignity this gives to membership in the Church!

II. Secondly, the Church is Symbolized as a Body. God "hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all."

Marvelous beyond comprehension are these words! "This body which is the Church is the fulness, the complement, the filled up receptacle of God. Who is it that makes it so? It is Christ. The Church is the fullest manifestation of his grace and mercy and gifts. She is the full manifestation of his being because penetrated by his life."

A body implies life. The Church is a live thing. The life is Christ. This is why you can never kill the church. The very gates of hell cannot prevail against it.

A body has many members. It has many functions. The foot is not for the same purpose as the eye. If we attempt to walk with our hands we belong to the jungle. Each member of that body has its peculiar service to render which no other member can perform. If we do not know what our peculiar function is we must find out or else we will be misfits in the church. This all being true it is not for us to criticize the services of another. Each must serve in his own way only in the Lord. Not all are good executives. Some are. Not all are good teachers. Some are. Not all are blessed with winsome personalities. Some are. Not all can be the head, else who would be the foot? Christ uses all kinds of people in his Church. There is a place for every one. For a Peter and a John. For a Mary and a Martha. For a rich man and a poor man. For the lovely and the unlovely. All can contribute something to the enrichment of the body of Christ.

That for which Christ pleads in his body, the Church, is purity. He longs for a healthy Church. The tragedy of the Church today is that there are so many within its bounds who are not living as they ought to live and are bringing reproach upon the whole Church and most of all upon its Lord. The Church pure is the Church powerful. That kind of a church made the Apostolic Church the force it proved to be. The lesson from Annanias and Sapphira stands out. They were stricken down because they presumed to lie to God. That was a Church powerful because it refused to permit such a thing as a lie to live within its bounds. Oh, for a Church that is pure, free from reproach, that functions in all its membership!

The Church then is a body. The body the noblest creation of God! Through this body Christ expresses himself to men. It is a part of Christ. Do you realize that your feet are the only feet to run Christ's errands? Your mouth is his instrument to speak his message. Your voice is to sing his praises. Your hands to work his work. Are you Busy for him?

III. Thirdly, the Church is symbolized as a bride. "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the Church (Eph. 5:31, 32). "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ" (II Cor. 11:2).

The picture of the oriental bride may help us here. Her attitude toward her husband is that of absolute loyalty. She says at the time of the wedding ceremony, "I dedicate this heart to love none other but my husband, these hands to serve none but him, these eyes to look upon none other but him, these ears to hear nothing but his praises, these feet to walk but for him."

A like loyalty characterizes the Church of Jesus Christ, his bride, to her bridegroom, the Lord. The true Church dedicates her heart, her life, her talents, her all to him and pledges an eternal allegiance to him. Loyalty on the part of the membership of the Church is one of the crying needs of the day. The visible Church is too much divided. We are not as one army under one Captain. Our loyalty can often be questioned. Let us be so constant in our devotion to him that when his purposes for the Church on earth are done and we are called to sit down with him at the marriage supper of the Lamb we shall not be ashamed.

IV. Fourthly, the Church is symbolized as a family. "Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named" (Eph. 3:14, 15). God is the everlasting Father, Jesus Christ is our Elder Brother and Savior, "and all ye are brethren." Thus a home is pictured, a home where perfect relationship exists. Home has been described as the sweetest word in the English language. Of course the word is thought of in connection with the home that approaches the ideal, where those things and conditions do not enter which make home a hell for so many. We do not think in this connection of the thousands of broken homes in the world where the members are out of harmony.

But the church is the family of believers united by ties closer than the ties of human blood,—yea, by the ties of Christ's blood. In the church there is no caste, no race, no color, no province. We are all one in him.

Have you this conception of Christ's Church? It exists for the praise of his glory. It shall be triumphant. God's purposes cannot fail. It is the body of Christ. It is the greatest of all honors to belong to it. Let us endeavor to so conduct ourselves within the membership of the Church that we shall not in any wise bring reproach upon it, so that Christ may indeed express himself through his body.

Things By The Way

By Dr. A. D. Gnagey

The Knowledge of God

Who can know or understand God? Yet Jesus in his intercessory prayer tells us that to know him, the only true God, this is life eternal. Personal knowledge of God is not only the true secret of happiness, but it is life eternal, life here and now, and life forever more. Real trust in and acquaintance with the heavenly Father, transforms both spirit and life for him who possesses it. The Bible, therefore, is concerned first of all with Christian life rather than with Christian work,—with the character rather than with the career. Personal knowledge of God of which the Bible speaks is, however, but a means to an end; and so far from leading to selfishness must, in proportion as it is enjoyed, fill the soul with that divine love and compassion which ever seeks the good of others and the glory of God. They only truly know God who know Jesus. He is the revelation of the Father. The most outstanding contribution that Jesus made to the world is the revelation of God as a Father. Do we know him as such? Therein lies the way of peace and joy as well as present and eternal blessedness. Only those who love God and Christ have the promise of their abiding presence in heart and life. John 14:23.

Our Invisible Ally

Quentin Hogg did a great work for boys in London. Jem Nichols, a reclaimed lad of the streets, was educated in his school. When Jem was asked in the years after Hogg died how the fight for character was coming on, he replied: "I have a bit of trouble keeping straight, but, thank God, all is well. You see, I carry a photo of Quentin Hogg in my pocket, and when tempted I take it out, and his look is a wonderful help to me, and by the grace of God I am able to overcome." How much more shall we overcome who look upon the face of him who said, "Lo, I am with you always." That promise is the glorious heritage of every true Christian. Do we appropriate it?

A Heathen and a Christian

Euclid showed in himself the true symptoms of brotherly love. When his brother, in his rage, said, "Let me not live if I be not avenged upon my brother." Euclid said, "Nay, let me not live if I be not reconciled to my brother! Let me not live if we be not as good friends!" Euclid was a heathen. Shall a heathen thus outstrip Christians, and put us to shame? Who really was the Christian? The unforgiving spirit is so foreign to everything that Christ ever said and did that no one who harbors such a spirit may claim close friendship with him who said, "Not seven times but seventy times seven." One who carries a grudge in his bosom and refuses to be reconciled has nothing in common with the loving Christ. If any reader of this paper brought with him into the New Year an unforgiving spirit he began the year with a liability which may end in a spiritual bankruptcy.

The Best Samaritan

Excepting probably the story of the Prodigal Son the parable of the Good Samaritan is the most matchless of all Christ's beautiful short stories. In Christ's day he was the highest type of Christian, but not any more. It is utterly foolish to bind up travelers' wounds continually and allow the robbers to remain at large. I surprised my people on a Sunday morning not long ago when in a sermon I said, "There is something better you may do than follow the example of the Good Samaritan." He was a good Samaritan but not the best. The real Samaritan will investigate the conditions which encourage robbery; he will endeavor to make the road from Jerusalem to Jericho safe for travelers. He will even examine the education and early training of the robbers' children. Why did the men become thieves? Are their children likely to be urged by training and environment into the same wrong habit? Social prevention is the slogan of the twentieth century Samaritan, and that is ethically a long way ahead of charitable ameliorative measures. Again and again we need to be reminded of the old illustration that a fence at the top of the precipice is better than a hospital at the foot. Even the Prodigal Son could have done something better than "go home to his father." He might have stayed at home. Then he would have spared himself all of those sad memories which must have haunted him the rest of his days. When the Prodigal came home from the "far country" he brought with him part of that "far country" and it remained with him through life.

"The University of the People"

After the more than four thousand delegates who were present at the World's Sunday School Convention in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1924, had returned home, Lloyd George said, "The university of the people is the Sunday school. Think of what they learn there. The quality of the knowledge is higher and better than they get elsewhere. They come in contact with and they study the most exquisite body of national literature ever compiled. For refinement, imagination, vision, exaltation of purpose, inspiration for the combined qualities there is no national literature like that which is studied in our Sunday school." He also added: "I do not know a better training for politics than a Sunday school training that makes for a thorough knowledge of God's word in its relation to civic life."

"An Old Fashioned Daddy"

At an evangelistic meeting conducted in one of the numerous Methodist churches in this city (Altoona), Dr. Charles F. Weigle, speaking of an "Old Fashioned Daddy," said among other good things: "We have all kinds of institutions for the training of the youth, but the great need of the day is more homes where they will obtain religious training. On the curriculum of home training there are two essential features: Discipline and example. You can not train a child without proper discipline. All discipline must be rooted in love. Love must dominate and dictate. The surest way to send a child to the devil is to give way to all the child's whims and selfish demands. Love is neither easy going nor brutal. It is strong and wise and firm." Then the speaker added: "There are five great needs of modern civilization: A hickory stick for discipline, a mourner's bench for salvation, a library for knowledge, a hoe for industry, and a policeman's club for respect of the law." What a pity to spoil another wise, good speech, admirable and timely, with a glaring inconsistency. How can any one reconcile "love which is not brutal" with a "hickory stick and a policeman's club?" The hickory stick in the home as a means of discipline has long ago been outlawed and no longer has any place there. It is a relic of the past which, if it has a place anywhere, should be consigned to a museum of antiquities. No child has ever been made better by the touch of the "hickory stick." It encourages none of those finer qualities of the human spirit which build character and make for a pleasing personality. On the other hand it arouses anger, develops temper and tends to a "long distance" between child and parent. A slap with the hand on the mouth of a child four years old will rankle in its breast all the days of its sojourn in the home. Use diplomacy, brain, and heart and leave the hickory stick where God put it.

Benevolence and Gratitude

A Russian novelist tells this fable: All the Virtues were once summoned to a festival in heaven. And they all rose up through the air and formed a circle around the throne of our Lord. They greeted one another, telling what they had done, and our Lord hearkened to them and smiled. The Virtues had known one another long and had often met upon the earth. But there were two of them who were not acquainted. They looked at each other from head to foot, but without speaking. Their eyes showed that each was asking, "Who is that Virtue?" Then our Lord said to them, "Are you acquainted?" and they answered, "We have never met before." Then our Lord presented them the one to the other. They were Benevolence and Gratitude. For the first time they had met—in heaven.

Prayer Born Out of a Heart of Love

Many years ago, when Moody and Sankey were holding their famous revival meetings in London, they drove out into the country to look at a gipsy camp in the woods. Mr. Sankey was deeply interested in the gipsies, and spent nearly an hour with them. Standing in the carriage, he sang to them. One of the most interested in the famous singer was a small boy, who climbed up on the carriage wheel. The boy wept as Mr. Sankey sang, and begged that he sing again. Touched by the boy's sincerity, Mr. Sankey placed his hand on the boy's head, and said, "God make a preacher of this boy." It was because of that inspiration that the boy, now known throughout the world as "Gipsy" Smith, ran away from the gipsy band and became a preacher. What a power there is in a short, earnest prayer! "God make a preacher out of this boy." That was all, but it linked him to destiny. We do not know the result that will accrue from a prayer born out of a heart of love.

The Harp of God

By Thomas Gibson

The Harp is one of the most musical instruments known. It was used in the days of "Jubal, who was the father of all such as handle the harp and the organ!"

When Laban had overtaken Jacob, his son-in-law, after he had stolen away from him, secretly, he said to him, "Wherefore didst thou flee away from me and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away with mirth, and with songs, and with harp!"

David was a skillful player on the harp, "and charmed Saul, when he was possessed of an evil spirit!"

In the days of Isaiah the prophet, "The Israelites used the harp in their feasts." The joy of the harp ceased, when the Israelites were in Babylonian captivity. "By the rivers of Babylon they wept, they hanged their harps on the willows."

The harp is one of the most charming musical instruments known. It has a soft, sweet, mellow tone, and when played by a skillful artist, makes delightful music. The harp will be used to accompany the numberless voices that will sing the "New Song" in the Holy City—New Jerusalem,—the future home of the saints of God.

The harp is an emblem of the Word of God. The Lord said to David: "I will open my dark sayings upon the harp." His dark sayings are his deep, hidden mysteries—revealed and made known "by his spirit which searcheth all things." "We speak of the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory."

The harp is an emblem of the Word of God, in that it is an instrument of many strings. The likeness is that the Word of God has many different lines of thought, all converging into one great thought—namely: "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself."

God expects his people to play on all of the strings of his harp. The string of "Justification by Faith;" "Sanctification through the Spirit, which implies holiness of character;" "Righteousness, sanctification and true holiness!" Then there is the string, "The atonement," or the supreme atoning and redeeming sacrifice made by the Son of God, removing for ever the curse that rested upon all the sons of Adam by a broken law. There is the string, "The Virgin Birth." Great is the mystery of Godliness. God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, be-lived on in the world, received up into glory." It is sad to know that Christendom is divided on this fundamental doctrine. A prominent minister, in one of the leading churches of Los Angeles, asked the question, "If Jesus was divine with one earthly parent, could he not also be divine with two earthly parents?" We answer emphatically, No! If both of the parents of Jesus Christ had been earthly, then he would, like all mankind, have been born a sinner. The prophecies relating to his birth would have failed of fulfillment. There would have been no Virgin birth, as predicted by the prophets. The prediction in reference to the plan of salvation would have failed of fulfillment. "The seed of the woman, not of the man, shall bruise the head of the serpent." The Covenant made between the Father and the Son, "before times eternal" which involved the plan of redemption, would have come to naught. One of the larger bodies of Protestant Christians is divided on this fundamental doctrine—the Virgin Birth. At their last national gathering, they took a vote on the question, and the modernistic element was in the majority. But destroy this doctrine—and Christianity falls to the ground.

Another of the strings of God's Harp is "The Doctrine of Non-resistance," refusing to take up arms against your fellowman. The Creator has said: "Thou shalt not kill!" There is the string, "Oath bound secret societies." Jesus said: "Swear not at all." The civil law makes provision for any who object to taking an oath, because of their religious faith. Also, there is the string: "Brethren going to law with Brethren." Paul reproves the Corinthian brethren for this fault and says it was a great wrong among them. He says: "Why do you not rather suffer wrong." Unbelievers were reading their lives and no doubt were saying: "You Christians are no better than we are, who make no profession of Christianity!"

Some are playing on one string to the neglect of the others. They make a hobby of one doctrine. They put great stress on certain commands, and utterly ignore other commands which are just as essential. Many false teachers are in the world who are perverting and "wresting the Scriptures to their own destruction."

It takes a well trained musical ear to detect any discords in a selection of music when performed by musical artists. And so it is with the harp of God. It requires a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures in order to detect false from true doctrine. But if we study the Word carefully there is no reason why we should be deceived. Christ has warned us against "False Christs and false prophets" who shall show great signs and wonders, inasmuch that, if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect." Notice how near the false comes to the true. It can scarcely be detected!

I come in contact with people every day who declare that "God's Spirit beareth witness with their spirit, that they are the children of God." Yet, they refuse to observe certain things that are essential to the witnessing of God's Spirit with theirs.

The last warning Jesus gave, through his faithful servant, when he had a marvelous vision of the Holy City, the future home of the saints, is against meddling with his Word." If any man shall add or take away from the Words of the Book of this Prophecy, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this Book!" What a solemn warning!

THE FREETHINKERS DESIRE NOTHING GOOD

Reading of the operations of the Freethinkers of America and other atheistic organizations one feels justified in coming to the conclusion that they are opposed to about everything good. The president of the organization mentioned is fighting the reading of selections from the Scriptures in the public schools of New York. This gentleman, a Mr. Lewis, wrote to Mr. O'Shea, superintendent of the public school protesting.

"It is generally known that the practice prevails in the public schools of this city," the letter stated, "of opening the sessions by reading selections from a book commonly known as 'The Bible,' together with the singing of religious hymns and similar exercises of a religious character. I have, myself, personally visited several schools and verified this fact.

"I am advised that such reading of 'The Bible' and singing of religious hymns constitute sectarian religious instruction within the prohibition of the Constitution and Laws of the State of New York and the Charter of the City of New York, and that it is a waste of public money."

Commenting on the letter, Dr. O'Shea said only psalms that everybody believes in are read in the schools. He noted that Congress is opened with prayer and that God is recognized in every proclamation issued by the President and in every court. Bible reading, he pointed out, has been carried out in the public schools for generations. "We have many men who don't believe in God," he concluded, "and we don't pay any attention to them. We are not going to trouble ourselves with Mr. Lewis."

That is all that Mr. Lewis deserves. Freethinkers seem not to believe in anything good. If only Freethinkers could think!—The Christian Evangelist.

LYNCHINGS DECREASE

There were 9 persons lynched in 1928. This is 7 less than the number 16 for 1927, 21 less than the number 30 for 1926, 8 less than the number 17 for 1925 and 7 less than the number 16 for 1924. Six of the persons lynched were taken from the hands of the law: One from jail and 5 from officers of the law outside of jails.

There were 24 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings. Three of these were in Northern states and 21 in Southern states. In 23 of the cases the prisoners were removed or the guards augmented or other precautions taken. In one other instance, armed force was used to repel the would be lynchers. Fourteen white men, one white woman and 25 Negro men were thus saved from death at the hands of mobs.

Of the 9 persons lynched, 8 were Negroes and 1 white (Mexican). The offenses charged were: Murder, 2; rape, 2; wounding men in altercation, 2; killing officers of the law, 3.

The states in which lynchings occurred and the number in each state are as follows: Louisiana, 2; Mississippi, 3; Missouri, 1; New Mexico, 1; Texas, 2.—Tuskegee Institute.

THE LOCAL CHURCH ON THE FOREIGN FIELD

A recent survey of the Christian missionary enterprise throughout the world reveals the fact that two thirds of the work is being done by people on the field. In other words, the natives are gradually taking over responsibility for promoting the local church in all of its different activities. No longer can the missionary claim that he is dying for the people in foreign lands. The opposite is now true. In a sacrificial service, he is dying with the native peoples who are sharing in his self-denial and self-renunciation. Out of $1,000,000 given, we learn that to the missionary movement over $700,000 is raised by the church on the field. This is the goal toward which we have been moving through the years. It means the solution of our missionary problem and the production of an independent and self-sustaining church in all lands beyond our own borders.—The Western Christian Advocate.

SOMETHING NEW IN REVOLTS

Readers of Western newspapers have long since grown accustomed to revolts in Eastern lands. This has been the case notably in India and China. For the most part those revolts have been political in character, uprisings against a too dominant authority within the country or against the authority of an outside power. Peoples soon grow to hate authority exercised by people of other nations. In the Near East there is at present a revolt, particularly in Persia and Afghanistan, of a new variety. It is not directed against foreigners or foreign powers but against rulers of their own blood. The spirit of nationalism seems to dominate the revolt, turning the people against the plans of these educated Oriental rulers to Westernize the peoples. These Eastern people are satisfied with their own ideas, manners, and customs and are unwilling to accept the Western ideas and methods. So far, Turkey seems to be conforming to Western ideas under the drive of its aggressive ruler, but Afghanistan and Persia seek to hold to their old ways. It has yet to be proven that the adoption of the superficial side of Western culture will greatly help these people, and in how far it can be lasting. Something deeper and more fundamental is essential for the transformation of peoples than a change in their clothing. So long as a people are satisfied with the forked stick and oxen in tilling the soil, there is little use in changing their external life. Once introduce the modern plow and machine industry and their whole life will be affected. Or, better yet, give them a modern schoolhouse and church to change their ideas and ideals, and of their own accord the superficial features will be transformed. There must be a new idea of God and religious duties and the relations of man to man if a permanent and helpful change in national life is to be effected.—Religious Telescope.

Let us not forget the meaning of conversion, then we shall realize that no one has any rightful place in the church until conversion has taken place, and also that conversion is the first proper objective of evangelism. The word convert means "to turn around," to set one's face in the opposite direction. But it means more than merely turning about, it means turning with or to some goal. It suggests having a new objective in mind, or feeling the pull of a new attraction to which we yield. It suggests that a man is going in the way of worldliness and sin and, meeting Christ, turns about with him. And conversion is just that—turning about from a worldly and sinful course to be with Christ in faith and piety. Use every legitimate argument to turn men's hearts to God and to service in his church, but let us not fail to impress them first of all with their need of conversion. To get men converted should be our first objective of evangelism.

MONDAY

LOVE WITHOUT SIGHT—1 Peter 1:3-9. "Whom not having seen ye love." We imagine it would be a wonderful privilege to gaze upon the benign countenance of the blessed Christ, to see the radiant love-light in his deep eyes, and to hear the words of life fall from his lips with the satisfying freshness of a summer's fountain. Surely the heart would embrace his hallowed presence and love would spring forth in fervent, vibrant life. But those to whom Peter wrote loved though "not having seen" the Christ; as Dr. Jowett once said, theirs was "the love begotten by communion with his heart." They had sensed the Lord's spiritual presence and as "deep calleth unto deep" so their souls recognized in him life's complement and out of that spiritual fellowship the mighty passion of love was born. And he who will allow the Master to visit his heart today and whisper the story of his unsearchable love, will find his soul ready to rise up to meet its Lover.

TUESDAY

REFINING HUMAN NATURE—Mal. 3:1-4. "He is like a refiner's fire . . . and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." Jesus is the great refiner of souls. By his purity he burns out all our dross; by his sympathy he consumes our selfishness and greed; by his righteousness he shames us of our carnality; and by his strength he overcomes our weakness. He gives soul culture.

WEDNESDAY

LIFE'S OUTFLOW—Rom. 14:1-8. All life has its outflow, its influence, a potent relation to all that surrounds it. God has decreed that nothing shall live or exist unto itself. All the planets of the universe move as one and all are inter-related. So it is with the world of men—each is related to the whole and the whole to the individual. We are bound to our fellowmen by ties that no man can undo. Our thoughts and deeds are constantly registering their influence on all about us. It is a serious thing to live, because no man can live unto himself, and no man can recall the influence he has set going in the world. There is one safeguard that we can make, and that is to put Christ at the center of our lives and let his spirit give character to our outflow.

THURSDAY

IN HIS LIKENESS—Psalm 17:13-15. "As for me I shall be satisfied when I awake with his likeness." In the midst of all the desirable things with which we have surrounded ourselves, it is difficult for us to realize that mere things do not satisfy the soul. But they do not. Satisfaction can be had only in the realm of faith and character. No ideal can be nobler or more exalted than the attainment of Christ-likeness. And nothing will be so supremely satisfying as to some day awake to a realization of the likeness of the Divine Presence, with all our earthly likenesses and carnality sloughed off.

FRIDAY

THE POWER TO KEEP SILENT—Luke 23:1-9. "Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing." There are times when silence is more profitable and more noble than speech. And to keep silent at such times is a finer token of character than the most eloquent words. And the situation in which we find Jesus in this scripture is a notable example of such a time. The noise of one's accusers may make headway against any argument save the dignified silence of a soul strong in the consciousness of innocence.

SATURDAY

THE VISION OF THE PURE HEART—Matt. 5:1-8. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." And the implication is that the impure heart shall not, aye, cannot see God. Sin blurs the vision, while purity clarifies it and makes it keen. All the glories and joys of heaven are within the range of him whose vision is magnified by the lenses of purity.

SUNDAY

THE UPWARD LOOK—Psalm 121:1-8. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." Amid all the toils and driving tasks that hold such tyranny over life, we need something to relieve the monotony and to release our earth-bound spirits. The worship of God is the only thing that has power to do that. The blessed Gospel gives men the upward look.—G. S. B.

God's Self-Revelation to Man

The Bible is both a revelation from God and of God. In its sacred disclosures he reveals himself; hence it is a living word. Its consideration will embrace, first, its credentials; second, its contents. It asserts for itself a divine origin. The apostle declares, "All scripture is given by inspiration (in-breathing) of God," by which is meant the actuating energy of the Holy Spirit upon men, under whose guidance they have officially proclaimed his will. It involves revelation, or truth supernaturally conveyed to the minds of "men chosen before of God," and the importation of such knowledge as they could not attain of themselves. Both involve a supernatural quality and impart a permanent authority to the scriptures as the depository of truth. Neither can be surrendered without disaster to the whole Christian system and irreparable injury to faith and life. It seems impossible to believe in God and man without believing also in divine revelation. Human achievements are always incomplete. Man's deepest discoveries and highest attainments need to be supplemented. "The world by wisdom knew not God." The aspirations and necessities of the soul demand a revelation. Apart from this, man is conscious of soul sickness, but has no cure. Only revelation unfolds the moral and spiritual significance of the world in which we live and impart the knowledge which man needs of himself, of his duty and of his destiny. It "is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." It is plain, yet profound. A child can grasp its essential truths; a sage can not comprehend its boundless disclosures. "It's adaptation to intellects of all dimensions is like the light; equally suited to the eye of the minutest insect and to the extended vision of man." It is a universal book, adapted to every condition and experience of human life. It stands or falls together, and must be accepted or rejected as a whole. It does not contain the word of God; it is the word of God.—Practical Commentary.

How to Read the Bible

(1) It is well to read the Bible straight through, to get a bird's-eye view of it, as surveyors make a "preliminary reconnaissance" of a tract they are to survey carefully, plotting it out roughly with a pocket compass and with pacing. In this rapid reading of the entire volume we are sure to make the discovery of whole books which henceforth are favorites, books which at once we wish to read and study with care.

(2) Read it daily. "I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. I wonder why they deprive themselves of the strength and of the pleasure. It is one of the most singular books in the world, for every time you open it some old text that you have read a score of times suddenly beams with a new meaning. There is no other book that I know of, of which this is true; there is no other books that yields its meaning so personally, that seems to fit itself so intimately to the very spirit that is seeking its guidance."—Woodrow Wilson.

(3) Read it in large portions, as we read newspapers and novels. We get a little from a few verses a day—taking them out of their context.

(4) Commit to memory—or as still better expressed, learn it by heart; it will then be in the memory. The two phrases are not identical in deeper meaning.

(5) Get help on the hard places. Many who fail to make the Bible their own, fail because they do not get the help of others who have made it their own. Every Sunday school teacher is to do for his pupils what Philip did for the Ethiopian. And every teacher, in turn, must be taught from wise books. The Bible comes to us from distant lands, from ancient times, and from strange languages. We need commentaries to bridge over these chasms of time and space, of customs and language.

(6) Read it prayerfully. The best Bible commentary is the Holy Spirit in our hearts. Human commentaries remove the external barriers that hide Bible truth, but the Holy Spirit draws it into our lives. "Teach me thy way, O Jehovah" (Psa. 27:11). The two disciples from Emmaus (Luke 24:13-32) needed the risen Lord himself to "interpret to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." Prayer for God's presence and communion with his Holy Spirit should accompany all our Bible study.

(7) Meditate on what has been read, "Every growing Christian is a ruminating animal. One strong Bible text lodged in the memory, and turned over and over and well digested, will be a breakfast for your soul, and in the strength of it you will go through the whole day."

(8) Put its precepts into immediate action.

(9) Tell others about it.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Hide in the Heart

Too often the word lies upon the surface of the mind, like seed upon an asphalted yard. Any passing bird can run away with it! Or sometimes it gets a little more deeply into the memory, but even in the memory it will be devoid of virtue and power. Words in the memory are like marbles in a boy's pocket—infertile and non-germinating.

The word of spiritual truth never fructifies until it reaches the heart. There it reaches its native clime, and begins to unload its mystical power. Then the conditions are emancipating, and truth puts on its glory like a purple robe.

And how can I get it into my heart? I can pray it down. There is nothing like prayer for taking great things into deep places. All true prayer is a deepening ministry, and spiritual words are borne into the innermost sanctuary of the soul. But obedience must cooperate with prayer.—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Christian Endeavor Problems

Question. We have one society in our church and it is composed of persons ranging in age from ten to fifty. Our average attendance is 25 or 30. Our meetings always seem to be interesting, but mostly because the older and more experienced members make them so. Our leaders seem to be perfectly willing to allow the older members to carry on while they sit back and listen. I often wonder if it is not the result of that sin of which we are all of us very often guilty—that of following the line of least resistance. Do you think we should dare to separate these folks into at least Intermediate and Adult societies?

Answer.—I would certainly advise a division. As long as the older people are doing the work of the society the younger people will be reluctant to assert themselves. Experience shows that it is far better to let the young people meet by themselves and do their own work. If they do not do it the purpose of Christian Endeavor is in a large part defeated. Left with responsibility it is often wonderful what young people will do. They are often backward about taking part in a meeting when older folks are present. If you can have but two societies, the division ought to be made, I should say, at about 25 years, depending on local conditions. Of course if the ideal were reached there would be a Junior society including children up to 14, an Intermediate society including those between the ages of 14 and 18, a Senior society including those between the ages of 19 and 35, an Alumni society including those between 35 and 99.

Question. Would it be best to have an older member act as an Advisor to help the leaders at each meeting to really get at the heart of the topics, or should we allow the young people to assume all responsibility?

Answer. Wherever possible Juniors and Intermediates should have a superintendent, one who is sympathetic, understanding, and holds the confidence of the Endeavorers.

Question. What can you do to get young people to think for themselves? Do you believe stated separation would bring about this result?

Answer. My experience has been that given a big job the young people will not fail. But they want to do the work themselves. Challenge their ability and see them respond!

Argentina

The Christmas season is always a busy season for everybody. Here in Argentina, as in other Catholic countries, there are so many feast days in honor of the saints that the Lord himself has a secondary place, and Christmas is not accompanied by as much demonstration as the several days in honor of the virgin or San Antonio and others.

Among the evangelical people, however, Christmas is nearly always celebrated with appropriate programs, usually in charge of the Sunday school, so as to employ the children and fix in their memories the lessons of the day. Unfortunately, the date comes in the harvest time, when, in the smaller places especially, there are many children who must be absent with their parents, helping in the harvest.

In Rio Cuarto this year the program was largely written by Brother Romanenghi. Over three hundred were in attendance and very many listened from the outside and many more returned home. This was on Sunday evening. On Tuesday we had our annual Sunday school picnic with open air meeting in a nice grove across the river. There are many new people interested here, and in spite of being one of the hardest towns in the country the Gospel work has grown more than in almost any other of the older missions.

My own work for several weeks has been in Almaguer, where in company with Brother Robert Crees, we have tried the experiment of establishing a new work by means of a vacation Bible school and a Christmas program.

We were there a month ago to follow up the Bible coach canvass and determine the prospects for a work. We found several families that had attended some in other places, one of which had been actively working. They had been praying for the coming of some missionary when we arrived. We were freely entertained in this home, while a Norwegian civil engineer next door gave us the free use of a small corner hall and an adjoining room. With several benches taken from Rio Cuarto and some boards and boxes donated, we arranged the accommodations. We published circulars and canvassed the town from house to house and had over twenty children the first day and forty-one by the last. They studied the life of Paul and prepared a Christmas program which would have done credit to older schools. Here too the hall was far too small for the crowd that came to the Christmas meeting, and all want us to continue regular meetings.

I have accordingly arranged to have some one go for preaching each Thursday and hope to have a Sunday school conducted by the believers already there. Mrs. Mora was formerly leader of the Sisters Society in Mendoza, and several young ladies want to be baptized and teach Sunday school classes. Their father is postmaster and was baptized in Cordoba. The girls are very capable and had several years' experience in the Sunday school in Cordoba.

Brother Crees has a remarkable facility with the language for the short time he has been here and was a very valuable help to me in the meetings, and I wish he might feel the call of the Lord to take charge of this new work. The town is not large but it has doubled in population in three years and the future is bright because of the great dam being built near by.

The beautiful Catholic church, built by a wealthy woman, has never been dedicated. The church refused to receive it unless the town would donate a square of land for a plaza in front of it, and support the priest for two years, and build a larger parsonage, and some other things, which the town refused to do.

The priest who should come is the same one who goes to Tancacha and is known as a very bad character. The town is very much better off without him. It is a quiet place, without very much drunkenness, but very much given to dancing.

Krypton, Kentucky

Flood, Finance, Fire, Flu

If judgment is rendered here and now in the form of material catastrophe, then this section and especially the county-seat, Hazard, has received her quadruplex judicial sentence. In considerably less than two years four major calamities have swooped down on the above named city and all but one of these have been keenly felt throughout the surrounding counties. Following the terrible flood of May 30, 1927, came a long series of industrial disasters to the coal business. This gradually paralyzed and demoralized business in general, until, in one day, last November, three banks failed (one in Hazard and two in near vicinity). Many men say this hurt the people here worse than the flood. One thing is certain, it hurt the Brethren work at Krypton extensively, for the school funds and teachers' personal accounts were effected, all told to more than $250. There evidently was some crooked inside work, for not a sign of statement or attempt at adjustment has been made. It appears to be an entire loss.

Upon a recent Saturday night, at an hour when her notorious poker games were getting in full swing, with many unregistered "guests" of both sexes under her roof, the largest and principal hotel (a new five-story structure) was entirely destroyed by flames, with a known death toll of five. It is altogether probable other bodies of missing persons are buried beneath the immense quantities of debris.

Now, along comes the fourth blow—that of a flu epidemic, in which almost every home is stricken, schools closed, and other public gatherings forbidden.

It would appear that in all these shocking calamities people would awaken to their self-insufficiency and responsibility before their Creator, but we know the last will be as easily and quickly forgotten as was the first.

As mentioned above, all these damaging circumstances have been felt as keenly in the county's rural districts and small villages as in the city, with the possible ex-

We are now busy starting the new methods and plans for the new year. In two weeks we hope to hold our first annual conference, with lay delegates as well as pastors present.

We are rejoicing that at last our native country is receiving some good words from the press down here. The visit of president-elect Hoover is an event ever to be remembered. Some of the large dailies and magazines published special editions devoted to him and the good work of the United States. A new era of better understanding and kinder feeling seems to be opening and we are thankful, for it will make our work both more pleasant and more successful. Pray for us that we may neglect no opportunity nor be handicapped in the care of our great district, which by common agreement we are now supposed to evangelize and develop. To do this we need more workers and more means. We trust we may have a new motor for the Bible coach soon and a helpers' fund large enough to help the young men who should be in the seminary, and to provide in this way for the needs of a growing work. We could use profitably more than double the amount of tracts which present funds allow us to use.

ception of the hotel fire. And so far as this influenza epidemic is concerned, this has brought to us here some definite conclusions along certain lines: It is difficult to use words in a brief statement so that you might in any degree comprehend the medical situation locally. Doctors, not always A-No. 1, are few and far between, not mentioning the fee, nor the inaccessibility because of bad roads and lack of phone communication, especially at night. Mrs. Kinzie was called out at midnight recently, and went, at great physical cost, when she herself had no business out of bed. But braving the winter night chill in nearly a mile walk, she was able to give such relief that the patient is now on the road to recovery whereas certain death awaited.

These things and volumes of similar material all point to the wonderful opening and opportunity for our people to establish a center here for the relief of these human ills, now so woefully uncared for. Such an enterprise could be made absolutely self-supporting, once established, and the establishment need not be exorbitant. An improvised dispensary and a good saddle horse need not mean any enormous outlay. But, most important is the securing of a registered or graduate nurse. Are there not those who have been looking towards Africa or South America? Indeed, why not look a trifle nearer home first! You will decide, when once on the field, that the opportunities for wide service in your beloved and worthy vocation are more nearly realized in this part of America than you ever thought possible.

Since epidemic has ushered in the new year, with a closing of public places for the first Sunday, we hardly know what the pulse of the new year may be; but the last several weeks of 1928 were exceptionally encouraging in many respects. Church and Sunday school attendance ran unusually high.

The several conditions named above have had no small effect on our school attendance, but we have no complaint, knowing these untoward circumstances. The brotherhood has responded splendidly with bed clothing, wearing apparel and other necessities, and altogether, in a multitudinous manner, the Lord has cared for us, and we give him the praise for everything which may have been accomplished. Thanks are hereby extended to those among the Brethren who have had a part, in whatsoever manner, in making our activities possible.

Will you not give us a place on your prayer list for the year 1929?

FRED V. KINZIE.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The office force is busy here now getting ready the copy for our next three publications—the summer school bulletin, another number called the student activity bulletin, and the annual catalogue. The student activity bulletin is one which we distribute rather generously among the nearby high schools and prospective students. It is the plan to work this territory more fully than heretofore.

The annual catalogue can not be issued early as a rule for there are some things that are never settled until after the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. This year there are several important announcements to be made in this number of the bulletin. As it looks now, the Board ought to meet sometime within the month of April.

There will be a few new students entering this coming semester. Some Ohio colleges are making quite an effort to enlist students for the mid-year as many of the Ohio high schools graduate a large number of students in mid-year. This seems to be a growing custom.

The basketball team lost to Bethany last week, 26 to 32. The County tournament will be held in our new gymnasium as will also the State district tournament. This district consists of three counties, Ashland, Wayne, and Medina. It will be held the first and second days of March. The College Band always plays at these events and in other ways the College assists in making the day pleasant for the visiting young people. The writer spoke at the New London football banquet recently. Several of the teachers in that school are Ashland graduates. I am also to address the Brotherhood of Alexander Mack at Mansfield this Wednesday evening. They are expecting all the Brethren men of the County there.

Some one from the College will attend the inauguration of the new president at Ohio Wesleyan University February 14th. We have opportunity that way to meet many other college representatives.

The pledges taken by Brother Bell are being well paid and I earnestly ask that those who can, shall pay them as rapidly as possible for we will need every dollar we can get together soon. I desire to report more fully soon the situation relative to our standing.

Educational Day

This may seem like an early date to speak of our annual educational day offering. I only desire to say to those who read these notes that your enlarged offering last year was a God-send to the College and it ought to be no smaller this year. We may now capitalize our yearly gifts averaged for the past five years, at five per cent, now at $151,000 and it dare not be less.

The various professors here are doing their share in giving addresses to various organizations, all of which I can not recall.

However, Professor Monroe spoke very acceptably recently before the city Rotary on "Business Cycles." He received many compliments on his effort.

Professor Mason reports satisfactory progress in his work at Ohio State, having passed his examinations in German and French. No one knows, who has not taken graduate work, just what this means but it means a good deal, as one must read French and German at sight in order to qualify for the Ph.D. degree. The church is certainly to be congratulated on having here at the College a group of men of the highest scholastic training united with great earnestness of purpose and devotion.

OHIO TO NEBRASKA

Our last report was from the Buckeye state three months ago. In many ways our work on the Ohio circuit was pleasant and profitable, but was the shortest pastorate we ever held in our 15 years in the active ministry. The folks on the Clayton field did about all they could to make our work pleasant and were very responsive to all our leadings, and seemed to be the most appreciative folks we ever worked with in the state. The extra gifts while on the charge in money amounted to nearly $165.00, besides things supplied to our culinary department perhaps amounting to $35.00. Five new members were added to this congregation in the 14 months we were with them. There were some losses by death and removal, but on the whole the work in general had a fine impetus. We love the Clayton folks and shall never forget their kindness and help while with them. May the Lord bless you good people, is our prayer. They gave us a unanimous call for another year.

At the West Alexandria church, where we lived, there were 19 added to the church roll while with them. We had some losses by death, letter, and removals, but the average attendance at both church school and worship services held up well during our stay with them. The extra gifts to the pastor and family amounted to $25.00 during our 14 months, besides the replenishments of the culinary department by some of the good people, amounting to about $20.00. We closed our work in Ohio October 29th, hitched up to the old "Henry" and took a two day journey down to see the Kentucky caves. Through the courtesy of our good friend, Brother Amos Fudge, we were given a pass through his wonderful "Diamond Caverns," near Monmouth Cave and the Collins Crystal cave. To say the least, this was a rare treat for us all. We shall never forget the thrill and the feeling of awe as we traversed those underground channels sparkling with beauty and grandeur. Any one contemplating a trip to the old state should make it a point to see the Caverns. It will do you good.

Our journey across the states was not without incident, but we refrain from mentioning some of the events because of lack of space. On account of drifted roads and bad weather we left our family in Kansas City, Missouri a few days and we landed from the train in Carleton, Saturday evening, November 3rd, and we preached our first sermon for the good people here Sunday, the 4th. We found the people more than ready to welcome us. The family drove in on Monday evening the 5th and we stayed in the Manse, which had been newly painted and papered to receive our goods and ourselves. The church gathered on Monday evening the 12th and gave us one of the nicest receptions we ever had along with some $20.00 worth of eats of many kinds—enough of some kinds to last us many moons. Here we have found the most people who can do things of any parish we have ever had. Men, women or girls, who can get up programs, sing, play instruments, talk, etc; this conveys to me they have had efficient training in the years gone by. All the auxiliaries are active the year round, and all bills paid, with funds ahead in the treasuries.

The first of the year almost a whole new corps of officers were elected for the church and church school and the work in general has a bright outlook for a good year ahead. Just now we are preparing for our mid-winter revival beginning January 27th and lasting at least two weeks. The Lord being our helper we shall do the preaching, and Mrs. Deeter will lead in the song services. Already we are praying for Victory. At our White Gift service three young girls dedicated their lives for service in the church and Kingdom, and are awaiting baptism. Four were recently added to the roll by letter. Along with the pastors of the other churches and some local helpers we are launching this winter and summer some worthy movements for community welfare, never before attempted in our town. Our work is going to be heavy, but we are glad to be in the harness for the Lord. We ask an interest in your prayers that we may enjoy the labors and receive his blessing and approval. May these treasures be yours also.

W. R. DEETER, Minister.

OUR ISOLATED MEMBERS

The pastor of the New Lebanon, Ohio, church offers a suggestion and starts it in operation for cutting down the loss experienced among our non-resident members. What do other pastors think of it? Your lists or comments are welcomed.—Editor.

New Lebanon, Ohio,
January 17, 1929

Dear Brother Baer:

Am enclosing a list of our Non-Resident Members with the hope that they will be published in the Evangelist. It may be that some are so located that they could attend a Brethren church near their home. And so I would be glad if that pastor could get in touch with them.

It might be splendid if a corner would be kept for this purpose and urge other churches to do the same thing. In this way we might be able to hold more of our non-resident members. Who will be next to follow the procedure?

A SWISS PENAL COLONY

I must tell you about our visit to Witzwil today (April 30). We got to Bern Saturday morning. As soon as we got settled in the hotel we went down to the Federal Capitol building to find out who had charge of the institution. We were told that it was under the Canton of Bern, a fact I had known but had forgotten. The man there referred me to the Director of Police of the Canton Bern. So off we marched to 24 Kramgasse to find him. There I found two clerks, who informed me in German that everyone had gone for the week, as it was 11:30 and the Saturday half-holiday began at 12. He advised me to come back at 9 Monday morning. Well, that was all we could do. So we put in the time seeing Bern, until this morning.

At 9 I went down to the office of the Director of Police. On the way down I had stopped at the old Glockenturm to see the bears come out of a hole in the tower and march around a few times, listen to a wooden rooster crow, and then to the two iron men in the steeple strike the hour. The Director, Mr. Stauffer, was very kind, telephoned out to Witzwil and made an appointment for us. They met us at the station of Ins, near which the farm colony is located and took us about two miles to the buildings.

The founder of the colony is Herr Otto Kellerhals. Thirty-eight years ago when a young man of 23 he went there to start this institution for the Canton of Bern. He had some ideas about how to treat prisoners, especially those sentenced for short terms which he wanted to try out. They gave him this piece of swamp land, a peat swamp, and told him to go ahead. He started with about 50 men. Everything had to be built from the ground up. No money was provided to build the buildings, or do anything else. Today there are 2,700 acres of land in the colony besides enough land in the mountains to pasture 300 head of cattle in the summer. I asked the young Kellerhals, who met us and took us about, how many acres that was, and he replied that they did not know; they only took enough to feed that many cattle.

Mr. Otto Kellerhals had to be in Bern today, so he deputed his oldest son, who is his assistant director, to look after us. He speaks quite good English, so we got along nicely. By the way, all of Kellerhals' children were born there.

The institution now has a large number of large buildings built out of brick with plaster covering. They look like reinforced concrete buildings. In fact many of them have concrete floors up and down stairs. There are barns, stables, shops, houses for the employees to live in, and cell houses for the inmates. Let us look first at the housing of the inmates.

There are 430 men in the Colony, most of them misdemeanants sentenced up to 3 years from the Canton of Bern. However, other cantons which have no prisons for these men may send them here by paying a stated price per man to the canton of Bern. Some of these men are sentenced for life. They also get some workhouse men, i. e., those who have been convicted for vagrancy, non-support, and similar offenses up to 2 years. The Police Commission of the Canton decides which shall come here and which shall go to the workhouse.

In the cell buildings there are 150 single cells. These are for men who like to be alone, or who are first offenders, who are being studied by the officials. Any man can have a cell alone if he wishes. Many men prefer to room with others. First offenders, however, are never at first put in with others. Then they have cells for 3 or 4 men, and large dormitories for 30 or 40. There are 60 employees for the entire institution.

There are no armed guards in the institution. There are no walls. The men, however, are locked in their cells or rooms at night. In the daytime they are at work in the fields or in the shops. When the men go out in groups to work in the fields usually, but not always, one guard goes with each 12 men. However, there are groups which work alone. There are five farms with farm houses where small groups of prisoners stay, some of them with guards and some without. Besides they have one farm for about 30 released prisoners who have been unable to get employment on release. They get food, clothing and housing, but after two months they get 50 centimes a day, i. e., about 10 cents a day. Perhaps at this place it should be said that the Salvation Army and about a half dozen other private organizations have farms for discharged prisoners in Switzerland. They have given much more attention to this matter here than I have found anywhere else.

The industries of the colony are incidental to the conduct of the place and to farming. No products made in the shops are sold on the market. Only agricultural produce is sold. They make their own baskets from the willows which grow on the land. They have a machine shop with lathes, etc., to make things needed on the farm, to prepare iron for building, etc. There is a good sawmill, where they saw all their own lumber from their own timber. Also they have a planing mill, carpenter, and wagon shop, and a blacksmith shop. They make and repair all their own harness, make their own shoes, tailor the suits worn by the men, but get the cloth from the prison at Thorberg. They have their own printing press, book bindery, but only for the printing of the institution.

The big industry is farming. They use about 600 quarts of milk a day in the cheese factory. Besides that they make butter, and give the men all the milk they wish. They have the red and white Swiss cattle, not the Brown Swiss. When I asked him why they did not have the Brown Swiss, he said that they were popular in another part of Switzerland, not here.

They raise the large white Yorkshire hog. Curiously he showed us also a half wild boar. He says that there are wild boars in the mountains and occasionally they come down and cross with their hogs which run loose in the mountains in the summer. In 1927 they sold 138,000 Fr. worth of hogs. The franc is worth 20 cents, so you can figure it for yourself in our money.

In 1927 they sold from the colony 752,000 francs' worth of produce. Of this 260,000 was for live stock, of which the 138,000 noted above for hogs is included.

They do a great deal of market gardening. When we were there they were loading a truck to take to the station to ship a lot of baskets of green vegetables. These baskets are done up carefully, addressed to people in the towns and are sent by parcel post.

One of the main crops is potatoes. They raise thousands of bushels. They fatten their hogs on potatoes. The men were out in the fields planting potatoes when we were there. Others were in a large building cutting up the potatoes to plant.

Every day at 4 P. M. the men have sent to them a quart of milk. In the morning they have issued to them about 2 pounds of bread. They carry this bread in a small sack, and eat of it whenever they wish. We saw them eating their afternoon lunch. They are allowed to take 15 minutes for this lunch. They rise early in the morning, have breakfast in summer at 6, dinner at 11:30, and supper at 7. They work about 10 hours a day.

Certain jobs are preferred to others. The undesirable ones are used for punishment. For example, the Colony gets all the garbage from the city of Bern. Every day there are four car loads shipped out to them. The men undergoing punishment are put to unload this stuff, which by the time it gets there is pretty strong. This is piled in piles and allowed to lie there for about a year and then used as fertilizer.

The milk cows here are kept constantly in the stables. Green grass is cut and fed to them in the stalls. Asked why they did it that way rather than turn the cows out to pasture, Mr. Kellerhals replied that it is a much more economical use of land. Much more can be raised on a piece of land if you mow it, than if you allow the cattle to roam over it. Moreover, in connection with the cow stable they have a fertilizer well into which drains all the liquid fertilizer from the stable. This is pumped out and spread over the grass land after it has been mowed. This is only one example of the way in which everything is saved and used.

They raise and use a lot of oxen for hauling, for plowing, etc. This is a usual practice in Switzerland, so the men are used to it.

Financially the colony has been a pronounced success. It has received no financial assistance from the Canton since 1904. It pays interest at 4% on the capital invested in the plant by the canton of Bern. It had in 1927 a turn over of 1,500,000 francs (Swiss), and turns back into the cantonal treasury every year about 150,000 francs. That is all made from the sale of agricultural products. How do they do it?

While Herr Kellerhals has 430 men to handle 2,700 acres, it must be remembered that he also has that many men to feed, clothe and house. It is only by careful management of the farm and gardens, of the cattle, the dairy, of the poultry, and of the time and energy of the men that he can make that sandy and peat land produce the amount of stuff necessary to provide that surplus. With over 400 men he can cultivate intensively, but it means also that he must not have men stumbling over each other in the work of the farm. They must all work, and they must so work that their labor will show in production. He has so managed the matter, the kind of things produced, that it is possible summer and winter to keep that many men fairly well and productively occupied. Wages in Switzerland are low. The food the men get, while ample for working men, is simple and can all be raised on the farm. They get meat only twice a week. They raise their own grain which they have ground into flour at a mill in a nearby town. The vegetables are all raised on the colony land. The meat is their own product. Cheese and milk are produced in their own dairy. Every bit of manure is saved and put back upon the land. The men make their own clothing, shoes, and almost all the utensils used upon the farm. Of course, when a machine like a plow or a threshing machine is needed, it is bought in the market.

Perhaps one other thing should be mentioned as contributing to the financial success of the Colony. Herr Kellerhals has persuaded the government to allow him to use the money he earns for certain things on the farm without always forcing it and having it in the budget a year or more in advance. For example, if he wishes to buy some new machine, one of which he has never had on the Colony before, that has to be presented in the budget and passed on by the legislature. But if he wants to buy an additional number of an article which has already been approved and provided for by a legislature, or to replace one worn out, he can do so out of the funds of the colony without legislative enactment or warrant of government. That enables him to replace at once outworn machinery, to add new units when they are needed, and thus make the most economical use of the opportunities as they arise. Whatever the cause there is no question that from the financial standpoint Herr Kellerhals has made this institution pay.

I wondered how the Colony had prospered from the standpoint of penology. For after all, no matter how well it pays financially, the main point in caring for 430 men taken out of civil life and made to work for the canton, is not just to make the institution self-supporting, but to protect society from their depredations, and to treat them so that when they go out into society again they will try to adjust themselves to decent citizenship. I asked Mr. Hans Kellerhals, who took us around, whether they had many recidivists. He replied that of course they had some. With some of the men they receive and with the necessity of releasing them on the expiration of their sentence whether they are fit for society or not, no system will prevent relapse. The record of Witzwil, however, is very good. Some of their men turn out very well indeed. While a few examples are no means of judging the system as a whole, there are some very good stories they can tell about their "graduates." For example, one of Herr Kellerhals' sons is now working for one of the graduates of the Colony in a European city. Many of their former inmates have made good in many walks of life. They live a wholesome outdoor life. They are not pampered, but are dealt with on an individual basis by Herr Kellerhals and his assistants who have been at this work a long time and know these men from long experience.

In my judgment such a colony is one of the best means of dealing with such men. What it needs more than anything else is an indeterminate sentence so that some of those who ought never go back into society can be kept.

Herr Kellerhals had us taken to the station after having tea with his mother, a young English woman who was visiting there and himself. We got the train for Bern and felt that we had seen one of the most interesting penal colonies in Europe, perhaps in the world, had we not already seen that in the Philippines and those in India. Yesterday (May 1st) we took the train at 10:05 from Bern and got here at 12:46.

UNSPOKEN PRAYERS

Every thought that flies through your brain is heard in heaven. God hears wishes, heart-longings, aspirations, soul-hungerings and thirstings. Do not grieve, then, if you cannot find words in which to tell God what you want, if you cannot put into well-defined thoughts the hopes and hungers of your heart. When words and even thoughts fail, pray, in silent yearnings, in unutterable longings, and God will understand just as well as if you spoke in common language. Much of our best praying is done when we sit at God's feet and do not speak at all, but only let our hearts talk.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

the human side, so to speak. Read Eph. 4:12-13. It has for its goal the perfecting of the saints, nurturing them into full grown men as measured by the stature of Christ. Read also Heb. 13:20-21. The ideal is nothing less than the perfection of the whole man in personal character. So we may say in a word that sanctification is the attaining of holiness and Christlikeness. Sanctification secures for the believer a character corresponding to his high calling in Christ. So sanctification is surrender, cleansing, consecration issuing in service and holiness. The believer's sanctification in the purpose of God is complete from the first. "When Christ who is our life, shall be manifested, then shall ye (we) also with him be manifested in glory." Col. 3:4.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

RIDDLE-WILSON—Miss Mabel Riddle and Mr. Howard Wilson, both of Rochester, Indiana, were united in holy marriage at the Christian church in Rochester, Sunday morning at 8 o'clock, December 23rd. The bride is a member of the Brethren church at Potosi, Indiana, and the youngest sister of the undersigned, who performed the ceremony. The groom is an active Young People's worker in the Christian church.

REV. E. M. RIDDLE,
Pastor Warsaw Brethren Church.

JEWETT-CRAVER—"A fat tire and a wedding"—Prof. L. L. Garber would say, "a striking contrast," and so it was, December 12, 1928 at 142 Terrace Avenue, Ellet, Ohio. The writer was busy engaged in writing an eight penny nail from the rear tire of his car when two splendid young people appeared on the scene and asked to be married immediately. The request was granted after the writer had wiped the perspiration from his brow and had gone up stairs to get his books and his breath. Thus Miss Dorothy Wilip Craver of Akron and Mr. Joseph Jewett became man and wife. But if the occasion bears a touch of humor, the service was sacred and we wish their happiness in their Christian union.

REV. FLOYD SIBERT.

BAKER-NOE—On Christmas morning, while as we chose to think, the Herald Angel Chorus was singing the "New Song" and the world was rejoicing in the spirit of peace and good will, the Brethren church of Rittman became the setting for a happy marriage service—the first to be held in the church.

At eight o'clock Christmas morning Mr. Roy Baker and Miss Nannie Noe quietly approached the altar and became man and wife. They were accompanied by Mr. Albert Schaad, best man, and Miss Mary Slowers, maid of honor. Mr. Baker is a member of the Brethren church. May their lives be blessed with happiness. REV. FLOYD SIBERT.

IN THE SHADOW

YEAGER—Suffer little children to come unto me, ... for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

Mary Madlyn Yeager was born August 15, 1926 and departed this life at her home, October 27, 1928. She leaves to mourn her loss her father and mother, a sister and older brother. Services conducted at the home by the writer.

REV. FLOYD SIBERT.

WEAVER—J. Arthur Weaver son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Weaver, of Lakemore, Ohio, was born January 1st, 1928, and went back to God who gave him November 15, 1928; aged 7 months and 20 days. Services were conducted in the Ellet basement church by the writer.

REV. FLOYD SIBERT.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Silently, like the end of a perfect day, came the end of life on Christmas morning to our dear Sister, Mrs. Alverda New. She was a faithful member of the Brethren church and Sunday school, and in her death we have sustained a great loss.

Therefore he it resolved that the church and Sunday school tender its heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved children and grandchildren in their sorrow, and that we earnestly commend them to the loving mercy of God, who has given immortality and promised a crown to those who love him.

Resolved, that we send a copy of these resolutions to the family, to the Times-Tribune and also to the Brethren Evangelist.

Committee on Resolutions.

Beaver City, Nebraska.

BORING—Helmur Harry Boring, Jr., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Delmar H. Boring, died at the parental home, Conemaugh, Pa., December 28, 1928. The funeral was in charge of the writer assisted by Rev. Geo. Jones, May God comfort the sorrowing parents. AUSTIN R. STALEY.

MCCARTNEY—Jacob McCartney, Sr., was born near Greensburg, Pa., August 16, 1846 and departed this life at his home in Conemaugh, Pa., December 11, 1928, aged 82 years, 3 months and 26 days. Brother McCartney and Miss Sarah A. Coburn were united in marriage December 20, 1860, almost completing 62 years of married life together. To this union five sons and five daughters were born, three of whom preceded their father in death.

Brother McCartney was a charter member of the Conemaugh Brethren church. He was one of our most faithful and beloved deacons. He also served his church as Treasurer and Trustee for a number of years. He was always appreciated and the work of his pastor. His honest Christian life was and will continue to be an inspiration to all who knew him.

As a husband and father he was always faithful, patient, kind and loving hearted. He also willingly shared with these in need, the common comforts of life.

The services were conducted at the church, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Geo. Jones, a former pastor, and by Rev. Charles Ashman. AUSTIN R. STALEY.

BROUHARD—Amanda A. Brouhard was born in Boon County, Indiana, on August 8, 1862, and departed this life at her home in Fort Scott, Kansas, December 27, 1928, at the age of 66 years, 4 months and 19 days. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wysoy. She was married to Mr. J. E. Brouhard, in the county of her birth, in March, 1881.

Mr. and Mrs. Brouhard have been residents of this vicinity for the last 20 years.

Besides her husband she is survived by the following children: C. P., Clyde and Albert Brouhard, Mrs. Florence Lytle, Mrs. Lettie Riley, all of Fort Scott; Mrs. Maud Godard, of Richards, Mo., and Corn Johnston of east of the city. Three children are deceased.

Mrs. Brouhard had been a member of the Presbyterian church of Warrensburg, Mo., for the past 27 years.

She was very quiet and unassuming in her Christian faith, but her neighbors who know her best are free in saying that "She lived the life." I can assure this a great testimony, for it is not what we say, but the life we live that counts. Funeral from the family home, on the afternoon of December 28, 1928, conducted by the writer. A large number of friends and neighbors were present and all show their respect. Many floral offerings also expressed their esteem in which she was held. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in the Oak Grove cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

HETTMANSPERGER—Henrietta Faye Hettmansperger, daughter of George and Marie (Crow) Huddleston, was born at Wabash, Indiana, August 29, 1899, and December 9, 1928 she slipped quietly out of this life and went home to her dear Jesus.

She was united in marriage to Claude Hettmansperger, July 6, 1918. Her husband, loving parents, and one sister—Mrs. Blanche Van Overbake of Chicago; an aged grandmother, and a large circle of relatives and loyal friends mourn her departure.

While in falling health for some time she had only been seriously ill for the past two weeks. She was conscious to the very last, expressing her readiness to answer the call of her Master, and when the end drew near called her loved ones to her bedside and her friends to her loving farewell.

When just a little girl, Faye gave her heart into the keeping of Jesus and became a member of the Brethren church at Center Chapel during the ministry of Brother L. W. Ditch. For some time she taught in the Sunday school. Some years after her marriage she went with her husband to the Christian church at Bachelor Creek.

REV. GEORGE E. SWIHART.

ZOOK—Susan Anna Zook, oldest daughter of Abraham and Mary Zook, was born at Hagerstown, Ind., November 20, 1852, and departed this life at McIntosh, Kansas, December 31, 1928 at the age of 76 years, 1 month and 11 days.

With her parents she came to Iowa at the age of 5 years and spent the greater number of her years on the old homestead south of Osceola, Iowa.

On May 19, 1871 she was united in marriage to Alexander McClintock Price of New York City. To this union six children were born, Mary Sophia, Sarah Elizabeth, Martha Ellen, Jessie Hoxey, Joseph Abraham and Hazel Bianche.

She was preceded in death by the husband, January 18, 1897 and two daughters—Martha Ellen, August 29, 1875, and Jessie H. G. Price, August 18, 1904.

She was a faithful member of the Udeli Brethren church, being one of the charter members.

During the last years of her life she was a great sufferer but she bore her suffering very patiently, never complaining, always thinking of the welfare of others first.

Besides the four children, she leaves 18 grandchildren and 4 great-grandchildren, also two brothers, Martin Zook of M. South, Kansas, and Oliver Zook of Pueblo, Colorado, as well as a host of friends to mourn her departure. She will be greatly missed, but most of all by the children who loved her dearly.

The funeral was held Thursday afternoon at the Fairview church, east of Udeli, conducted by Rev. Studebaker, pastor of the Brethren church of Leon, Iowa. Following the services the body was laid to rest beside her husband in the cemetery adjoining.

MRS. ORA A. POWELL, Udeli, Iowa.

VANCE—Jennie Woodward was born at Sandy Hill, Pa., April 3rd, 1858, a daughter of Ellis B. and Mary Stauffer Woodward. She was married to A. Frank Vance, August 21, 1882. To this union six children were born, three of whom survive—Mrs. Harold Hathaway, Ralph and Jesse Vance. She has been a member of the First Brethren church of Uniontown for 18 years. Her faithfulness to Christ and her loyalty to her church have at all times been noble. She departed this life January 11th, 1929. Services were conducted by the pastor assisted by the Rev. Hissman of the Second Presbyterian church of Uniontown. Burial was in the Sandy Hill cemetery. FRANK GEHMAN.

ROHMER—Mrs. Mollie Rohrer was born March 12, 1872, and died at the home of her sister in Hagerstown, Maryland, on October 8, 1928, at the age of 56 years, 8 months and 19 days. Funeral services were conducted from the Major Church of the Brethren. Interment in the Manor Cemetery. W. S. BAKER.

BOWERS—Daisy Levenia Bowers was born July 25, 1883, and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. M. and M. Smith, at Highamston, Indiana, November 9, 1928, aged 45 years 3 months and 15 days. Funeral services at the home. Interment in the Sharpburg Cemetery. W. S. BAKER.

LEWIS—Mildred R. Lewis, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lewis of St. James, Maryland, died at the home on December 27, 1928, after a few days' illness from pneumonia. Her span of life on earth was but 13 years, 11 months and 27 days. Besides her parents she is survived by four brothers and two sisters.

Mildred will be missed from the church and Sunday school, as her place was seldom vacant.

Funeral services from the Manor Church of the Brethren. Interment in the Manor Cemetery. W. S. BAKER.

ISMINGER—Jacob Isminger was born February 17th, 1830, and died January 8th, 1929, at the age of 98 years, 10 months and 22 days. He and his wife were Baptists, but about forty or fifty years ago through the influence of Rev. Henry Wise and Jacob Murray, they united with the Brethren church. He was an Elder from the time the Quiet Dell church was organized until his death. His wife preceded him three years ago. He was president of the Quiet Dell Cemetery Association and superintendent of the Quiet Dell Sunday school for twelve years. M. C. ISMINGER.

PROFFIT—Mary Hodges was born in Goodland, County, Virginia, and died at her home at Oak Hill, West Virginia, December 22, 1928, aged about seventy-five years. Over fifty years ago she was united in marriage to Mr. William Proffitt, who with a brother and sister in Virginia, and two nephews at Oak Hill, survive her. She had been a member of the Oak Hill Brethren church for a number of years, and remained interested in the work of the church until her death. Her funeral was the first held in the new church. Services by the pastor, and interment in the Oak Hill Brethren cemetery at Oak Hill. FIREMAN ANKURM.

RHODES—Howard Jacob, was born near Fayetteville, West Virginia, March 5, 1881 and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Rhodes. In 1904 he came to Miss Lena E. Rydner, who survives him, with five children and his aged mother in Melbourne, Florida; three brothers and one sister. He met with an accident while at work in the Seaboard mines, near Oak Hill, Virginia, and died the next morning. He was aged 47 years, 9 months and twenty-eight days. He had been a member of the Oak Hill Brethren church for about twenty years. Services by the writer and burial in Hill Top Cemetery, not far from his home.

FIREMAN ANKURM.

WISE—Brother B. E. Wise, who was for many years a member and an officer of the Brethren church at Middlebranch, Ohio, passed to his eternal reward, December 1, aged 72 years and 7 months. He had been in declining health for more than a year, but none thought the end so near until very shortly before his death. He was anointed by his pastor a few days before he died, and found great satisfaction and peace in the service. A very large congregation of his neighbors and friends attended the funeral services, which were conducted by his pastor, assisted by Rev. Warfield, of the Lutheran church, who has been a life long friend of the family. Brother Wise had spent all his life or practically all of the community in which he died, and was thus very widely known, and the more so because he had for many years, served the community in a business capacity. He leaves to mourn his going, the wife of his youth, and a son and daughter, the son having been well known in other years through his frequent contributions to the Evangelist.—Hugo Paul Wise. He is still "carrying on" now as a professor of English in Baltimore University. Death has not been kind to this small congregation, for eight times in as many years he has claimed individuals from the membership, never large at best, and which for want of pastoral care and evangelistic effort, has not grown as it would have done under more favorable conditions. But, undaunted, the survivors press on, looking for "The city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." MARTIN SHIVELY, Pastor.

TAYLOR—Glen Orville Taylor, son of Dora and James Taylor, was born at Chadwick, Illinois, May 5, 1862, and died at the James Lemhart home near Milledgeville, Illinois, December 31, 1928, aged 26 years, 7 months and 26 days. Bright's disease was the cause of death. Everything medical skill could do was done to save Mr. Taylor's life. He married Miss Lemhart on June 9, 1920. Those who mourn his departure are his wife, three sisters and one brother, together with the more distant relatives.

Funeral was held in the Brethren church of Milledgeville, Illinois, a number of who have become members of the church. December 31, 1928, the pastor officiating. Burial in the Dutchtown Cemetery near Milledgeville, Illinois. GEO. E. CONE.

Business Manager's Corner

"THE LAST CHANCE"

As one tours through our country by automobile one notices the many things that are more or less common to nearly all parts of the country, such as common names for tourists' camps, lunch rooms or filling stations, etc. Frequently as one nears the outskirts of a city the sign, "Last Chance Filling Station" comes into view, and very naturally one will glance at the gasoline gauge to see if the supply of gasoline is sufficient for the distance to the next town.

We are neither buying nor trying to sell gasoline at this time, but we do want to improve this "last chance" to call your attention to the need for a liberal Publication Day Offering on Sunday the twenty-seventh.

Brethren Annual and Conference Minutes

There has been a very good response from our pastors to whom we mailed copies of the Minutes of General Conference, and the payments for them have been coming in rather promptly. We believe this issue of the minutes has received a more hearty reception than any issue we have put out for some years. We will appreciate it very much if the pastors to whom copies have been sent will make payment for them as soon as possible.

We have only about seventy-five copies left on our hands that we could spare from our supply, but we would be glad to send copies to any who wish for twenty-five cents each.

The Brethren Evangelist

This is the time of year when a very large portion of our subscriptions expire, and many renewals are being received, for which we are thankful, but we need more than renewals, we need new subscriptions. Some of our subscribers die physically, some die spiritually, and some just spend too much money for gasoline and movie shows to have the price of a year's subscription to The Evangelist left, so they too must be eliminated from our lists, so you see the constant need for recruits.

The Honor Roll

It has been four months since we published the Honor Roll in this column, but it has not been because there have been no new churches added to our list, but because of the many other things that have been before us.

But by waiting a few weeks longer we have the privilege of enrolling THREE new members to the Honor Roll rather than one. Quite awhile ago the Brethren church at Fremont, Ohio, where Brother Crick is making great efforts to build up the Kingdom of God, was added to our Roll. Fremont was on the Honor Roll a number of years ago, but it had been off for so long that we feel it would be proper to start it in new again and to give the present pastor what credit belongs to the achievement. The Second Brethren church of Los Angeles, California, A. V. Kimmell, pastor, has been added to our list.

Our latest addition to the Honor Roll is the little group that composes the First Brethren church of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. We do not know that they have a pastor in charge, but those of our readers who are familiar with the work of the Brethren church know that Brother George T. Ronk is in business in Cedar Rapids and that he must be one of the moving spirits of the new church. Then since our last report the following churches have renewed their Honor Roll lists as follows: Ashland, Ohio, eleventh year; Berne, Indiana, ninth year; Corinth, Indiana, third year; Dallas Center, Iowa, second year; Leon, Iowa, third year; Long Beach, California, eleventh year; Philadelphia, first church, ninth year; Rays-town, Pennsylvania, fourth year; Tiosa, Indiana, ninth year; Waterloo, Iowa, eleventh year.

So when everything is considered it will be seen that our report is not so bad after all for this time. However, there are hundreds and hundreds of other subscriptions that should be renewed without delay.

A Greeting from Dr. Poling

President International Christian Endeavor Union

January 14, 1929

To All Brethren Christian Endeavorers:

It is a great joy to greet you on the occasion of the special Christian Endeavor number of the "Brethren Evangelist."

I have had many happy personal contacts with your leaders. I have come to know rather intimately the life of your church. I am grateful for your loyalty to Christ and the whole Christian message. May your program increase and expand, and may its vital life continue to be the heart of the Christian evangel.

Our Crusade with Christ has captured the imagination of youth in all communities and in all parts of the world. We are looking forward now to the Kansas City International Convention with earnest hope that there we shall find a new impetus for all our Endeavorers.

May God continue to richly bless you.

Sincerely and cordially,

DANIEL A. POLING.

Making Progress Backward
Cicero's Opinion of Us

Sociology and the Trinity
Dr. Kyle Speaks

by
Alva J. McClain

The next great step of the Church must be backward in order to re-grasp the things that abide. This is the word of Dr. Robert E. Speer, great missionary leader, and it suggests that the Church is going forward in the wrong direction.

It reminds us of a story. At the Conference of a certain large denomination a young modernist professor said to a veteran pastor, "You fellows are getting so far behind that you will never catch up with us." Said the old minister, "We don't expect to catch up. WE ARE NOT GOING IN THE SAME DIRECTION."

A church going in the right direction never needs to take a step backward. But some of our modern churches will never make any real progress until they begin to walk backward.

For one thing, the Church and its ministry must go back to the Bible. The reading of books is, of course, a virtue. But mere books cannot take the place of "the Book." Bengel, one of the greatest of all Christian scholars, thanked God for the loss of his father's library, because it kept him from reading too many books. But don't burn your libraries. Read your Bibles more.

Those who like to boast of their Anglo-Saxon superiority should read what Cicero once said about it. He advised a fellow-Roman not to purchase the Anglo-Saxon captives taken from the Isle of Britain because they had no value even as slaves.

If the Anglo-Saxons have any superiority over other peoples, it is because the Gospel of God's Grace has touched them.

Henry Ford, in a book recently published, predicts a coming world in which there is no drudgery, no Prohibition problem and no Smoking. As to this last, either Mr. Ford has not read late records of the Internal Revenue Bureau or else he has become even more optimistic than when he set out in his peace ship to stop the late war.

Every minute the smokers of America consume a cigarette ten miles long. Six times as many are used as just before the World War. And at least a third of these are smoked by women, it is estimated.

But Mr. Ford is right after all, in spite of the smoke-filled atmosphere. Some day we shall have a "cigaretteless" world. Perhaps Mr. Ford has been reading the Bible. See Matthew, 13 chapter, verse 41.

(Cigar smokers, reading this, should not feel too virtuous. That coming world will also be a "cigar-less" world.)

As this is being written, the Senators at Washington are fighting among themselves to determine whether the Kellogg Peace Pact means to stop fighting or to go on fighting. No one seems to know just what it means. Some regard the Pact as a pledge of sacred honor never to resort to war in settlement of disputes. Others say it permits war in self defense.

What it means will probably not be put down in cold print, for that might hamper the freedom of the warmakers in the future. But no matter what is done about it now, the real meaning will be discovered when the next occasion for war arises. That is the lesson of history.

There is no justification either in history or in the Word of God for the belief that war can be abolished without the Son of God. The world needs his rule. He will abolish war. But until that day comes, anything is worth while that can shorten the periods of war and lengthen the periods of peace. The Christian should pray "for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life.... For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior." (1 Tim. 2:2-3).

Senator Reed, who is from Missouri both literally and figuratively, asks whether it is plausible to suppose that the Kellogg Peace Pact in 1929 can accomplish what the teachings of Christ have failed to accomplish in 1900 years—a question which should make men think, both the statesmen and the preachers.

But Mr. Reed overlooks one thing. 1900 years ago governments didn't bother even to discuss the possibility of universal Peace Pacts. That is something accomplished. The teachings of Christ exercise a restraining power over even those who have never accepted him.

The Church has never perfectly taught

Questions and Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

5. Are we to look upon the divisions of the Church of Christ as a sin? Or what kind of unity are we to expect among the different groups who call themselves Christians?—S.

These questions may be, for the most part in the minds of most men and women, wholly matters of opinion, or even worse, mere matters of convenience. I should like to say in the first place that membership in the Church of God can never be a mere matter of opinion or convenience. I am strongly of the conviction that one's choice of church membership must be based upon the conditions of membership and characteristics of the Church laid down by the New Testament. To make this answer clear we must approach it from another viewpoint.

First, the Church of Christ, that is the Church founded by Christ and of which he speaks in Matthew 16:13-20 and mentioned thereafter through the New Testament scores of times, is not divided. What is more, it can not be. The Church is the Body of Christ and his Body is not mutilated and can not be. So we read in 1 Cor.

12:25,—"...that there should be no schism (division) in the body." This is an appeal to keep the unity of the faith.

Second, in the Apostolic Church there were "schisms" among the members. And these "schisms" had as their natural outcome "heresies." So we read again in 1 Cor. 11:18-19,—"For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that divisions (schisms) exist among you, and I partly believe it. For there must be also factions (heresies) among you, that they that are approved may be made manifest among you."

From these two considerations it is an easy inference that neither of these words is used to denote a party that had separated itself from the main body. This indeed is the fact as shown by the New Testament. The Pharisees and the Sadducees, for example, were sects or divisions of Judaism in the time of the New Testament but were never separated or withdrawn from it. So the parties spoken of in the Corinthian Epistle were divisions in the Church but not separated from it. So much for the New Testament background of the answer to our questions.

Third, What is everywhere condemned where the subject is even remotely referred to is the confusion and discord these divisions and heresies cause. In this sense our modern Protestant Sects are equally blameworthy.

Fourth, This cause for blame becomes all the more evident when divisions and parties are fostered where no genuine grounds for deep and scriptural convictions exist. In these instances far too frequently the separations are kept in critical aspects for purely human and selfish aggrandizement in leadership and places of trust. Where no serious differences in administrative policies exist and where there is practically no difference in doctrinal belief and the practice of the Ordinances certainly the New Testament teachings are plainly against any division. I sincerely believe that the stirring and positive exhortations of the Epistles toward unity, harmony and solidarity of the Body of Christ are applicable in a large and

Christian Endeavor's Anniversary

Christian Endeavor passes on February 2nd the forty-eighth anniversary of its founding, and it is still going strong. It has not outgrown its usefulness; it has not completed its mission; it is still functioning as efficiently as ever; and it has a future yet before it. Of course, forty-eight years is not a very long time, as many of our worthwhile institutions go. But it is long enough for an institution to be out of the experimental stage, to have demonstrated its worth and to have become considerably established in character. And that Christian Endeavor is still functioning pretty much along lines originally set for it is evidence of the wisdom of its founder and the vital worth of the principles incorporated into it. And that it is doing. It began with the aim of promoting an earnest Christian life among its members, encouraging a greater mutual acquaintance and understanding and of training for larger and more efficient service for Christ and the church. That is still its aim, an aim that is fundamental to the largest welfare of young life as well as of the church and the Kingdom. And because it is meeting such a vital need and doing a work that is largely distinctive, we may be sure it has not yet lived out its day, but that it has a future full of promise.

Happy is the pastor who recognizes the real worth of Christian Endeavor and is making large use of it. His number is a vast multitude and is steadily increasing. There was a time a short while ago when some of our church leaders imagined that the highly organized Sunday school would take the place of Christian Endeavor, that it would do its work and do it more efficiently. And suiting action to thought they began to turn their attention to the organized Bible class and neglect Christian Endeavor. But the folly of such an attitude has become apparent, and while the organized class made a great contribution to the Kingdom and still is of real value, yet it has become plain that it cannot do everything that Christian Endeavor can do, and that there is so much about Christian Endeavor that is unique and vital that it cannot be dispensed with or displaced. It does what no other institution has been able to do for the young people of the church. It enlists their interests in religious activities, promotes a practical knowledge of and love for the Bible, cultivates the devotional life, brings them together in social functions that are wholesome, and develops a spirit of loyalty to and habit of service for the church—all these and many more things it does in a manner and to a degree that cannot be duplicated by any other church agency.

To broaden its field of service and to increase its usefulness, Christian Endeavor has been graded to meet the needs of all age-groups and developed in variety of methods and standards so as to be adaptable to many different types of communities and churches. An increasing number of churches of every shade of belief and degree of ritual are recognizing the value of Christian Endeavor, or other similar institutions under different names, as a means of training their young people for religious responsibilities, and to secure for themselves its vast possibilities they are building graded programs, effecting organizations and suiting materials and standards to their needs, but among them all there is found the same underlying, basic principles of Christian Endeavor. And the increased favor of this mighty organization in quarters where heretofore it has received little encouragement and the broadening reach of its service are due largely to its ability to adapt itself to the loyalties and characteristics of the different churches and classes as well as to the various age-groups.

We congratulate Christian Endeavor on its forty-eighth birthday and commend it to the service of every church, large or small, town or country, for the sake of the young people whom it would serve. It has not yet reached the end of its development in spirituality and power, in adaptability and service. Its possibilities for the future are large both because it is adaptable and because the mission that it serves is vital and indispensable to both church and youth. As long as it aims to bring young people into personal acceptance of and allegiance to Christ, as long as it encourages prayer and devotional Bible study, as long as it pledges loyalty to the church of which it is a part and directs young life in ways of service, we say, God bless and prosper it. That is enough to make it worthy of our support and prayers.

Our Unwarranted Criticisms

Very much of our criticism of one another is unwarranted, because it grows out of misunderstandings and suspicionings that have no foundation in fact. We are misled by remarks or circumstances; strange situations arouse our suspicions; and perhaps an unsympathetic attitude gives color to our suspicions and then we tell them to another. Once they find expression, they go and grow and soon assume the proportions of candid truth and do all the harm of base falsehood, though it was all done with seeming innocence and without malice aforethought. How easy it is for trouble to grow out of strange situations and partial understandings where our vivid imaginations are left to fill in the details or where we are inclined to jump at conclusions! The following true story, reported by a correspondent to The Spectator, well illustrates the point:

"Some twenty years ago, on an Atlantic liner, two days out from New York, eight gentlemen lingered over their coffee while one of their number, Sir Arthur P——, told the history of the latest addition to his famous coin collection. A brilliant speaker and an authority on coins, he made much of the tale, while the priceless bit of metal passed from hand to hand for examination. The story done, the coin was nowhere to be found. In vain the table and floor were searched; in vain napkins were shaken, cups examined, questions asked; in vain it was suggested that each man present should be searched: seven assented, but one, a Mr. S——, refused, politely, but firmly.

"Of course, after that, for the rest of the trip they cut him dead; the other passengers, too, except Sir Arthur, who generously acted as if nothing untoward had happened. The night after land was sighted, a steward, stooping to pick up a spoon, found the coin on end, between the carpet and wall. He laid it at once on the table in front of Sir Arthur, and, as the news flashed through the room, apologies were made to Mr. S—— for unjust suspicions entertained toward him. 'I will tell you, now, why I refused to be searched,' he said, when the excitement died down. 'Like Sir Arthur, I have made a hobby of coin collecting for some years, and I should have confessed as much, the other night, if Sir Arthur's fascinating story had not ended so abruptly with the unfortunate disappearance of his coin. After that I was reluctant to speak because,' he paused, smiling, then reached across the table and laid beside Sir Arthur's coin its exact duplicate, 'because this was in my pocket at the time. Even Sir Arthur,' he added, 'would have found it hard to believe that, with only two coins of the kind in existence, I should have had the other, that evening, in my possession.'

On every hand we meet with unwarranted criticism of one's fellows, criticism, much of which was given with no malicious intent, but nevertheless is working injury and injustice to those criticized. Parishioners criticize their pastor without warrant oftentimes because they do not understand his problems, or only half understand some remark, or imagine some word against sin is a personal thrust. The pastor sometimes criticizes his people unjustly because he fails to understand the demands made of them by society and business and the home—demands that are proper and inescapable, and which interfere with their making certain sacrifices or meeting certain requirements which he expects of them. Ministers criticize one another needlessly and thoughtlessly and involve themselves in foolish difficulties, and lessen the spirit of brotherhood among themselves. One minister faced what he thought to be an opportunity for larger service, left his field and entered the new one, which involved certain ecclesiastical readjustments. His decision did not meet with general approval and some of his fellow-ministers began to speculate about the motive that might have actuated him, some accusing him of being mercenary; others, of being self-seeking; and others of being dissatisfied with his associates. Their criticism could not reach their former associate, but it did stir up in the hearts of those who criticized a feeling of unkindness, of suspicion and of fear one of another.

The thing we need is more love in our hearts, for love will help us to keep from thinking evil, to say nothing of guarding us from speaking and working ill to our neighbors. Love will cause us to rejoice in the truth, rather than in the suspicions and misunderstandings that we harbor about others. Love will make us forbearing, longsuffering and patient and will stay our lips from speaking our unwarranted suspicions and from guile.

Is Ours a Vanishing Clergy?

It is not a new note, but it has recently been raised with new impressiveness. A writer in Scribner's brings the subject to our attention, under the title, "A Vanishing Clergy." His claim is that there is significance in the loss which he points out for 1927 in the number of ministers in certain of the churches whose membership represents one-half of the entire of Protestantism. It is often unfair to jump at conclusions on the basis of figures adduced from one or two or three specific instances. However, we may well take warning from a situation which many in these days are telling us is becoming serious, and especially since our own ministerial situation is included in this data. Where are we ultimately to get our ministers, if these figures are a true indication of the present tendency? Is it not worth while taking notice of? Here are the figures:

Denomination	Loss in Clergy for 1927
Baptist (14) .....	451
Lutherans (20) .....	68
Presbyterian (U. S. A.) .....	29
United Brethren .....	95
Reformed .....	13
Scandinavian Evangelical .....	20
Unitarian .....	16
Brethren .....	29

The author, the Rev. Dr. John Richelsen, says, strikingly and frankly, "Consternation was created when the statistics . . . for the year 1926 were given out, covering all religious bodies in America, and it was shown that, in spite of the gain of half a million church members over 1925, there was an actual net decrease of 647 in the number of clergy. Now the statistics for 1927 prove an additional net loss, and this time of 1,387 clergy, a total loss in two years of 2,034 ministers, while there has been a net gain of over 1,000,000 members in the same period. Also it should be made clear that these losses become far greater if the Catholic church be taken out of the computation, for this body gained 360 clergy in 1926 and 1,211 in 1927. If these offsetting gains of the Catholic clergy are taken out of the calculation, the remainder of the American religious bodies show a total loss in clergy for the last two years of 3,005."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Christian Endeavor Societies will find a report of their contributions to their Krypton mission undertaking in this issue over the signature of their general secretary, Miss Gladys Spice.

A note from Brother Floyd Sibert, pastor of the Ellett-Rittman circuit, in Ohio, informs us that one member was received on January 20th by reaffirmation of faith. Work on their new church building is proceeding nicely; the plasterers are now at work and it is hoped that the building will be ready for dedication by Easter.

The large type heading in the box at the top of Brother McClain's article in the issue of January 19th got badly mixed somewhere between the time the copy left the editor's hands and the locking up of the forms. We make this explanation in justice to Brother McClain, who had them arranged in logical order. We are sorry for the mishap.

Brother Robert Crees supplies us with his second installment of travelogues under the Southern Cross. He writes very entertainingly. He requests us to inform his friends that he has not gone to South America as a missionary, as some have supposed, but is merely traveling. We shall be pleased to receive more of his travel experiences.

This is Christian Endeavor number, and we are pleased to give considerable space to this very important young people's organization, which has much to do with the future life and leadership of our church. We are honored with a special message from Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the International Christian Endeavor organization and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

The La Verne, California, church of which Brother A. L. Lynn is the capable pastor, is greatly encouraged and moving forward. Three are reported having been baptized and six received by letter, and others awaiting baptism. The various departments are doing good work. Christian Endeavor especially seems not to be neglected, there being four societies in the church.

The Second church of Los Angeles, seems to be observing the signal, for they "GO" according to order, as our correspondent suggests. During the year sixty-two new members were added to the church, or net addition of fifty. The Sunday school is launching a campaign for an attendance of 500. Brother A. V. Kimmell is the able pastor of this church.

The executive committee of the Publication Board sent out some weeks ago letters to pastors and Sunday school superintendents asking for suggestions and criticisms regarding our church publishing house and its literary output with a view of improving it. Some of the leaders have not replied and the committee is anxious to hear from them. If you will be so kind as to give this matter your attention, write to Chairman C. L. Anspach at Ashland, Ohio.

We have been informed of more pastors who are attempting to get their churches on the Evangelist Honor Roll. Some of these have at one time been and some have not. It is encouraging to note the interest our pastors are taking in the effort to extend in influence of our beloved paper. We hope yet others will cooperate. It is your paper as well as ours, and our success means your success.

We are in receipt of a schedule of the Standard Training School of Christian Education being conducted by the Kosciusko County churches of Indiana, with Brother E. M. Riddle of the Warsaw church as Dean of the school. The enrollment for the five night sessions was 112, ten of which were from our Warsaw church. There were classes in "Story Telling in Religious Education," "Principles of Christian Service," "Principles of Teaching" and "Studies in the Old Testament."

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, makes mention of a matter that needs to be often stressed. It is the importance of remembering the various interests of the Brethren church when men of means are making their wills, or better still, of making provision for such interests before wills are effective. Men are held responsible not merely for how they get their money and how they use it, but also for how they dispose of it when they shall no longer have need of it.

Brother Grant McDonald, pastor of the Smithville-Sterling church, reports a very successful evangelistic campaign at Smithville where fifty-one confessions were received, forty-two being first confessions and one coming by letter. The church rightly counts this a great victory and it should be much strengthened thereby. Two days after their arrival on the field a little son, Glæe Levon, made his arrival in the preacher's family. We extend congratulations on behalf of the Evangelist family to Brother and Sister McDonald.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh makes his fourth report of White Gifts for the support of the work of the National Sunday School Association. The total amount to date is $3,413.87. Doubtless there will be a goodly amount still to be reported and the treasurer will be pleased to have it come in promptly. By the way, you will be pleased to know that Prof. Puterbaugh is the proud father of a baby boy born on January 25, 1929. Send in your additional reports quickly as a sort of congratulation. But in the meantime we extend congratulations on behalf of our Evangelist family to Prof. and Mrs. Puterbaugh.

After Forty-Eight Years

By E. M. Riddle, President Brethren National C. E. Union

We are with this issue helping to celebrate around the world the birthday of Christian Endeavor. Forty-eight years ago, the late Dr. Clark launched this organization in his own church in Portland, Maine. It is not the purpose of this message to emphasize the history of this tremendous movement, but rather to dwell upon her undertakings and plans after 48 years, revealing something of the scope of this organization for youth.

The more than 80,000 societies in the world today, representing many denominations, from a far greater number of countries, is no small force for good in our day. Approximately 5,000 new societies are organized every year, and from nearly every nation comes news of increase in numbers and activity. We desire now to be a bit more specific by giving some concrete facts.

China today has over 2,500 societies. A field secretary works out of Shanghai seeking to promote the work. There are upwards of 10,000 societies in Great Britain and Ireland. In Bolenge, on the Congo, you may stop at the largest society of Christian Endeavor in the world.

Christian Endeavor continues her good work in the Philippines. Miss Theresa Wells who went to this place as a missionary from Dr. Poling's own church society, reports her fine opportunity of presenting Christian Endeavor in a girl's Bible conference.

The United Presbyterian Union reports this year her biggest convention of this generation. Their convention size was 3,282. There were outstanding features among these Endeavorers that could hardly be excelled.

From scores of state and denominational unions come reports that indicate a gratifying increase in Christian Endeavor activity in every department of the work.

Maine says: "Not for many years has there been such a marked spirit for Christian Endeavor."

Miss Garber, one of our own Endeavorers, writes: "California Endeavorers are alive and doing things."

The Reformed church has based its entire program for the year on, the Christian Endeavor slogan, "Crusade with Christ." Not only is this so in their Endeavor work but in all their young people's program.

Carroll M. Wright, Superintendent of Intermediates is planning a series of tours in Europe this summer, after having seen fruits of his labors in Europe last year.

One Endeavorer from Florida presents a challenging spirit. He speaks before High Schools, in Christian Endeavor rallies, Hi-Y clubs and Sunday schools. In 41 days he traveled 2,388 miles and helped in six district conventions. The all-South convention held at Chattanooga last month was one that surpassed previous gatherings in every way.

Dating from January 1st Endeavorers over the country are turning their eyes toward the Kansas City, Missouri, International Convention. The Flying Squadron Mileage Contest (see Christian Endeavor World) is creating considerable interest.

Brethren leaders are in a position to know that we are doing some things worth while. In closing this message, which savors much toward a report, giving a glimpse of the score of Endeavor, we want to call our Endeavorers to the task of sending an offering (to be received during Christian Endeavor Week) to help support our Krypton Missionary work. We call you again to a closer walk with Jesus the Christ. We need to Crusade with him. Do not be afraid to trust him and launch out into the deep with your life.

What is the ultimate aim of all this effort expended by tens of thousands of Endeavorers? Is it just that one state or denomination shall be a victor over another? Is it just to have a place in the World-wide organization of Christian Endeavor? NO—to each question. It is that we might WIN SOMEONE and ENLIST THAT ONE for God. Warsaw, Indiana.

Christian Endeavor's Task

By F. C. Vanator, National Associate President

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these . . ." I leave the reader to finish the quotation.

From the very inception of the Christian Endeavor movement, its motto has been "For Christ and the Church." In these few brief thoughts we want to emphasize the words of the first part of that motto.

"For Christ." What does that mean to you, dear Endeavorer? Let me point out two of the outstanding elements of real Christian service.

"I was hungered and ye gave me meat: thirsty and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: sick and ye visited me: in prison and ye came unto me." Do you realize that when Christian Endeavorers go out to shut-ins and to prisons with their message of song and cheery inspiration, as many societies do, that they are simply following one of the precepts of our Christ? On the face of it, it does not seem to be doing much, but little do we know the depths we may reach in the heart of some man or woman, boy or girl, who is near despair or who thinks that the whole world has forsaken, and like one of old is saying, "No man cares for my soul." Remember Christ's "Inasmuch" and take heart in this work. Try it during Christian Endeavor week and see how much you are really appreciated. It is done for Jesus' sake.

The other phase of Christian Endeavor activity that we would mention is that which is bound up in the words of Jesus when he said, "Ye shall be my witnesses, both in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Couple this message, if you will, with his word spoken to his disciples and recorded in Matthew 28:19, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations . . ." Again I leave you to finish the words.

There can be no other interpretation given these words than that which bears a missionary character. Moreover it is an imperative: "Ye SHALL be my witnesses . . . GO ye." Christian Endeavorer, do you realize that we are merely playing at our missionary work?

For the past several years your National Executive Committee has been endeavoring to set before you a missionary objective that would be all "our own." But when we met in session each year to observe the result, lo! we have felt much like the New Testament quotation that follows: "We have piped unto you and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you and ye have not lamented." No—possibly that is wrong, for some have co-operated and that right loyally. But some have not caught the vision. Christian Endeavorers—do you realize that Krypton, Kentucky is OUR WORK? It is our Judea. It is our own homeland work.

Very encouraging reports are coming in to us of this field. Brother and Sister Kinzie are doing a noble work there. What is our part? The answer is three-fold: Prayer—Genuine Interest—Finances. Now listen. Prayer brings interest and interest always brings Money. There is no other approach to our problem.

Are you using the C. E. Week as a time to take your Krypton pledge and offering? That is the time set aside for this work. Many have tithed for this special time and purpose. Make your pledges and take your offering (not merely a collection, but a genuine offering given because of interest in the work), at this time. Send it in to Miss Gladys Spice, General Secretary, 2301 13th Street, N. E., Canton, Ohio. Be a co-operator for Christ and the church, and then ... "Inasmuch...."

Peru, Indiana.

Three Necessities

By Gladys M. Spice, General Secretary

There are three distinct qualities which should exist in the life of anyone who is interested in bringing the young people closer to Christ. The first is that of HIGH IDEALS OF LIVING. An ideal is an idea with an "I" added to it. Ideals are very powerful things and will bring about results unless counteracted. That is one reason why we should have "high ideals." Jesus' ideal of living was first of all the idea with the "I" standing for LIFE. The life which he had was not merely dynamic or vital—it was God-like! He was so absorbed in the idea of being about his Father's business that he forgot to leave the temple. This deep, inner desire to be about our Father's business should absorb a great deal of all young people's activities.

Another ideal of Jesus' was that with the "I" standing for LIFT. There are many activities which include life, but which do not lift that life toward God. Jesus' ideals had that lifting power and it was because of his intimacy with God that he was able to lift folks to God. Today many of our youth are crying,

The world is so full of a number of reels

That I hate to go home long enough for my meals.

Many of these reels are planting in the minds of boys and girls, young men and women, ideas which do not stand the "lifting" test. If the church is going to produce foursquare Christian lives it must prove to the world that Christianity gains control of the emotions as well as the intellect.

The third "I" is that of LOVE—not mere temporal congeniality but love which is of God and which touches everyone with whom it comes in contact. If we, as Christian workers, do not possess that love for all mankind which endures to the end, there is something lacking in our make-up.

The second quality is that of UNDERSTANDING YOUNG PEOPLE. We must understand those with whom we are trying to work. A story is told of a mother and child who were looking at the dark sky. The mother said, "See that beautiful big star over yonder?" But the child could not see it. Again the mother pointed but still the child could not locate the star. Finally the mother stooped down to the level of the child and discovered that a tree was hiding the star. She then lifted her and pointed with the child's finger and immediately she saw it. We too, must try to get the young people's point of view and if there be some obstacle in the way we must either remove it or lift their vision above or around it. We should impress on their minds that God cannot work without human instruments and that they are a part of his Great Plan. We must make the young people feel that they are an important factor in the church in order to get them to work. It is far better to get ten people to work than to do ten people's work yourself, for when we have helped someone to accomplish a task we have helped them to gain confidence and enthusiasm. God's best work can only be done by God's best men, but let us not judge too quickly as to who is doing the best work, for the task which gets the most publicity does not necessarily mean that it's the best task. Did not Milton say, "They also serve who only stand and wait?"

The third quality is that of UNDERSTANDING AND KNOWING THE WORD OF GOD. It is told that a certain man was called to deliver an address at a high school commencement exercise and also to present the diplomas. When he arrived at the place he found that he had forgotten the diplomas and since it was too far to return for them they had to do the next best thing. Much to the surprise of the students when they unrolled their supposed-to-be diplomas they found that they had received an advertising calendar. As leaders of the Young People, whether it be in Sunday school or Christian Endeavor, let's not camouflage—let's teach the WORD intelligently and under the direction of the Holy Spirit. We should be alarmed at the fact that when secular illiteracy is at its minimum, spiritual illiteracy is at its maximum. This very fact should make us get busy and try to present our lessons in a clear, accurate and effective manner.

However, if we have all the knowledge in the world and are not backing it up with a consistent Christian life we are failing. I will close with one of Edgar Guest's poems:

"I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day,
I'd rather one should walk with me than merely tell the way;

The eyes's a better pupil—and more willing than the ear,
Fine counsel is confusing but example's always clear;
And the best of all the preachers are the men who live their creed,

For to see good put in action is what everybody needs.
I soon can learn to do it if you'll let me see it done,
I can watch your hands in action, but your tongue too fast may run.

And the lecture you deliver may be very wise and true
But I'd rather get my lessons by observing what you do.
For I might misunderstand you and the high advice you give—
But there's no misunderstanding how you act, and how you live."

(Notes taken from address by Rev. J. A. Verburg, Columbus, Ohio).
Canton, Ohio.

"I am crushed by the wheels of death," he said, "but this thing will lie heavy on the heart of God till he comes to replace my broken house of life; for we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—Arthur Wentworth Hewitt.

"Whose Names Are in the Book of Life"

By Frank Gehman

Text: And the rest of my fellow-workers, whose names are in the book of life.—Philippians 4:38.

Man's memory is tricky. It is not always a trustworthy thing. How often have we all heard people say, "I don't recall what the speaker said except that story he told; I do remember that." We delight ourselves with the story. We are content with it. Tricky memory has preserved it for us. At the same time the same memory may have cast aside and forgotten much solid food for thought, both lasting and useful. Thus does memory come to deserve to be branded faithless.

The season has so shortly passed when we were gaily addressing and posting delightful cards of well-wishes. What pleasure our hearts took in the work. What soul satisfaction we felt from it. We commended ourselves upon a joyous task successfully and well done. But I wonder how many people you have thought of in the last several days to whom you should have posted greetings! Yes, it's that memory again. There have been hearts we might have gladdened a little more, we might have warmed to a little better appreciation of life. There are friendships we might have strengthened but for our easy forgetfulness.

It is comforting, however, when we think of these careless slips of our memories to look upon one who has been able to avoid, upon occasion, such maltreatment at the hands of his memory. Such an one is the Apostle Paul. When Paul was bringing to a conclusion his letter to the Philippians he began to extend personal greetings to the Christian workers at that place. He names some of them, but not all. After mentioning three persons to whose names he refers for some definite reason, better known to them than to us, he concludes with the summary, "and the rest of my fellow-workers, whose names are in the book of life." Our attention becomes riveted upon that last clause, "whose names are in the book of life."

It was a careful and loving thought on the part of Paul to prevent the overlooking of any who were having a part in the furtherance of the Gospel. To this task Paul had given his life, his all. He had been "separated unto the Gospel of God" (Rom. 1:1). Any who had an interest in the promulgation of the Gospel thus and thereby laid a definite claim upon the Apostle's affection and interest. Indeed, Paul was interested in the welfare of all men, more especially so in the welfare of their souls. Nevertheless, he had a different and peculiar interest in those who could lay claim to being his fellow-workers. It is a strange fact that college men are rather easily detected, meet them where you may. The informed eye can separate them from the midst of other men of their age. There is something unusual that marks them. When two college men meet in a strange place the very fact that they are college men makes for them a basis of mutual understanding. What matters it if their schools be ancient rivals in scholastic achievements, athletic events or other endeavors! They are college, or perchance, university men; it is enough. They have here a ground for fellowship. They proceed to enjoy it to the extent of their opportunities or capacities. In a deeper and finer sense is this true of those who are working for the advancement of the cause of our Lord. Paul felt this bond as keenly as, or mayhap more keenly than, any other man might. He felt himself definitely associated with any who were "workers together in Christ."

There should be none of these left with the feeling of "outsiders." All should be made to feel that they had a vital part in this work, that their presence was essential to the final success of the effort, and that they had a personal claim upon the Apostle. Paul's psychology surpasses much that is practiced in the church today, much to our perpetual shame. If the work of the Lord is to succeed here in this city we must come to feel that we are a part of, and have a part in, that great work. Everyone who has named the Name of Jesus Christ must feel himself to be a part, and a vital part, of that great forward movement for righteousness. It is fatal to any movement for its professed constituents to harbor that feeling of outsiders when it comes to questions of work and responsibility. Each one is responsible for its success or its failure; all are responsible. All Christians must feel their part and the essential nature of it, small though it may be. If we fail to do so we are become so much dead timber, so much camp baggage, or "impedimenta" as Caesar termed it. We are holding back on the lead straps of the greatest move for the world's advancement history can witness, and the ONLY move bringing redemption and salvation to men's souls. Paul would encourage all. He would make all feel their connection. They should be aware of it. If he attempted to catalogue their names he might miss some, but not so here. Even the most obscure should have a part in this greeting. His word should encourage them. He would remind them of the book of life. He would touch the secret spring of their being, the abounding hope of their life; were not their names written there? Did not all have a personal part then in that which he wrote? How many hearts were quickened, how many breasts thrilled with a new courage at this seemingly slight word of Paul's! Only eternity with its great revelations will reveal it all.

Note that Paul was not making himself responsible for saying what names were in that book. Their salvation did not depend upon his attitude toward them. Had it been so, there might have been more names there than there likely were. Paul had the passion which characterized our Lord in his earthly ministry. It is the same passion which characterizes his intercessory ministry now, the desire to see all men saved. But unfortunately, yet fortunately, this did not depend either upon Paul's attitude toward them, or even upon Christ's. It all depended upon their attitude, and that, the one which they manifested toward Christ. If there is an unsaved person here, may this thought reach your heart: no matter how much Christ may desire to see you saved, no matter how much that saintly friend may wish for your salvation, no matter how much yearning in heaven and on earth there may be for your salvation, these will not save you. It is you yourself who determines whether life or death shall reign in your body. You determine by your attitude toward Christ whether or not your name is in the book of life. I cannot tell who here have their names there. Even if I were more perfectly acquainted with you I could not know. Perhaps some which we think are there, are not there at all. Perhaps some we do not suspect, are written there. Paul did not attempt to name those at Philippi. We cannot name those here. It is a matter between every soul and the Lord. Beware that you do not overlook the seriousness of that fact.

What a privilege it is, though, that our names may be written there! There is no list in the universe I had rather see my name upon than that one. There is no list upon which we may find so many great names as upon that list. There is nothing in existence comparable to it. To have our names there associates us with a multitude of the most notable characters of history. With few exceptions the world's greatest statesmen have been men of faith in God, God-fearing men. Look back into the early centuries of the Christian faith. Behold there the names of the Christian scholars of that day. Men of no mean ability they were. Standing head and shoulders above their contemporaries, intellectually, they defended and promulgated the faith of Christ beyond our wildest and most daring hopes in this day. Each succeeding century had its corps of scholarly men who believed that God meant what he said. Even in the Dark Ages, when truth was crushed and hidden under a superstitious temporal power, the faith of Christ blossomed in the hearts of some and was preserved there for us. We need only look back over history, we need only look about us today to see the noted characters we become associated with when our names are entered upon that book of life. Some glad day it will no longer be just a memory of those names for us, but actual fellowship with those who possess them. May that day hasten.

There is nothing narrowing or lowering about the Christian faith. Christian scholarship, the world over and the centuries through, has been equally able and equally intellectual with any other scholarship you may muster. Furthermore, it has been far more fruitful in terms of life than all other scholarships combined. It is an unfortunate and mistaken idea, which in some circles is afloat today and always has been, that one must be ignorant and narrow to adhere to the faith of Christ. It is a lie of Satan. Misinformation and Satan's subtlety are responsible for it. The Christian faith offers to men and women the broadest and richest experience of human life. It offers the possibility of supernatural accomplishment, for it touches the source of supernatural strength. It offers a wisdom to even the untrained and the uncultured above man's wisdom, for its wisdom is divine and heavenly. It offers a power of expression in excess of any self-expression, for it offers the Christ-like expression of Christian love. Christianity broadens, deepens, heightens, uplifts and enriches life. There is nothing derogatory to development in it. To have our names entered in the book of life binds us to this unspeakable blessing and is the most precious experience of human life. To live daily with the inner witness of the Spirit that those names are there is an incentive to righteous living and a privilege exceeding all others.

The fact that our names may be in that book is of vital importance to every life. The presence of our names there marks us as included amongst the sons of God. That book contains the names of his children. "Lo as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name" (Jn. 1:12). Everything depends upon the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. Through him we become sons of God. Having become so through belief on his name, our names are entered in that book. Having become children of God in very truth our names are there. The privilege of having our names entered in the same list with the great galaxy of saints who have preceded us is overshadowed by this. Henceforth, we are sons of God and are known in heaven as such. Our names are amongst those of God's children. Oh, the wonders of that fact! We are no longer strangers to God. We are no longer enemies. We are truly his children. We are of the household of faith. The book where our names are found proves that. The blood of Christ proves it.

As we pause to contemplate that fact we are impressed with the astounding nature of the miracles making possible that truth. This book is itself a miraculous, a supernatural thing. What man of us knows when to enter a new name there? What man can say to this one, "You are saved," and to that, "You are lost?" Such things are above man. We may know some of the saved and we may know some of the lost, but can we know all of each? We can know where some men stand, but do we know where each individual stands? That knowledge belongs alone to God, hence we say that this book is a supernatural one. It is a mysterious thing to us. We might think this man or that, to be justified in the sight of God when God says he is not. Our voice is not the deciding one there, thank the Lord for that. Some day, however, the mystery of the thing will be revealed. Some day all shall be opened. If we are in Christ and are sons of God, in that day, happy are we. If we are out of Christ, then we are, too, out of the book, and sorry shall be that day and all days before and afterward. Paul might not know or recall all who had a hand with him in the work at Philippi, but if their names were to be found in the book of life there was no further need for him to withhold his commendation. In a miraculous and mysterious way those names are determined upon and are preserved. Yet despite the mystery we know what we must do to find a place there for our names. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Happy are they to whom the names on the pages of that book belong.

Another miraculous and mysterious element is the exalted position of man here. It is a position unattainable of himself, therefore one that is supernatural. Man is not idly declared justified in God's sight. There is the entire burden of man's sin to deal with. God can not and does not condone sin. Thank God, however, that is cared for in Christ's atonement. Through that blood by faith man has justification. Is not it an exaltation from sinful and unmeritorious man to the place of a perfect and a just son of God? This too is a thing we cannot fully explain, but because God's Word says it is true, Christians believe it. Jesus Christ has taken an exalted and glorified humanity back to heaven with him. By virtue of this fact he is termed the firstfruits of the resurrection. Thus his glorified humanity coupled with his Deity occupies the foremost place in heaven. This glorification our humanity shall share. Why such exaltation? It is not of man but of God. It is for God's glory. This book of life is an earnest of our future more blessed state.

Thus it becomes evident that man's position in relation to the book of life and to God is all based upon the miraculous in the Christian faith. We can part with none of the miraculous of that faith. To do so invites disaster. It courts shipwreck upon the shoals of worldly life. God didn't perform miracles for man to explain away. He makes better use than that of his time. Every miracle which he ever performed has been for a purpose. God is not purposeless. The miracles of our faith have an untold value. They are essential, vital, necessary to the Christian faith and life. They are the foundation upon which the superstructure is reared. It would be folly to remove from an aeroplane motor a spark plug, a wrist pin, a connecting rod and a few other seemingly insignificant parts and then try to fly the Atlantic. It would appear that the man who should attempt that would be trying to fathom the ocean's depth rather than span its breadth. Let us not be as foolish in our faith. Let us remain firmly attached to the miraculous in it, and guard it with jealous care. If you have grown cold or indifferent to that part, pray God to bring you back before it is eternally too late.

Paul could send greetings to those at Philippi. He could mention only the names of those for the mention of which he had a special reason. He could add, "and the rest of my fellow-workers, whose names are in the book of life." With that addition he could rest content that none had been overlooked. He could be sure of a word of personal encouragement having been given to all. He could be sure that they had all been definitely connected with the work. He need not assume to mention what names were there. It would recall to them the fact of the great privilege of having their names there, as it recalls the same to us. It would recall their association with great men and the relations they sustained to God through it. They would not be unaware of the miracle of the thing, or of the fact that their whole faith, as ours, is built upon Christ and upon his work, else it had no sure foundation. "Whose names are in the book of life." What a suggestion! For us there is the same thing. Let us hold fast the faith we have through Jesus Christ, the faith once for all delivered to the saints, knowing that the great work which he has begun he shall be able to perfect.

Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

THE KELLOGG PACT WINS

The Kellogg Pact has won. The Senate by a vote of 85 to 1 ratified it on January 15. The one vote against it was by Senator Blaine of Wisconsin. What a pity that even one man should be against it. The vote for it should have been unanimous. When it was passed applause burst from the galleries but hisses for the dissenting Senator. We think that a pity, too, for it seemed entirely out of tune with the high spirit of the great hour. The treaty has been accepted by 60 out of 64 independent nations of the world. The meaning of it is the outlawry of war. It puts the nations on their honor to keep the peace. The President signed the treaty on January 17.—The Christian Evangelist.

NOTED PREACHER A SEMINARY PRESIDENT

John Timothy Stone recently accepted the presidency of the Presbyterian Theological seminary (formerly McCormick seminary) in Chicago. It was understood that his acceptance accompanied a program of enlargement which is now announced. New buildings involving an expenditure of $3,000,000 are projected. Additions to the faculty and new emphases in the curriculum to meet modern needs in the training of ministers will accompany the program. This new expansion appropriately marks the centennial year of the seminary which will be celebrated in 1929.—The Baptist.

CONGREGATIONAL EXECUTIVES MEET TO CONSIDER MERGER

Officers and members of the executive board of the Congregational Church met in Cleveland during the past week for the primary purpose of discussing necessary adjustments in the proposed merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches. In particular they were to take under advisement investment funds and other property valued at more than $48,000,000, including the assets of the mission boards and colleges of the church. That the merger of these two bodies may occur within a year is the statement made recently by leaders of both groups.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

Our Worship Program

MONDAY

THE RIGHTEOUS FLOURISH—Psalm 92:12-15. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." The wicked "spring like herbage" (v. 7), but the righteous "spring like the palm;" that is, the righteous have grace and beauty that is superior and that abides, even as the slender but upright stem of the palm, ever verdant and fruitful, surpasses the beauty and abiding qualities of the grass. The righteous also are like the massive strength and undecaying vigor of the cedar, green even among the snows of Lebanon. Here "gracefulness is wedded to strength, and both are perennial in lives devoted to God and right."

TUESDAY

WARNED AGAINST DECEPTION—Matt. 24:3-8. "Take heed that no man deceive you." There are deceivers and people easily to be deceived on every hand and in every field of interest. The field of religion is no exception. We are continually noting the rise of false prophets, false healers and false Christs. And they will be with us to the end of time. Only let us not be deceived thereby. Nor let us lose faith in the outcome of truth because of the temporary triumph of false prophets; time will bring them to naught. Let us, as we are admonished to do by the aged apostle John, "try the spirits, whether they are of God" (1 John 4:1). The Christian ought not to be unduly credulous, believing every fancy that strikes the human mind, nor foolishly skeptical, refusing to believe anything that cannot be demonstrated. He should refuse to be "tossed about by every wind of doctrine," but with loyalty to old truth and hospitality toward new truth, he should, as the Bereans did, "Search the scriptures daily to see whether these things are so."

WEDNESDAY

THE SACRIFICE NEEDED—Gen. 22:4-8. "Behold the fire, and the wood, but where is the lamb?" We are told that there is no savage race, even in the darkest jungles or remotest deserts, that does not have some consciousness of sin and does not seek to expiate it in some manner. But no man can be saved by his own blood, nor by the blood of any other man. We may build the altar and lay the wood upon it, as did Abraham, but there is no atonement without the Lamb. The sacrifice that is needed God himself has provided.

THURSDAY

A YEARNING LOVE—1 John 4:7-10. "For God is love." That is the answer to every riddle of the universe. That is why God made the world and man. That is why he sent his Son to become the Savior of the world. That is why he is longsuffering and forgiving. He is a God of love, and loving, he yearns for children to love, and children who themselves are characterized by love toward God and one another.

FRIDAY

THE THANKFUL HEART—Col. 3:15-17. "Be ye thankful." A thankful heart is a thoughtful heart, and many people do not have that kind of a heart. Most of us like to get things and then forget them; we do not like to be troubled with doing much thinking. But to grab the gift and forget the giver is absolutely sinful. Some one has said, "Gratitude is the memory of the heart," and another remarks, "This heart memory is as necessary to the moral make-up as the other memory is to the mental."

SATURDAY

CO-WORKERS OF THE GLORIFIED—Heb. 11:39, 40. "That they without us should not be made perfect." The sainted dead are not subtracted from the forces of righteousness, nor are they unrelated to us. Their works and their faith find completion in those who follow, for "all Christians are one glorious brotherhood." As E. W. Caswell says, "Those who have been transferred are still actors with us in the achievement of the plans of the infinite Father."

SUNDAY

THE INDISPENSABLE FACTOR—Psalm 127:1-5. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." The house that every man is building is life, and there are many things that seem to men important to build into that house, but there is one thing that is indispensable and that is God. Leave him out of consideration and life is a failure.—G. S. B.

Home Dedication Day Ritual

Wendesday, March 27, 1929

Arranged by H. Augustine Smith, Boston, Massachusetts, 20 Beacon Street

1. House Blessing (Reading)

Bless the four corners of this house,
And be the lintel blessed;
And bless the hearth and bless the board
And bless each place of rest;
And bless the door that opens wide
To stranger as to kin;
And bless each crystal window-pane
That lets the starlight in;
And bless the roof-tree overhead
And every sturdy wall.
The peace of man, the peace of God,
The peace of love on all.—Guiterman.

2. The Home Circle in Bible Times RUTH AND NAOMI

And Ruth said: Entreat me not to leave thee, and to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if I ought but death part thee and me.

And when she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, she left off speaking unto her.

So they went unto they came to Bethlehem. (Ruth 1:16-19).

ELISHA AND THE SHUNAMMITE

And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and she constrained him to eat bread.

And so it was, that as often as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

And she said unto her husband, Behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, that passeth by us continually.

Let us make, I pray thee, a little chamber on the wall; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a seat, and a candlestick: and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither.

And it fell on a day, that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber and lay there. (2 Kings 4:8-11).

Hospitality in Business Homes

And Paul found a certain Jew named Aquila, a man of Pontus by race, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; and he came unto them.

And because he was of the same trade he abode with them, and they wrought.

For by their trade they were tent makers. (Acts 18:2-3).

Martha and Mary and Lazarus

Now as they went on their way, he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house.

And she had a sister called Mary, who also sat at the Lord's feet, and heard his word. (Luke 10:38-39).

Now a certain man was sick, Lazarus of Bethany, of the village of Mary and her sister Martha.

The sisters therefore sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick.

Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus. (John 11:1, 3, 5).

3. Prayer and Hymn

"Make this home a Bethany, our Savior.
Sit with us at the table.

Draw us from our worldly cares, as thou didst draw Martha.

Be our life, as thou wert the life of Lazarus.

Show us, as thou didst Mary, the better part.

We ask it in thy name. Amen."
(Tune "Felix" from Mendelssohn's "Songs without Words")

O happy home, where thou art loved the dearest,

Thou loving Friend and Savior of our race,

And where among the guests there never cometh

One who can hold such high and honored place.

O happy home, where each one serves thee, lowly,

Whatever his appointed work may be,
Till every common task seems great and holy,

When it is done, O Lord, as unto thee.

O happy home, where thou art not forgotten,

When joy is overflowing, full and free;
O happy home, where every wounded spirit

Is brought, Physician, Comforter, to thee.
Until at last, when earth's day's work is ended

All meet thee in the blessed home above,
From whence thou camest, where thou hast ascended,

Thy everlasting home of peace and love.
Amen. (Spitta.)

ACTS OF DEDICATION

4. The Family Altar

Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.

Prayers

"We build an altar here, and pray
That thou wilt show thy face.

Dear Lord, if thou wilt come to stay,
This home we consecrate today

Will be a Holy Place."

"Lord, look upon our family kneeling before thee;

And grant us a holy, happy hour."

"Help us to make this home a place of love,
A place of prayer,

A place of all beautiful living,
A place sweet with heaven's fragrance.

Help us to live each for the other,
And to find our happiness in doing good and denying ourselves."

"O dear God, love this home of mine.

And all who dwell therein,

Care for our bodies, bless our hearts,

And keep our lives from sin.

God make my home a house of joy,

Where love and faith are given,

Make it the dearest place to you;

The nearest place to heaven." Amen.

5. Lighting the Hearth Fire

For this sweet grace

Of warmth and light!

For here again is sacrifice

For your delight.—Oxenham.

"These stones are not a hearth, until they know

The red and kindly miracle of flame.

For this house is not home until love makes it so."

I light the log of loyalty,
Loyalty to God, to home, and to fellow men.
The lintel low enough to keep out pomp and pride,
The threshold high enough to turn deceit aside;
The door band strong enough from robbers to defend,
This door will open at a touch to welcome every friend.
I light the log of hospitality and friendship.
—Van Dyke.

"When the log is burning free,
When the fire is full of glee:
Then each heart gives out its best,
Then the talk is full of zest,
Light your fire and never fear,
Life was made for love and cheer."

6. Lighting Candles in the Dining Room

Back of the loaf is the snowy flour and back of the flour the mill;
And back of the mill, the wheat and the shower

And the sun, and the Father's will.

—Babcock.

"O God, search our hearts with the light of thy care.

Help us to be lights along the pathway of life, to friend and foe alike.

May our purity be as the rays of the mountain sunrise, our character as the beacon light at the harbor entrance, and our love and friendship as the glow of the friendly fireside.

Our energy, power, and light we now dedicate to the Master Builder of mankind."

Amen.

"God's candles we, some burning high, some low,

We see the flames as souls wher'er we go.
God's candles we. If set where dark or light

It matters not, if we but keep his altar bright.

God's candles we. Lit from his radiant flame

If we burn clear and high, we glorify his name.

God's candles we. O may we brighter glow
To lighten other flames, that flicker low."

Stop with us, O Savior, cross the threshold,

With its dear echoes of our children's feet.

Be our loved Guest, bless rooms, and books, and pictures,

Break thou our bread and make it newly sweet.

—Bertha Woods.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for February 10)

Some Great Christian Teachings IV. Repentance and Faith

Scripture Lesson—Isaiah 1:10-20; Ezekiel 18:20-23, 27-32; Mark 2:1-12; Luke 3:1-14; 15:11-24; Acts 2:32-39; Hebrews 11:1-10.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 27:1-5.

Golden Text—Repent ye, and believe in the gospel.—Mark 1:15.

Repentance

Repentance is essential and one of the first essentials to salvation. It is true that a certain faith is necessary to repentance, "for he that cometh to God must believe that he is" (Heb. 11:6), but a vital, active, saving faith such as Jesus had in mind when he admonished the Galileans to "Repent and believe the gospel" can only come when one has felt the moving of the spirit of repentance. Jesus puts the order right; the carnal mind cannot lay hold on gospel truth with saving faith until it has turned its back upon sin. And that is what genuine repentance is.

Faith

Do you want to know what faith is? Turn to the eleventh chapter of Hebrews and you will find it defined and illustrated in a most vivid manner. There is nothing in print anywhere that equals this dissertation on faith.

"Let any man who wishes to know philosophically and practically the length and the breadth of this glorious principle of Christian faith look this chapter of the Hebrews freely and fully in the face.—Prof. John Stuart Blackie. "Faith is such a hearty belief in God and in his Son, such a steadfast conviction of the truth of all that he has taught us in the Bible, as mixes itself up with our whole life, spreading, like a finer leaven, through every part of our nature, and leavening what before was hard and heavy, until we become like the shewbread of which we read in the law of Moses, fit, when we have been hallowed by the incense of prayer, to be brought to God's holy table."—Augustus W. Hare.

The Son's Request and the Father's Bestowal

It is the spiritual meaning of the son's request that we are concerned about. And on that point the editor of the Illustrated Quarterly says:

"It is the expression of man's desire to be independent of God's control and restraints, and to do as he pleases. He thinks he can be happier thus to yield to his unrestrained lusts and desires. He is weary of seeing 'thou shalt not's' over the gates of so many a temple of pleasure and seeming paradise. He is weary of so many restraints and laws and seems to see happiness in doing whatever he wishes." And that attitude prevails notwithstanding the goodness and wisdom of God, who has "divided his living" with all the sons of men, even as did the father in the parable. "He has given them spiritual natures made after his own image, conscience, reason, talents, memory powers, capacities of blessedness, his Word, his home, his love and care, and worldly blessings beyond measure. But they were intended to be used at home, under our Father's wise guidance and laws.

Still, with these gifts is the gift of free will, which alone makes virtue possible."

Began to Be in Want

The world, with its riches and pleasures, can never satisfy the soul. This is a sign of its divine nature and greatness. We can quench our thirst with the salt waters of the sea more easily than we can satisfy the soul with worldly good. That is but stones instead of bread, and scorpions instead of eggs. It is warming ourselves with pictures of fire. Solomon tried the world at its best, and with this result: "All is vanity and vexation of spirit."

Some have applied this riotous living chiefly to wanton and dissipated sinners. It does apply to them, but it applies also to all sinners; for they do to spiritual things what riotous men do with earthly things. The worldly life is always a wasteful life. It wastes body and soul. It wastes life and health. Sinners waste their Bibles, their Sabbaths, the influences of the Spirit, their religious training, all their heavenly inheritance, and get nothing but a temporary pleasure in return.—Selected.

The Wonderful Father

"A lad from the north country strayed or stole into one of our great London cathedrals. He was lonely, dejected, friendless, and ashamed. He had gambled, drunk, and fooled away money, health, and character. Disgraced, hungry, desperate, and broken-hearted, he crept in with the vast congregation to the sacred building. The preacher read this incomparable parable. The outcast drank it all in with ears and heart strained to intensity, and when it was finished, forgetting the place, people, and everything else, he cried out audibly, 'Eh, but you was a grand old man!' And the whole world of Bible readers have said substantially the same thing. We call it 'the parable of the prodigal son,' but it is more truly the parable of the Eternal Father, with his wonderfully kind heart, with the love that changes never, and the sweep of forgiveness which is boundless in its breadth and depth."—Rev. J. G. Greenhough.

Stewardship

By Ray Klingensmith, National Quiet Hour Superintendent

When the Apostle Peter told us to minister to each other as "stewards of the manifold Grace of God" it is significant and interesting to note that he implied very much. When the Apostle Paul expressed his desire to be accounted for as a "steward of the mysteries of God," he was coveting no peculiar qualification or ability that should not be of interest to each of us. Stewardship both in the Old and New Testaments is a very high office. In fact it is practically the highest office that could be entrusted to anyone. Steward means, in its original, "One to whose charge or control a thing is left, a manager, an overseer, or a treasurer." Those are the New Testament applications of the term.

In studying stewardship in the Old Testament we find rich illustrations of it. For instance, Abraham's steward, or manager, was so trusted by his master that he was responsible for the marriage of Isaac, his master's son. He was capable of choosing a wife for Isaac, and after having made the choice, he could be trusted with the duty of bringing her safely home. When Ahab's interests were in jeopardy and his beasts of burden were starving for food, he went out into the wilds in search of nourishment AND HIS STEWARD, or governor, or caretaker of his house, also went searching. How lovely that he was really concerned about his master's interests. Joseph, who was chief steward over Pharaoh's interests found hundreds of souls being sent to him from the king himself. We read that "When all the land of Egypt was famished, the people cried to Pharaoh for bread: and Pharaoh said unto the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph, what he saith to you, do ... and Joseph opened all the storehouses."

Christian Endeavorers, when the world is starving, and the ruler of darkness cannot feed them, cannot content them, cannot save them from their soul's starvation, and when they come to you for help, I wonder what kind of stewards you are? I wonder if you open the store houses, or do you selfishly appropriate all of Christ's gifts to your own interests? Do you go out, as did Obadiah, Ahab's steward, and help find the things necessary to the starving interests of your Master? If you do not, you are liable to experience some regrets when you hear the words of Jesus as recorded in Luke 16, calling you to "Give an account of thy stewardship." Will you be an unjust steward, or will there be a "Well done" waiting for you? Talk it over with your Master.

be silent. A few will speak out. Some will oppose anyone who attempts to get at the real causes that lie back of such occurrences. It is possible that one or two prominent churchmen may write articles in indirect defense, pointing as an alibi to the frequency of murders in New York and Chicago.

This is the second lynching in Mississippi in ten days, the fifth for 1928. The State authorities will in all probability do nothing. They may possibly announce that the victim "met death at the hands of unknown parties." The grand jury may investigate, but there is nothing in the past to support a hope that anyone will be punished. Out of four thousand lynchings that have taken place in thirty-five years less than a dozen mob members have been punished in the past thirty-five years.

The morning papers of January 2 carry the following: "Governor Bilbo of Mississippi says that he has neither the time nor the money to investigate 2,000 people." The Governor, driving across the country, stopped to see the charred body. The coroner's jury issued the following statement: "We, the coroner's jury, after due examination of the body of Charley Shepherd, convict No. 1381, do find that he came to his death from causes unknown to the jury." The adjutant general, explaining why the State troops which were in the vicinity did not deliver the prisoner to legal authorities, said: "The troops were ordered out to aid in capturing the negro and if possible to deliver him to the law, but not to kill a lot of people in doing so." He made it clear that the troops neither aided nor attempted to hinder the mob.

Just before Christmas three negro homes in Atlanta were blown up with dynamite. One of the contributing causes of the bombings was the fear that the coming of negroes into this community would ruin the church which not so long ago completed a new building. I sat last night with a group of intelligent white and colored men and attempted to find something that could be done about it. There have been and will be no arrests or convictions. Some of the most influential men in the city said frankly that there was no hope that the police would protect these homes from further violence. The people whose homes have been bombed were reported to have taken out "bomb insurance" and begun to rebuild. Just now our newspapers are "playing down local crime" so that most of the "good people" of the city will never hear of it. It will not be referred to by many of our preachers.

Missions, burnings, bombings—do these commend white supremacy, democracy, and American Christianity to the non-Christian world?—The Christian Advocate (Nashville).

Atlanta, Georgia.

A PRAYER

Deliver me from all evildoers that talk nothing but sickness and failure.

Grant me the companionship of men who think success and men who work for it.

Loan me associates who cheerfully face the problems of a day and try hard to overcome them.

Relieve me of all cynics and critics. Give me good health and the strength to be of real service to the world, and I'll get all that's good for me, and will what's left to those who want it.—William Feather.

Where to Leave What You Have Left

"How much did he leave?" That is a question that is frequently asked after the decease of an individual. The indefinite and usually unsatisfactory answer is, "He left it all." Many good-meaning Christian individuals neglect making their wills until it is too late. It may have been in the minds and purposes of many good brethren or sisters in our denomination, to remember some worthy interest, such as our Home mission work, but it was put off too long. NOW is the time to look after such important matters.

We are truly grateful for what has been done along this line recently. Over $2,000.00 has been received from the John and Sarah Wheeler Estate of Nickerson, Kansas, for an orphan's home at Lost Creek, Kentucky. Several thousand dollars more will be available as soon as some of the real estate is converted into cash. Our Home Mission Board has also received a $100.00 check recently from the John H. Miller Estate of Sunnyside, Washington, to be used at our new mission point at Harrah, Washington. Surely there are many others who are contemplating such a noble deed. Do not wait until tomorrow for tomorrow may never come for you or me.

Missions--Burnings--Bombings

By Will Winton Alexander, D.D.

It is New Year's Day, 1929. Southern Methodist hosts are gathering in Memphis for an International Missionary Conference. The bishops, pastors, leading laymen, and faithful women of the church will be present. Foreign visitors, some from heathen lands, will speak. Great missionary leaders from other denominations in the United States and Canada will participate. There will be strong utterances and hours of high emotion and resolve. It is hoped by the leaders of the church that this meeting will beget new interest in giving the gospel to the non-Christian lands.

According to the Associated Press, last night at 8 P. M., in Mississippi at the very gates of Memphis, a negro criminal was burned by a crowd estimated at 2,500. The report says that "they went quietly about their task. After mutilating and wounding him they poured gasoline on him and placed him on a burning pyre about five feet high and two or three feet wide." The detailed information reads as though a reporter was present. It will probably come out later that there was a photographer present also. This has been true on some similar occasions in the past. Among the 2,500 there may have been women and children. The man was on the burning pyre one hour before he died. He died cursing his accusers.

The news of this burning will be carried around the world and will be read with hot resentment by millions of non-white people in non-Christian lands and with sinking hearts by missionaries whose task will be made infinitely more difficult by such "support from the home land." The conference will probably pass a resolution deploring the lynching and urge church people to give

THE TWO SHEPHERDS

By Raymond Kresensky

*One led the sheep into the fold
And locked them in; out of the cold
And safe from wolves, the shepherd thought—
Then smiled at the good work he'd wrought.*

*Another led them round the hill
Where wolves stalk out their prey to kill.
His hand bound up the wounds that bled.
He lifted up the weary head.*

*The one gathered his sheep and then Went out to boast with other men
While wolves broke down the low-built shelter
And drove the lambs out, helter-skelter.*

*The other stayed with them all night;
The other kept them in his sight,
Folding them gently in his arms,
And keeping them safe from all great more money to make possible the conversion of non-Christians.

Mississippi is a very religious State. There is no State in the Union where Protestant preachers and churches occupy a relatively larger place in the life of the people. Revivals led by evangelists, professional and local, are common. There is probably not a minister or layman in the whole State guilty of a heresy. The leading daily paper in the State is an aggressive defender of orthodoxy. Nearly every politician is a Protestant church member.

At the time of his inauguration the present governor, according to the press, announced that he would not attend the inaugural ball. The reason assigned was that he was a preacher and dancing was against the rules of the church.

Church leaders in Mississippi as a rule will regret this burning. Most of them will

was a great correspondent

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

First Brethren Church

La Verne, California, is still on the map, although sometimes obscured by a peculiar phenomenon known to us "natives" as "smudge," a sample of said peculiarity preceding the Christmas holiday.

Our first splendid bit of news which we are delighted to broadcast to the brotherhood is the fact of the arrival of our new pastor, Brother Archie L. Lynn of Roanoke, Virginia. Brother and Sister Lynn arrived November 10th. Brother Lynn preaching his first sermon in La Verne, November 11th. The church had no regular pastor for a year and we could well appreciate the arrival of Brother and Sister Lynn; and we are coming to know more of their real worth as the days go by. We have prayed long and earnestly for some one like them and are now rejoicing that they have been found!

Brother Lynn did a "new thing under the sun" by announcing a sunrise prayer meeting on Thanksgiving morning. This was under the direction of the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society and was attended by nearly a hundred persons.

A watch night meeting held at the church on New Year's Eve was quite a success. The evening was made interesting by vocal and instrumental music, special talks, and a social hour, closing with prayer and testimony as the old year passed out.

In these last few months our services have been affected greatly by flu, but happily we can report conditions much better now, but in spite of adverse conditions a splendid Christmas program was achieved, with our efficient Sister Gladys Good as general chairman.

Under the inspirational and evangelical messages of Brother Lynn there have been a number of reconsecrations and several conversions; also six additions to the church by letter. The rite of baptism was administered to three persons on last Sunday evening and others are waiting an opportunity. Our Love Feast and Communion was observed this week. Practically the entire membership attended.

We have splendid attendance at the mid-week service which is prayer meeting and Bible study combined. Brother Lynn is leading in the study of the book of Genesis.

The C. E. societies, of which there are four, are active in the work of the county as well as locally.

The choir on each Sunday evening is composed of the members of the Young People's society. We have four young people in the Los Angeles Bible Institute, preparing for service, wherever the Lord may direct.

It has been our custom for many years to sing at the Pomona Valley Hospital the second Sunday of each month.

The Woman's Missionary Society is helping support the Mexican (Protestant) Mission in La Verne, quite a Home Mission project as the present Mexican population here is estimated at about 1,000. These people, as they come from Mexico, are Catholics and we have some of the problems that our missionaries find in South America.

One member of our congregation (with his family) has been driving almost a hundred miles each Sunday up in the mountains to hold services in a small chapel.

The annual business meeting of the church on January 8th revealed the financial condition of the church in a favorable condition.

We are endeavoring to secure the requisite number of family subscriptions to the Evangelist that our church may be on the honor roll this year.

We are expecting great things to come to pass here in the next few months, if Jesus tarries, and we know that he can do "exceeding, abundantly, above all we can ask or think," but—we need your prayers.

MRS. ELSIE RAGER.

Evangelist Correspondent.

P. S.—Perhaps an explanation of the word "smudge" is due the easterner who has never been west. Smudge is not a "disease" but a "condition." In order to preserve the California "Sunkist" oranges, known everywhere, from being frozen, an orchard heater in which crude oil is burned is used to increase the temperature on extra cold nights. Brother Lynn says it gives us the Pittsburgh atmosphere! However, it doesn't happen very often.—E. R.

SMITHVILLE-STERLING CHURCH

Four busy months have passed since we were called to our work in the Smithville-Sterling congregation. They have been months of new joy in the Master's service, filled with blessings and answers to prayer. God has been good to us in these busy months. I say busy, for we only arrived at noon on September 7, and in the midst of our unpacking, and only a few hours after my opening services in Smithville and Sterling, the newest member of our family, little Glæ Levon, made his timely appearance in Smithville. Quite naturally, it took us a little time to get settled and established in our new work.

Then after one week of prayer we opened a soul saving campaign November 11th. God again marvelously answered our prayers for a singer by sending to us, Mr. and Mrs. Elden Farrar, intimate friends of student days at Moody Bible Institute. Mr. Farrar, until recently, was an M. B. I., extension worker but resigned to go into independent work. He is an excellent song leader and he and his good wife are very consecrated and splendid personal workers and children's workers and their wide experience with some of the leading evangelists of the day made them a great aid to the writer. The Lord blessed Mrs. McDonald with physical strength to play the piano, and God blessed his messages and the Spirit worked, and souls were saved. The house was filled every night and on Saturday and Sunday nights people were turned away. There were forty-two who accepted Christ for the first time, one came by letter and eight had made the confession at one time but for various reasons wanted to re-establish their faith again, making fifty-one in all, in the two weeks' meeting. There were also over one hundred reconsecrations of Christians. The Brethren here feel that it was a great victory for the Lord considering how hard and thorough the field has been worked before by the many various churches located in this vicinity. We give to him all the praise and glory for his faithfulness to us. A two weeks' union meeting with the U. B. church in Sterling followed with the Farrars and Evangelist Hutchens and wife, but the "flu" epidemic hindered the attendance. But in spite of that the Lord honored his Word and 20 made the good confession.

Other good things have been the communion services held at Sterling in October and the visit of the missionaries, Miss Nielsen and Miss Bickel. The attendance at the meetings of the missionaries was somewhat hindered because of bad weather, but we appreciated their messages and stay with us.

We have found the Smithville-Sterling people to be very kind, friendly, generous and cooperative. Added to all these other strenuous weeks, the influenza did not fail to take its toll of time and care in our family but through it all the people have been very kind in helping us. In the Christ Spirit of his Birthday they gave us some very appreciated and needed articles of furniture and showered us with "eatables." They have wonderfully cooperated with us in the work here, which gives us new zeal and enthusiasm.

GRANT McDONALD.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

As we start the New Year, we see the church life before us, stretching like a great ribbon of highway. Our Master gives us the signal and the sign says "GO" Matthew 28:19.

Heads of all departments shift into gear and move smoothly ahead with the oil of cooperation, cheerfulness and good will to overcome all squeaks and knocks.

We pause at the filling station of Prayer for we realize that although the road looks bright and smooth, there are dangerous curves and steep hills of perplexity, doubt, and fear to pass, for which we need the Power of the Holy Spirit.

Our aim is to use the mistakes of last year as chains and brakes to keep us from slipping this year.

With Brother A. V. Kimmell at the wheel, our pastor, whose eyes are centered on the Cross of Christ, we hope to guide many lost souls to the straight and narrow way which leads to life eternal.

Members received into the church the past year, 62. Members lost, 12. Net gain, 50. We are rejoiced to see confessions almost every Sunday.

We are putting on a campaign with a goal of 500 in our Sunday school. We have a Sunday school orchestra of ten instruments.

We have a Workers' Band who report hundreds of calls. Brother and Sister Baker and Sister Roseborough have been added to our deacons' board.

IDA MORRISON,
Corresponding Secretary.

A SWISS PENAL COLONY (Continued from last week)

The ride from Bern hither was a very interesting and beautiful one. I am not sure that you will remember after 20 years the beauty of that ride. For an hour we rode through valleys cultivated with all the Swiss thoroughness. The spring is at its full. The grass is its freshest. The trees are in leaf and in blossom. The farmers are cutting the grass which they feed to their milk cows in the stalls. The dandelions are everywhere as with us. Potato planting is going on everywhere. The small grain is fresh and green about a third grown towards maturity. The neat Swiss towns flashed by us every little ways, for our train was an express which stopped only at the larger places. At last after going through a tunnel at the upper end of Lake Geneva we broke out upon the hillside over the lake and after traveling along steep hillsides planted to grapes we stopped at the city of Lausanne. Had we lots of time to spend, we should have stopped there, but our time is growing short, and we wish to get on to Paris. Then another 50 minutes brought us to Geneva.

Geneva seems to me to have changed much since we were here before. Many new buildings have been put up. The old bridge which had the tower at the spot where Julius Caesar built a bridge to cross the Rhone in his attack upon the Gauls, had been displaced by a modern bridge. That old tower is no longer there. Many new hotels have been built, I suppose as the result of Geneva having been made the seat of the League of Nations.

We walked about the city visiting the old church in which Calvin and John Knox preached, the Cathedral in which the Reformation started, and which today is a Swiss Protestant church. Then we went down to the Public Gardens in front of the University and saw the monument erected since we were here to the Protestant reformers, and walked around through the corridors of the University, looking over the announcements of courses offered. After that John went to visit one of the museums, and I walked about the University grounds, saw the old Pierre de Fees (Stone of the Fairies), an large granite boulder on which at some ancient time, perhaps prehistoric, four rude figures have been carved in relief. Then I went back to the hotel to rest. After supper John and I walked down by the Lake, watched the top of Mt. Blanc fade away in the distance as the sun sank so low that its beams no longer touched with glory the peak.

Geneva strikes me as rather a dead town. There seems to be a good many out of work. Yesterday as May 1st was the day for the Reds to get out and have a display. There were groups of them wearing red badges, carrying red flags, and selling their paper, Le Travail. They had drum corps marching, but the numbers were not large, perhaps 200 at most.

ONE OUT OF TEN

By Susan Hubbard Martin

A big convention was being held in the city, and ten of the delegates from the Prospect Valley church were present. The church at Prospect Valley could not pay a large salary but the minister did not object to that. He loved his people and was never happier than when he was serving them.

It was a real joy to him on Sunday mornings to mount the steps leading to the pulpit, open the big Bible and read the usual chapter.

His eyes rested with affection on the members of the choir too as they filed in. It did not make any difference to the minister that the church at Prospect Valley was not of modern architecture. To him it was a real delight to preach in it, the Word and endeavor as he always did, to lead souls to him.

He took stock of his church members at the convention as they came in. There was Deacon Lester and his wife. The deacon was very tall and his wife was very short. There was Mrs. Steele and Miss Letitia Rudd and there was Mr. Somerfield and Mr. and Mrs. Rice. There was Elizabeth Saxton who taught in the Primary room and Mrs. Jackson and her son, John.

The morning session was interesting.

There were special numbers in music as well as several fine addresses. At twelve, the convention adjourned until half past one and the minister, still with a smile on his face, was happy because ten of his members from the Prospect Valley church were there.

But they all filed by him without inviting him to join them at dinner. He saw Deacon Lester and his wife get into their automobile and drive away. Mrs. Steele and Miss Letitia Rudd went out together, and Mr. and Mrs. Rice accompanied by Mr. Somerfield did likewise. Mrs. Jackson and her son John passed him last.

And then as he stood there alone and lonely, he felt a little touch on his arm. It was Elizabeth.

He brightened.

The little family down at the parsonage especially loved Elizabeth who visited them often.

"How do you do?" nodded Elizabeth brightly as she slipped her young hand into his. "I want you to take dinner with me. Someone told me of a splendid place only three blocks away. Mother and father would never forgive me if I ate my dinner here without asking you to share it."

The minister smiled.

"Your mother and father are fine people," he returned almost solemnly. The little heartache caused by the carelessness of his nine other church members was departing under the warmth of Elizabeth's kindness and thoughtfulness. "I'd be glad to go with you," he went on quietly.

They found the place, took a little table to themselves and Elizabeth looked over the menu card.

"My," she cried, "how many kinds of pie there are!"

She turned to the minister.

"Be sure and order your favorite," she cried gaily.

The minister smiled again.

"I never have had enough pineapple pie," he remarked, "and I'll choose that—if they have it."

Sure enough pineapple pie was among them and Elizabeth gave the order.

The dinner consisted of good roast beef, brown gravy, plenty of potatoes, vegetables and hot rolls. It was a fine meal all the way through and the minister did full justice to it. He ate his pineapple pie down to the last crumb.

When they were out into the sunshine again he said a little huskily, "I thank you for my dinner, Elizabeth."

Elizabeth nodded and smiled.

"You're very welcome," she answered.

She knew something of the burdens the minister carried. There were seven little children in the parsonage who needed so many things. She knew all this and she smiled a beautiful warm smile.

"It was a privilege to do it," she added. They walked on toward the church.

The ache of loneliness in the minister's heart was quite gone. Elizabeth, who taught in the Primary room had not passed him by—as did the others. Elizabeth, one of the ten, had proved herself to be very unlike the other nine.

Laugh, and the world laughs with you;

Weep, and you weep alone;

For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.

Sing, and the hills will answer;

Sigh—it is lost on the air;

The echoes bound to a joyful sound,

But are slow to voice your care.

Feast, and your halls will be crowded;

Fast, and the world goes by;

Succeed and give, and it helps you live,

But no man can help you die.

There is room in the halls of pleasure

For a large and lordly train;

But one by one we must file on

Through the narrow aisles of pain.

or practiced the teachings of Christ. But the nations, nevertheless, owe much to the Church's ministry and presence in the world. They will know more about this when the Church is taken out of the world, as it will be one of these days. Read 1 Thessalonians, fourth chapter.

A Sociologist rejects the doctrine of the Trinity declaring it to be an invention of Athanasius in the fourth Century. The viewpoint of this Sociologist is neither historical nor wise. Athanasius, great church father, did not invent the doctrine of the Trinity. He defended it, and very ably too, as Arius his Unitarian opponent could tell you if he were here. It would be a good thing if all college students were required to take a thorough course in Church history. Then when they become famous Sociologists, they could speak with more accuracy when they enter the field of historical theology.

If there is any person on earth who should be grateful for the Christian doctrine of the Triune God, it is the Sociologist. This doctrine assures us that the true God is a social being—Father, Son and Holy Spirit. It gives the Sociologist, if he be a Christian, a basis for his science in the very nature of God himself. In the relations of the three Persons of the Godhead, there is a perfect model for the ethical relationships of men.

All this wealth of meaning is lost in the Unitarian conception of God. Theirs is a barren God who has dwelt alone throughout a past eternity. He could not have been a God of Love because there was no one to love. If he began to love when he created a world of men, then Love is no part of his Eternal nature, and if this be so, how can we be sure that he will not sometime cease to love?

Over against this, how rich and satisfying is the Christian God as he appears in the prayer of our Lord to the Father: "FOR THOU LOVEDST ME BEFORE THE FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD. Oh righteous Father, the World hath not known thee; but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. And I have declared unto them thy Name, and will declare it, that THE LOVE WHEREWITH THOU HAST LOVED ME MAY BE IN THEM." John 17:24-26.

Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle, noted Archaeologist and President of Xenia Seminary, writes some pointed sentences in the Bibliotheca Sacra:

"The rapidity with which American manners have been going down grade morally has made many people so dizzy that they have shut their eyes tight—but they keep on going."

"The unseemly scramble of many would-be great preachers to get into a great place instead of trying to make a place great by being in it is one of the distinguishing marks of little men."

War memorials minister to "that national spirit of patriotism which, more than anything else in the world, ministers to the production of other wars. They do not help the dead; they do not minister to the necessities of dependent ones left destitute: they only stir up pride in the achievement of arms and a spirit of revenge which guarantees more wars—and more war materials."

inescapable manner to numerous so-called denominations.

Fifth, There are better ways of fostering truth and bearing testimony to the integrity of the Word and standing firmly for a Whole Gospel than by aloofness and separation. What a tremendous multiplication of power and influence for the whole Gospel all our Brethren churches would have if they themselves stood as a solid and undivided body. By Brethren churches I here mean in particular both Brethren and Church of the Brethren groups. Both groups together would have about 160,000 members. In ten years we could make that over 200,000. What an impact upon our world we could make as a United Body!

THE LAND OF THE SOUTHERN CROSS

II. Traveling Through Argentina

(Argentina as seen through the eyes of an American college student).

If you know how a little child feels when in a large city that is strange to him, you have some idea of the emotions of an American who lands in a country with strange customs and a different language. I have often laughed at the blunders foreigners made in the United States but I shall never do it again, for at first it seemed that everyone was laughing at me, and taking me for a rather queer specimen of humanity.

If one is a good fighter he can hold off the army of porters who pick up the baggage and walk off with it, but in a strange country the line of least resistance seems better, so I followed my baggage. The only comfort I had was that some of the porters appeared to be Jewish, which made me think of my home town—Philadelphia. I was confirmed in my belief when one charged me eight times the usual price for his services.

With another American boy I met on the boat, I started for the Y. M. C. A., but we were disappointed for they did not have rooms for travelers. As we were Americans in a Spanish speaking country the Y. M. C. A. agent sent us to a German Hotel. We took it as a joke at first but later were thankful, for the meals there were almost American. All of the hotel owners in this country are careful to tell you they do not allow tips. They would not have you bothered with such trifles so they just add 10 per cent to your bill to cover the service.

The proper thing to do in a foreign country is to register at the American Consulate so that if anything happens to you, you can be identified and your remains sent back to the good old U. S. This we did and also visited several North American banks and business houses. In the newer sections of Buenos Aires the streets are wide and beautiful and the houses picturesque, but in the older Spanish sections the streets are narrow and uninviting. This city of over two million people is modern and more advanced than such cities as Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Train service is good between the large centers and poor in the other sections. One can travel first or second class, first class being double the price of the second, the difference being in comfortable seats. I chose the second class and the hard benches but that was as nothing compared with the pests that came in the form of men selling lottery tickets. There were three of them in my train and every few minutes one would sit down beside me and tell me of the fortune I might win if I took a chance and bought one of their tickets. When I looked at the men who were doing the selling, I figured I would be taking a pretty big chance, so I told them I did not understand them. I have since found that it is sometimes convenient not to be able to speak Spanish for it gets rid of salesmen and beggars and serves to console policemen after you have broken a traffic rule.

The upper or richer class here are very careful not to contaminate themselves with the lower class. The upper class will visit with missionaries in their homes but will not come to public meetings because poor people are welcome also. The upper class dress very much like North Americans but most of the lower class dress differently. The men wear narrower trousers and in place of ties, wear scarfs around their necks, notted in front. They laugh at our knickers but most all the peons wear huge bloomers like potato sacks, tied at the ankles.

During a train ride one gets the impression that the country is full of beggars, for all the time some are coming through asking for money. Half of the people cater to this class with a result that begging is a rather profitable business.

If the day is dry, the dust bothers you the most. You have to open your window to get air and with it you get so much dust that you are not hungry for the next meal. On the other hand, if it is rainy, you can be duly thankful that you are in a train and not in an automobile, for the roads are not taken care of and get flooded with water, forming "pantanos," which are sometimes impassable for days at a time. At the station the train stops for ten or fifteen minutes, long enough for one to walk around the town once or twice. At the end of a 14 hour ride, I reached my destination, Rio Cuarto, a town of about 40,000 inhabitants.

In the Argentine there are not so many robberies because padlocks are popular. Iron shutters are pulled down over glass windows and in front of doors. To break the lock and lift the shutter would awaken the whole neighborhood, so the would-be-thieves go to New York and Chicago where it is easier to make a living.

The people are very friendly and hospitable and treat a stranger better than most Americans would. When you approach a house, instead of ringing a bell, you clap your hands. Chairs are immediately brought for you and they insist that you take a drink of "mate." This is a tea beverage that is prepared and served in a small gourd and drawn into the mouth through a metal tube. If you are the first to take the mate, you are lucky, but you have to be in the country a long time before you can stomach it after it has been "gone the rounds." If you refuse it is considered impolite so you are in a predicament. I generally say a little prayer, close my eyes, and go to it. If you know the family well, you can enjoy the mate, otherwise you feel like you are using the family toothbrush.

Boys in this country know nothing about baseball or about catching a ball with the hands. If you throw a rubber ball at one, they either bunt it with their head or kick it with their feet. The national game here is what we call soccer and they are very clever at it. They play some basketball but it is hard to train them to handle the ball with their hands, rather than with their feet. A young man is considered immodest if his basketball trunks do not at least come to his knees. The girls wear their skirts longer than in the States. The lower class and the children wear cloth composition sandals with no heels, and "dusters" over their shirts. It is a common sight to see a man in the streets in a full suit of pajamas but if you tried that in the States you would be put into the insane asylum. A man is not considered dressed for the street unless he wears a coat or duster over his shirt. You dare not be "collegiate" and go without a hat or you will have the whole town gazing at you. I went out several times in the hot weather in my shirtsleeves and without a tie and caused as much attention as a seedy country youth would on Broadway.

I am writing this article at 16 o'clock or 4 o'clock in the afternoon. A day here is measured by one cycle of 24 hours. Weight is by kilos or kilograms, and distance is by kilometers, and leagues. Their dollar is called a "peso" and you get about two and a half of them for an American dollar, but their buying power is proportionally less.

Music and drawing are encouraged by the schools and many young students in High school take subjects such as Logic that you only get in College in the States.

If you are driving a machine, you must keep to the left, rather than to the right, so all the traffic rules are just reversed.

Many of the women and girls dress completely in black and when I inquired the reason why, I found out that if a person died, all the relatives wore black for about a year. Since they even do this for a 32nd cousin, it is no wonder that some women are always in black.

In traveling one notices the absence of mountains—the country is very flat and when you have seen one city and one farm, you have seen all. There is a striking absence of trees, almost all the lumber being imported.

I rather pity the young people of this country, for the conventions are hard on them. A young man dares not walk along the street with a girl unless they are engaged or married. Even if they are engaged they are supposed to have a chaperone. Every Thursday and Sunday evening between 7:30 and 9:30 the young people take a "paseo" or walk in the plaza or central park of the town. It is a dress occasion and the girls take great pains to be at their best so they may be favored with a glance from their favorite young man. The men walk in a circle to the left around the square while the girls walk in two outside lines to the right around the square. They get a glance at their favorite girl as she passes and then she is gone till they circle half the plaza and meet again. Sometimes friendships are cultivated with a glance even though no words are spoken. If a young man takes a fancy to a particular girl, they may both drop out of line at a corner long enough to get each other's name and address. If the girl likes the fellow, she will be standing in her doorway the same time the next night and the young man will pass and greet her. After a few nights he may be bold enough to talk with her in the doorway but he dare not go inside for that is a sign that they are engaged. After you marry the girl, you are allowed to be alone with her and can get acquainted then. If you decide you do not like her you are out of luck for there is no divorce in Argentina.

No wall-paper is used in most homes but the walls are well plastered and painted in attractive colors, and make a very good appearance. The primary, grammar, and high schools are all called colleges and have a fine grade of work. Their only trouble comes in discipline, and if some of the older boys do not like a teacher, they give him a thrashing.

The people of Argentina do not believe in screens and the doors and windows are always open. The flies are bad but the moths at night are worse. Another pest is the black ant, a clever insect that uses camouflage in hiding his hole, works in huge regiments, and can destroy a rosebush in half an hour. Before a very bad storm one sometimes sees vast clouds of locusts which are very destructive and can wipe out a cornfield in short order. Wind storms are prevalent because the country is flat and sometimes they do considerable damage.

There are very few negroes in Argentina because they are not liked by the natives. If a negro applies for a job, they laugh him away.

The people of Argentina are a Latin race, many of them having Spanish or Italian blood in them. They have their slang just as other races and I heard a number of words that I could not find in any dictionary. As a race, they are more affectionate than North Americans. Boys of 11 or 12 years of age in the States would rather take a pint of castor oil than kiss a man in public, yet here they seem to like to show their affection in this manner.

They have practically the same food here that we have in the States but many of the people cook it differently. Some do not consider the meal complete unless everything is richly flavored with garlic. Their ice cream is starchy and like soup, and they are afraid to eat it in the winter time for fear of getting sick.

The newspapers do not favor the United States and knock her as often as they can. They do not like her policy of intervention and claim she wants to gain land, money, and power. Smith was favored in the elections but now that Hoover has been elected, they are all outwardly for him.

Some of these habits and customs may appear funny to us but I wonder how we would look to them. Since being in the Argentine I have grown to see that the United States is anything but perfect and if we could only see ourselves as others see us, we might get an unpleasant surprise. The customs of Argentina may seem strange to us but they have as good reason for their customs as we have for some of ours. Rather than laugh at them and criticize them, we should try to help them.

RUNAWAY CARL

Charlotte had just finished making her seventy-second frosted cookie for the Sunday school party her class was to have that night, and had stepped into the store-closet for the big basket to put them into when who should come in but Carl and three of his boy friends.

"Geel! Frosted cookies!" said Carl, almost in a whisper. "Look here, fellows!" He helped himself to four, and gave each of the others four.

"Carl Henderson Jaynes!" said a shocked voice as they munched the delicious things. "Those cookies—what's left of them—are for the social tonight. That's my pay for making you those cookies for your crowd last week."

Of course, the boys were sorry, but that did not replace the cookies. Carl lingered behind to make his peace with his sister, but she was too vexed to be forgiving. "I'm rushed to death as it is, and now I have to get to work and make another big panful of the cookies," she said. "You are the most provoking boy I ever saw. Go on to school before you do any more mischief."

Mrs. Jaynes was away from home, so nobody noticed that Carl did not come home from school with the other children. It was getting dusk on the short winter day when Charlotte became alarmed. Carl was not at home, and nobody seemed to know where he was. He had lingered a little after the rest had gone in the little country schoolhouse, and that was all the children knew. The teacher lived five miles away, and could not be reached, but presently the whole neighborhood was aroused over the missing boy.

"I know he ran away because I scolded him about the cookies," sobbed Charlotte. "I said he was the most provoking boy I knew, and lots of other mean things. Oh, dear! Oh, dear! Maybe we'll never see him again."

The telephone jangled, anxious neighbors hurried here and there, and all was in confusion. Somebody even ran to old Mrs. Thurston's house away back from the high road on a little by-lane to see if she knew anything about Carl, though she was deaf and old, and could hardly be expected to hear the schoolbell ringing or any of the commotion.

"Seen anything of a runaway boy?" said a panting neighbor at the old lady's door. "Carl Jaynes ran away from home this afternoon."

"I didn't run away," cried Carl, while the old lady was hunting her ear-trumpet. "Why, yes, I did too. I ran all the way down here to get Mrs. Thurston to make some frosted cookies for my sister."

Charlotte laughed and cried when she saw her little brother safe and sound, but it was not over the cookies.

"Next time I'll ask before I take sixteen cookies all at one time," said Carl. "And don't you worry about my running away. If I ever do, I'll run right back as I did this time."—Christian Advocate.

He was made deacon at the first organization of the church and adequately filled this office. He was the beloved senior deacon of the entire congregation. He is the last of a large family that settled near Williamstown more than a hundred years ago. He also was one of a family of loyal Brethren. ## Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

IV. THE BIBLE SENSE OF SIN—THE NEED OF THE HOUR

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

A prominent church leader said recently: "The chief trouble with our churches today is that nobody is a sinner any more. From our pulpits we hear much about the divinity of man, and a great deal about vision, courage, social service, community obligation and how to abolish war, but almost nothing about sin, old-fashioned, scriptural, uneducated, unevolved, undecorated, God-defying, death-deserving, soul-destroying sin! Yet to deal with that kind of sin, Christ came into the world!"

Sin brings death. Sins of commission and of omission are equally bad. Sin is deadly poison, regardless of form or quantity. Sin is a terrible disease, afflicting all men. Sin is the one thing man needs to fear.

We need more conviction of sin and less deception. "Be not deceived." Satan has his sentinels everywhere. They are at the gateway to prayer. He is not concerned about our "good works," if only he can keep us from praying. "He laughs at our toil, but trembles when we pray."

Satan teaches man's self-sufficiency. May all men realize that "we are a bad lot," and that all need just what Jesus Christ purchased on Calvary. All need to get under the blood. Pity those who think that they can be saved by their own goodness! They are looking in the wrong glass. They need to look in God's Bible mirror and astonishment and repentance, followed by conversion and a new life of real service will result.

May the Bible sense of sin, almost a lost sense, be rediscovered. The object of this message is to impress upon all professed Christians anew the sense of sin, to bring a greater realization of sin's terrible results when permitted to run its course, to cause young and old to fear sin, and again to direct the attention of all to "The way of the Cross that leads home." Hagerstown, Md.

Three Score and Ten

Marriage and Movies

Solomon's Wife

"My Mind was Bewildered."

by
Alva J. McClain

THE only trouble with life, one man complains, is that there isn't enough of it. And so men are always struggling, often pathetically, to get more of it, in terms of years.

It is nothing unusual to read here and there very optimistic predictions about the lengthening of the human life span. The Life Extension Institute, with an impressive list of patrons, is devoted to this end. A European gland expert discusses the possibility of even eliminating death altogether. The ancient limitation of "three score and ten" is to be wholly transcended, so it is thought.

Statistical figures are solemnly brought forth to prove that science has already added years to the measure of man's life. But there is a "joker" in all these figures. The "average" life span has been lengthened. That is, due to the splendid work of scientific research, the child has a better chance to reach maturity.

But the "maximum" life span has not been lengthened. Today you have a better chance to become an old man, but not to outlive the other old men. This is the ultimatum of Professor Pearl, noted biologist of Johns Hopkins University.

The words of Job stands, "Thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass" (Job 14:5). But don't forget that Job was speaking of fallen man. Some day, it may be soon, long life will reign in a Kingdom of righteousness.

IN Ur of the Chaldees, ancient home of Abraham, the archaeologists have uncovered a great death pit containing forty-five bodies. Among the Sumerians of that day, it was the custom to sacrifice human victims in connection with the burial of some great person.

Some people, reading this, will thank God that the world has made progress in some respects at least. Still, we should not feel too superior. In Los Angeles for example, during the first twenty-one days of 1929, fifty-one victims were sacrificed to the God of Speed. And many of them were children.

The ancient Sumerians thought they were doing the will of the gods. There is no such excuse for us.

LOUELLA O. Parsons, very efficient press agent for the moving picture industry, ventures the hope that this year marriages will outdistance the divorces among the players.

This recalls a couple of very interesting questions put to a highly intelligent observer of human affairs here in Southern California.

The first question was, What is the strongest argument against the moving picture industry as now conducted? His answer was, "A history of the marital experience of its players."

The second question was, What is the most powerful influence opposed to the Christian ideal of marriage in America today? His answer was, "The example of prominent players in the moving picture world."

The word of Christ in Matthew, nineteenth chapter, ninth verse, has never been abrogated. No one is exempt from its high standards, not even the favorites of the screen. By his word, the high and the low will be judged in the last day.

RECENTLY, front page newspaper publicity was given to a story reporting that Archaeologists had dug up the mummy of Solomon's Egyptian wife. The next day the newspapers announced very briefly that the story was pure fiction.

Two lessons are obvious. First, don't believe all you read in the papers. Second, and more important, archaeological discoveries relating to Bible matters are always good for news. No other book holds such a universal interest among men.

A WEALTHY young collegian in the South, bored by life, found a new thrill by robbing and shooting to death a druggist. His attorneys plead that he was a "constitutional psychopath," incapable of knowing right from wrong. The jury, evidently composed of men who do know something about right and wrong, found him guilty of first degree murder. He will die in the electric chair, with more time to prepare for the end than he gave to his victim.

Judges and juries are getting tired of seeing hardfaced criminals escape on pleas of insanity, "constitutional" or "temporary." Such pleas are becoming an old story. For that matter, they were never new. Agamemnon, king and general of the Greeks in the famous siege of Troy, once committed an outrageous crime. When charged with guilt, he plead "aasamen"—"my mind was bewildered." The plea was accepted as valid, even by the injured party! There is nothing new under the sun.

The main thing to remember is that the biblical law for the protection of human life has never been repealed. See Genesis ninth chapter, verses five and six.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

6. Why do not Brethren people read more literature?—J. M. L.

The writer of this question assumes that Brethren people are not reading as much as they should. I have no way of determining the volume of reading done by our people but I know that perhaps we do not differ very much from any other people. I also know that many, many people do little or no reading of any worthwhile sort at all. I remember from my own observations covering a number of years and a rather wide area that the great majority of homes in which I have visited have very little reading matter in the way of either books or current literature. To my own sorrow I have seen far too much of the worthless and useless reading matter among the small and scanty store in many of these homes. I fear Christian people do not keep as well informed as they should. In saying this I am not unkindful of the multitudes who do read with profit and discernment. I must take this opportunity to suggest to any who may read this some worthwhile reading matter.

First, There is always the Bible, the Word of God. There are homes where even a Bible may be wanting. But every Christian should read the Bible daily. The second type of reading I would urge upon every Christian is found in Religious journals. Among these is one's own Church Paper. For Brethren people our Brethren Evangelist. Our Sunday School paper, The Angelus, is a weekly paper of a high order for all classes of readers, especially the youth. The third type of reading matter I would suggest is to be found in good books. I refer first to books of devotion and the culture of the spiritual life. Then of course one ought to read books of History, Travel, Missionary enterprise, Biography, Great Sermons, Inventions and Discoveries, Science and Art. There is another great class of books from which selections may be made. I refer to books bearing upon the practical affairs of life, such as bear upon one's vocation. Books on farming, gardening, home-making, the care and education of children, what one should do; books on health and right living, on one's public and social duties and the like. But of the making of books and the printing of magazines and dailies there is no end and in this brief space I can only give these very general suggestions. One should read for self-improvement and information, for culture and the development of the spiritual life. One should read to multiply one's interests in life and living. This is the only safe-guard against an impoverished and decaying old age. Paul once wrote to a young man, "Until I come, give thyself to reading."

The Urge of Evangelism

The urge of evangelism is one of the most striking characteristics of Christianity. There is something about this religion that makes men restless, that makes them dissatisfied with sitting at home enjoying the blessings of God alone, and that drives them forth eager to tell others about the peace and joy they have found. The evangelistic urge is so universally characteristic of the followers of Christ, that when the rare exceptions happen where we find it absent, we are inclined to question the genuineness of their profession. Evangelism does not always show itself in the same manner; it does not always work by the same methods; but it is as essential to our religion as sunlight is to the earth, and is as much a part of the Gospel as breath is of life.

When we inquire what is the secret of this great evangelistic urge, we find the answer in two supreme particulars. Others there are, but these are paramount. First, there is the conviction that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth and that there is none other name given under heaven whereby men must be saved. Second, there is the driving force of the obligation which Jesus laid upon all his followers to carry the "Good News" to the ends of the earth and to seek to bring all men to accept his saving grace.

The conviction that the Gospel and the Gospel alone is the power of God unto salvation is essential to the very nature of Christianity. When men lose that conviction they have lost the heart of the Gospel, they have lost that which gives it endurance and power and aggressiveness, that which makes missionaries and martyrs of its followers. Christianity is without apology uncompromising and imperialistic. It makes no agreements with other religions and recognizes no race or land as beyond its rightful field. And leaders of Christianity who seek to build up the spirit of cooperation with leaders of other religions for the sake of promoting the peace of the world need to be wary lest they barter away their right to evangelize the devotees of non-Christian religions. Gandhi, outstanding exponent of enlightened and progressive Hinduism, has taken the position that Christians ought not to proselyte the followers of Hindu pessimism. Dr. I. I. Mattuck, rabbi of the Liberal Jewish Synagogue of London, recently attacked with indignation the approval given by the Archbishop of York to Christian missions among the Jews. He insists that missions from one theistic religion to another are unjustifiable, and that for a Christian to seek to convert a Jew is an insult, although the intention may be friendly. But he who is true to the Gospel of Christ will not recognize any such limit to the legitimate evangelizing field of Christianity and will not allow himself to become a party to any such compromising attitude toward those of other religious faiths. Christianity is not just one of many and worthy religions; it is the only religion that is sufficient to save the souls of men; it can share the field with none other. And believing that there is no other name than the name of Jesus by which men must be saved, the Christian is placed under supreme obligation to give that name to those who know it not and to seek to stir men everywhere out of their indifference to the claims of that exalted name, to a humble acceptance of its grace and an acknowledgment of its power. That is the conviction that causes men's hearts to burn with evangelistic fervor.

The second element entering into this urge of evangelism is no less powerful. The command of Christ is a mighty factor in the lives of those who love him. There is no more compelling force in the universe than the compulsion of love. That was the force that was operating in the heart of Paul when he said, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Love was the driving passion that caused Peter and John to reply to the Jewish authorities who had forbidden them to preach in the name of Jesus, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." Persecution and imprisonment could not quench that passion for their Lord, nor still their voice in his behalf. After barely escaping with their lives, they departed from the Jewish council "rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. And daily in the temple and in every house, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus Christ." True love for the Lord Jesus and sincere devotion to his cause will be manifest in obedience to his word. And when he says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and "Ye are witnesses of these things," the life that loves is bound to "go" and to "witness," beginning "in Jerusalem" among neighbors and friends.

He who will not, to him Jesus says, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Love is sincere only when it obeys and there can be no real love without obedience, even as Jesus himself reiterated in John 14th chapter, "If a man love me he will keep my words." The consciousness that evangelism is the will and word of Christ will send the true disciple forth in behalf of those who have not known the saving grace of God. No greater urge can be pressed upon the loving disciple of our Lord than the fact that it is commanded thus to do. That is not legalism; it is the grace of obedience. The Gospel does not do away with the necessity of obedience; it merely changes the motive and spirit of obedience. The Christian obeys because of love and not through fear, and he who loves obeys gladly and generously, and not slavishly and grudgingly.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Pastors or laymen are invited to share in Dean Miller's "Question and Answer" department by sending in questions they would like to have discussed.

Rev. W. H. Miller is interested in getting the names and addresses of Brethren who may be living in or near Mobile and Pensacola, Alabama. He may be addressed at Grand Bay, Alabama, in care of Rev. W. C. Perry.

The Christian Endeavor Service Superintendent, Brother Homer A. Kent, answers some more questions related to Christian Endeavor work. If you have problems you would like to have light upon, write to Brother Kent about them.

The Brighton church (Howe, Indiana) was recently reported as having renewed its place on the Evangelist Honor Roll. This last week we received an addition to this number from the pastor of the church. He informs us that he is serving the Brighton church half time and is open to a call to another church close to South Bend, where he lives.

Brother A. E. Whitted reports splendid progress at Louisville, Ohio, where he conducted an evangelistic meeting, following the dedication of their new church, resulting in eight being added to the membership. At the Watch Night service one important feature was a surprise on the pastor and family in the gift of groceries and money.

Brother Elmer Keck, pastor of the Bedford County circuit in Pennsylvania, finds reason for encouragement in his work. As a result of a meeting at the New Enterprise church two confessions were received. Road improvements are making work difficult at Raystown at present, but will ultimately be to its great benefit.

Our good correspondent from Spokane, Washington, tells us that Dr. Bauman got into a real influenza epidemic during his meeting at that place. Mrs. Bauman, in addition to the hundreds of others who were ill, came under the grip of the disease. Notwithstanding handicaps, however, it turned out to be a widely influential and fruitful meeting.

Word reaches us from Brother Floyd Sibert that three members were recently added to the Rittman-Ellet circuit (Ohio)—one at Ellet and two at Rittman. He is making an effort to enlarge the subscription list of these churches to the Evangelist, both of them now being on the Honor Roll.

The passing of two of our aged ministers is reported this week—Elders J. E. Shope and J. I. Hall. Brother Hall's passing was quite sudden and was followed in four days by the passing of his faithful wife. In addition to his pulpit ministry, Brother Hall has served the brotherhood frequently through the columns of the Evangelist. May God help us that we who remain may be worthy of the noblest that these rapidly passing veterans of the cross exemplified.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, makes another brief report this week of White Gift offerings. There is still a goodly number of churches who have not reported as yet. If the Association is to reach its goal this year, those who are still out must get in with good reports, and surely the great program undertaken this year that required a larger budget than regularly commends itself to the loyal support of every church school.

The Second church of Long Beach is about the newest member of the brotherhood, as a separate organization. During the last year these good people under the leadership of Brother J. G. Lienhard have added thirty-seven to their number. The Sunday school has outgrown its equipment and the congregation is now about to dedicate a new church building. We shall be pleased to have the privilege of publishing a report and picture of the building after dedication.

Dr. W. H. Beachler reports thirty added to the membership of the Dayton church as a result of the evangelistic campaign recently held under the leadership of the "Hoosier Trio"—Brother Frank G. Coleman of Flora, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer. As a follow-up to this victory they have set themselves to a "quiet hunt" for thirty more by Easter. Under the leadership of Brother Beachler and his capable wife, our splendid Dayton church is being led in ways of substantial growth. We have learned that their work with the young people is bearing fruit.

Apropos the subject of the Sunday school lesson for February 17th and the lenten season, we are pleased to make mention of an excellent little book that came to our desk last week. It is entitled, "The Lord's Prayer." The author is Elder R. H. Miller of the Church of the Brethren and the publishers are the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. It is a small handy volume of 78 pages, neatly printed and beautifully bound, selling for 75 cents. It is an inspiring and suggestive little book, bringing a fresh interpretation of the model prayer that will prove helpful to its readers.

Dr. R. R. Teeter, our Business Manager, was called to Pleasant Hill, Ohio, this week on account of the death on February 4th, of his youngest sister, Miss Mazie Teeter, who for many years was a popular teacher in the Pleasant Hill public schools and at the same time a tower of strength to the Brethren church of that town. The editor well recalls the worth of her leadership and the dependableness of her cooperation in every activity of the church during the days of his pastorate in that community. The church and the community will greatly miss her. We extend to Brother Teeter our personal sympathy and also bespeak the sympathy of the Evangelist family in this hour of sadness.

We learn from Brother Bauman's church calendar that Miss Johanna Nielsen has recently started on the long journey around Cape Horn to Buenos Aires and thence to her mission station in our Argentinian district. Dr. Bauman says: "She goes forth as our missionary,—the personal representative of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, to carry the Gospel of the grace of God to those who sit in darkness in the great 'Neglected Continent.'" The Long Beach church is to be congratulated on the commendable missionary responsibilities they have assumed, and also on the splendid personnel of their representatives on the foreign field—in both Africa and South America. Miss Nielsen's return to the field is of interest to the entire brotherhood and many will join the Long Beach church in following her with their prayers.

Dr. S. Z. Sharp made a statement during his visit to Ashland during the Golden Jubilee celebration to the effect that Ashland was the place where the division in Dunkerism was started and he didn't see why it should not be the place where the reuniting process should begin. Now another prominent Church of the Brethren minister has been invited into the pulpit of the Ashland Brethren church and into the chapel services of the college. Dr. F. F. Holsopple, pastor of the Church of the Brethren of Roanoke, Virginia, is assisting Dr. Bame, the pastor, in a two weeks' evangelistic campaign and is also speaking in the college chapel. And preceding Brother Holsopple's coming, the pastor of the Dickey church, Rev. Ora Delauer, and the pastor of the Church of the Brethren in the city, Rev. J. Perry Prather, preached in Brother Bame's pulpit. We think the Ashland church is showing a commendable leadership in the matter of cooperation.

The Benevolence Board president, Mr. Frank Roscoe, of New Paris, Indiana, sends us this announcement and urges in behalf of the coming offering for the Superannuated Ministers. The notice arrived too late to find place in the "Announcement" department and so we give it space here:

Just once every 365 days we have an opportunity to contribute in a tangible way to the support of those who labored in the interest of our cause when conditions were vastly different from what they are at present, when compensation was meager, if not entirely lacking.

Each year the need of a larger offering is evident as the number in need of assistance increases.

Will we remember those who sacrificed to the church and wrought for us in spiritual things when we were too young to help ourselves? We will have the opportunity on February 24th.

"Bring ye all the tithes, . . . and I will pour you out a blessing." If we want the blessing, here is the condition. "The tithe is holy unto the Lord."

We are glad for the expressions of appreciation that are reaching our office concerning the changes and improvements that have been made in the Evangelist this year. The "Heart Throbs of our Church Leaders" is being highly appreciated, as are also the departments conducted by Prof. McClain and Dean Miller. We announced some time ago that Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, of Chicago, would take over the "Worship Program" about the first of February. It has been agreed, however, by Brother Lyon and the editor that the "Fellowship of Prayer" program arranged by the commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life for enlisting the united worship of Protestantism during Lent, will be published, and that Brother Lyon will begin his work immediately following Easter. Those who remember Brother Lyon's splendid Christian Endeavor notes of a few years ago will be glad to have him become a regular contributor again. In the meantime we hope you will get inspiration from cooperating with this widely used devotional program on the general theme, "The Christian's Heritage," begun in this issue. Those who wish to get them in full as published in booklet form at two cents per copy, may secure them by writing to the Commission on Evangelism and Life Service, Federal Council of Churches, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, calls attention to a fact that the brotherhood needs to keep in mind, and that is, though the dial has reached the 200,000 dollar mark, the Endowment Campaign has not reached a safe margin yet. 200,000 is as high as the dial registers, but it is not the mark of the college's needs. The churches that have not yet been canvassed should take note of this fact. The dial hand ought to swing half way around again before it stops. There were some who insisted that the church ought to give $300,000 during this campaign; others, however, did not think such a mark would be reached under existing conditions. But every one who is acquainted with the situation agrees that the church can and ought to go one quarter of the way around again—that is, make it $250,000. The shrinkage that must be counted upon, and the sums that are not now available as earning endowment make it necessary for the church to go beyond the 200,000 figure, if Ashland is to be in shape to make the grade as a standard college. Let no church not yet canvassed fall into the error against which Dr. Bell warns—that of thinking the campaign is over and that the college doesn't need their gifts. It is our opinion that the very last dollar the church can give will be needed to put the college on a safe financial foundation for meeting present educational requirements.

The Unity of the Brethren

By Charles H. Ashman, Pastor First Church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania

An address delivered before the Joint Meeting of the Cough Valley Church of the Brethren and Brethren Ministers and unanimously approved by them, being requested for publication.

"Behold, how good and how pleasant for Brethren to dwell together in unity" (Psalm 133:1). There is a striking parallel between the history of the building of the Tower of Babel and that of the Church. We do not say that the one was a prophetic forecast of the other, but that there are striking points of comparison. When the Tower was built, there was marvelous unity among the people. "The whole earth was of one language and of one speech." In the first period of the history of the Church, there was marvelous unity. "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." Now, there crept into the hearts of the builders of Babel, a selfish ambition. They said, "Let US build a tower. Let US make for OURSELVES a name, etc." Even so, there crept into the Apostolic Church a worldly ambition. There came the desire to be popular instead of persecuted. The Church flirted with the world. In the building of the Tower of Babel, brick, slime, and mortar were used. They thought they could reach heaven by earthly substance. Even so, the Church yielded to the temptation to advance by political influence instead of spiritual power. She surrendered her pilgrim character under Constantine. In the construction of Babel, there was a man made unity. Under the Roman Papacy, a man made unity prevailed. Now, the building of Babel, resulted in confusion of tongues, races, nationalities, etc. Even thus from the Roman Papacy has come since the days of the Reformation the multitudinous forms of Protestantism.

There is a mystical union among God's children. All regenerated believers are a part of Christ's body and bride. All children of God are brethren in Christ. All who have received the spirit of adoption address the same God as "Father." Of such the Master spoke when he said, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." It is both narrow and unscriptural to say, "We four and no more" are saved.

Now, the Holy Spirit is able to produce actual unity among God's children. He did produce such in the Early Church. Paul declares in Ephesians 2: 14-15, "For he is our peace, who hath made both one and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh, the enmity." Naturally, there existed the most bitter enmity between Jew and Gentile, but the Spirit reconciled them in Christ. The Jerusalem Council gave the right hand of fellowship to Paul and Barnabas. He is able to produce unity whenever we are willing to yield to him.

In Ephesians 4:3-6, we have the outline of Unity with its fundamentals. Prefacing these with these words, "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," Paul declares there are seven doctrinal fundamentals of unity. They are, "One body, one Spirit, one Hope, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, and one Father." The Holy Spirit is a unit, he is not divided. His power is unifying, never divisive. Whenever our hearts and wills are yielded unto him, he will harmonize and unify.

The only way that unity will ever come among the people of God is according to this Spirit-unifying program. History proves that any attempt to federate or unify otherwise is doomed to failure. Mechanical or man-invented schemes, however ingenious they are, cannot unify the people of God. The Holy Spirit can, but he alone.

Now, we turn from the general study of Protestantism and confine our study to the "Brethren." We deliberately turn our back on the past. With Paul, "we forget those things which are behind." We have no desire to stir unpleasant memories. Our purpose is to "reach forth unto those things which are before." Yielding ourselves to the Holy Spirit, we present certain suggestive plans whereby we believe the Church of the Brethren and the Brethren church can and ought to become one denomination. We seek to make these practical and not visionary.

Biblical

Our union must be Biblical. The standard of the Brethren family from its origin until this very hour has been loyalty to the Bible. Other churches may federate on some other basis than strictly Biblical, but not the Brethren churches. We accept the Scriptures as the supreme authority in all things. Officially, both churches believe in the Scriptures as the inspired and infallible revelation of God. In this respect, we are already one in sentiment.

Doctrinal

Our union must be doctrinal. Biblical ordinances have been made distinctive in all our history. In the observance of these as to Baptism, Feet-washing, Lord's Supper, Communion of Bread and Wine, Anointing the Sick, etc., we are and always have been in harmony. But, our doctrinal union must include all the doctrines of Christianity. No man or church ought ever to be asked to surrender or compromise belief in any part of the Bible for any reason. Accepting the Scriptures as inspired, no union could be consistent which did not include every doctrine taught in the Word. It ought to be comparatively easy for our churches to unite on this basis for the standards and teachings and

AS THE SCRIPTURE SAITH

Christ also loved the church, and gave himself up for it; that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word, that he might present the church to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish (Eph. 5:25, 26).

They then that received his word were baptized; ... And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers (Acts 2:41, 42).

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you (Matt. 28:20).

If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them (John 13:17).

Till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the law, till all things be accomplished (Matt. 5:18).

God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son (Heb. 1:1, 2).

I was constrained to write unto you exhorting you to contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints (Jude 3).

For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine, but, having itching ears, heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts; and will turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables (2 Tim. 4:3, 4).

If a man love me he will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and will make our abode with him (John 14:23).

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

XX. Elder W. J. H. Bauman

By Martin Shively, D.D.

Brother Bauman was born of German parentage, in the state of Pennsylvania, December 24, 1837. His father was educated for the Roman Catholic priesthood, but for some reason unknown to the writer, he entered the medical profession instead. Brother Bauman began his life therefore with the advantage of having an educated father, with everything that this implies, and this, no doubt, accounts for the fact, that to the end of his life, he evinced an intellectual brilliancy which was far from usual. However, instead of entering any of the learned professions, he chose to learn the trade of stone mason, the enduring nature of its product, no doubt making a fundamental appeal to him. Fairly early in his life, he must have become convinced that there was within him something more imperishable than stone, and at the age of twenty, he surrendered his heart and life to God, and thus began a term of service in Christian advancement, which was terminated only by his death. He must have impressed his Brethren in what was then known as the German Baptist church, with both his ability and his consecration, for three years after uniting with the church, he was called to serve in the ministry. For eighteen years thereafter, he provided for the material wants of his family by farming and working at his trade, but preached from one to three times per Sunday all the while. During the winter seasons, when the demands of the farm were less, he spent much time in evangelistic effort, which was attended with much blessing to those among whom he labored. He early espoused the so called "Progressive Movement" in the church, and shared fully in all the trials and troubles in which its leaders became involved. He could easily be classed among the stalwarts in that movement, and both by tongue and pen, made such contribution to the cause, as has led in a wonderful way to the real upbuilding of the Tunker fraternity, except for the painful and useless division which marked the beginning of the upward trend. Brother Bauman was a ready writer, and none of us who are past middle life, have forgotten, nor can we, the almost weekly contributions in our church paper from his pen, under the general caption, 'Trans-Missouri Flashes. These articles were characterized by a few outstanding qualities.—They were never lengthy, their paragraphs were very brief, consisting mostly of a single sentence, short and snappy, and epigrammatic. There was nothing ambiguous in his utterances, and they were always true to the Word. The Brethren church never had a more loyal son than he, and in addition to being a son of the church, he was also among the fathers in it, and at a time too, when such relations involved far more than younger folks are able to appreciate. There was much burning of the midnight oil, since a livelihood had to be provided for during the day. There were not so many books as now, but those available were more nearly mastered than in these days of profusion, and, I almost said, "confusion." There were heartaches innumerable, when conscience led to the taking of such steps as rent the ties of friendships which were almost as precious as life itself. I cannot but feel that all honor is due to the men and women with such depths of conviction, as made them willing to undertake any task, and to endure any suffering, in matters involving the progress of the cause to which they had pledged their allegiance.

I think my first meeting with Brother Bauman, was at the general conference, held at Ashland, in 1887. I had one brief visit with him in his home, at Olathe, Kansas, but I really never knew him as intimately as most of the other men about whom I have written. I knew him well enough however, to admire both his ability and his loyalty, as well as the advanced leadership in which he served. His work is done, for he has gone to the reward which awaits the faithful. The summons came to him at the home of his son, Elder L. S. Bauman, only a few years ago, and the weary, work-worn hands are folded in the rest which they have fully earned. The man is dead, but the name lives on, and promises to survive for some years to come, at least, since a grandson is here at the college, preparing to "carry on." May all who bear the name, and all who may be in any way associated with it, be as worthy of a place in hearts they leave behind, as he about whom I have tried to tell you, is my prayer.

official utterances of our churches are in harmony with it. Any preacher or layman denying any doctrine of the Bible is out of harmony with the church anyhow. Doubtless, both of us have apostate preachers and teachers who ought to be eliminated. We do not anticipate serious difficulty in doctrine whenever a union shall be attempted.

Church Polity

In the union of our churches, the chief difficulty may be in matters of church polity. There are points of difference in church government between us. But, these need present no insurmountable barrier to union. In anticipation of such a union, a joint commission could prepare a form of church polity patterned after that of the Apostolic Church. Surely the Bible presents, at least in principle, a form of polity.

Practical Suggestions

We present certain practical suggestions. These are largely local in application. First.—We recommend the forming of a Joint Ministerium of the ministers of our churches of Johnstown and vicinity which shall meet quarterly. This district represents, within a radius of 20 miles, 25 churches with an approximate membership of 7,000. It presents a most excellent opportunity for a better understanding between the two churches. This must begin with the ministers. Second.—We should encourage the mutual exchange of letters between our churches. Not the compelling of members to transfer their membership in moving from one locality to another, but the encouraging of this practice which already is in existence. Especially, we ought to encourage the transfer of membership in districts in which there is only one of the two churches. This would save folks to Brethrenism, strengthen both churches, and cultivate a feeling of at least co-operation between us. Third.—We ought to arrive at some understanding that will prevent a Brethren church and a Church of the Brethren from both locating in a district that will support only one in a successful manner. There are many such in existence today. Both struggle along, paying a pastor just above a starvation salary, when, if there was only one church of our faith, it could be a prosperous one. We ought to come to a mutual agreement that will avoid the increase of such instances, even if it will not be retroactive in the correction of those that already exist. Fourth.—We suggest that fellowship meetings of all our churches in this district be held, these to be arranged by the Joint Ministerium—just deeply devotional, fraternal meetings. These would cultivate a better understanding and develop clearer relationships between us.

Now, we recognize that these suggestions are chiefly local in their application. The ultimate union of the two denominations will necessitate joint action by our two National Conferences. These suggestions will prepare us locally for this joint action which we believe is coming.

Finally, Brethren, the Whole Gospel for which we stand has an irresistible appeal to the human heart. There is a definite place for the Whole Gospel church. As we enter deeper into the days of the Apostasy, the church that can consistently present the Whole Gospel appeal will receive thousands of members. Let us therefore, "earnestly contend for THE FAITH, once for all delivered unto the Saints."

"Christianity's Fulness in Christ".

By A. E. Whitted

Text—Christ is all and in all. Colossians 3:11.

This passage of Scripture from the pen of Paul is full of strength and beauty. It is one that is big as Christ is big and, as spacious as God himself. It implies that the whole of Christianity is full of Christ, "Christ in all." The great warm sun is all in all to the solar system. On the earth, where man dwells, the sun is the life of all vegetation. He paints with utmost care every flower, ripens the growing grain, and awakens all nature into life and beauty, thus becoming all in all to us. Christ the Redeemer is the Sun of Righteousness. Whatever the sun is to the material world that and abundantly more is the Son of God to the spiritual realm. He is all in all in the great system of Christianity.

There can be no true and satisfactory religion without Christ. Man's circumstances and the needs growing out of them cannot be met by any schemes of religion. Christ can meet them, yea Christ is in every way gloriously adapted to the circumstances of fallen humanity. In the dignity of his person, in his gracious atonement, in the fulness and freeness of his salvation, in that he is the author of eternal life, yes, in every way. He is all and in all.

Christ is "all in all" in the way of salvation as it respects God. "I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me" (John 14:6). Christ becomes our avenue of approach to God. He is the ladder that Jacob saw by which man might climb and find intercourse with the Father. He has become man's advocate pleading his cause in the presence of the Father. "Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. 7:25). He verily is our "all in all" as he stands pleading between us and the Father.

Christ is "all in all" in the work of redemption as it affects man. Jesus has paid the price in full for our redemption. "Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world according to the will of God and our Father: 'to whom be glory forever and ever' (Gal. 1:4, 5). Christ, 'in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. 1:7). Surely Christ paid the price of our redemption and has wrought for every man a perfect righteousness.

"Gone is all my debt of sin,
A great change is brought within,
And to live I now begin,
Risen from the fall;
Yet the debt I did not pay—
Someone died for me one day,
Sweeping all the debt away,
Jesus paid it all."

Through Christ we are also sanctified. "And you that were sometime alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked words, yet now hath he reconciled. In the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and unreprouvable in his sight" (Col. 1:21, 22). "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified, are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren" (Heb. 2:11).

Christ is "all in all" in his church. He has become its head, not in a temporal way, for the church of Christ has no temporal head, but rather in a spiritual way. "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have preeminence" (Col. 1:18). It pleased God to make this appointment. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church" (Eph. 1:22). The church has no human laws but spiritual laws. So Christ who is the head of the church promises his followers no earthly honors or reward, but does promise them spiritual honors and heavenly rewards. The church is governed by one Supreme head, Jesus Christ. To him we either stand or fall. "One is your Master even Christ" (Matt. 23:8). Let us therefore be careful that man's wisdom be not substituted for the wisdom of the Christ. See to it that man made laws govern not your life, rather let man and pride and selfishness sink but let Christ be "all in all." Christ has given his church a creed in the form of the Holy Scriptures. He himself is become the "all in all" in this creed. All Divine truths connect and harmonize in him. Christ is surely "all in all" to his body, the church.

"The Church's one Foundation, is Jesus Christ the Lord;
She is his new creation, by water and by word;
From heaven he came and sought her, To be his holy bride;
With his own blood he bought her, And for her life he died.

"The church shall never perish! The dear Lord to defend,
To guide, sustain and cherish, Is with her to the end.
Tho there be those who hate her, And false sons in her pale,
Against or foe or traitor She ever shall prevail."

Christ is "all in all" in the life of those that believe on him. Christ is the ground of the believer's faith. Christ is the believer's confidence. He is the believer's hope. "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through the gospel, comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good work" (II Thess. 16:17). The Christian loves Christ and finds enjoyment in expressing that love in service and the keeping of his commandments. It is to Christ that the believer looks in the hour of trial and sorrow for comfort and solace. He knows Christ's promise holds. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." It was because Paul's life was hid with Christ in God that enabled him to say, "For me to live is Christ." The story is told of a man who prospered greatly and became the owner of much of this world's goods. His success and prosperity made him miserly. He acquired the habit of turning all his possessions into gold and hiding it away in bags about his premises. When he lay dying he called for his bags of gold. They were brought and clasping them one by one as idols to his breast, he said, "They will not do, they will not do." The poor deluded soul wanted Christ as his "all in all." His bags of gold would not do. Christ alone will suffice when we enter the "valley." He is the believer's "all in all."

Christ is "all in all" in the enjoyment of heaven. Heaven would not be heaven without Christ. Yes Christ continues to be our all in all in the world to come. "The Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water" (Rev. 7:17). He is the theme, yea, the "all in all" of the celestial anthems. The angel choirs of heaven are pleased to honor him, and tune their golden harps to aid in singing his praise. Enraptured saints also would do him honor and come, bringing their starry crowns to cast them at his feet. There could be no heaven without the Christ.

"Jesus the very thought of thee
With sweetness fills the breast;
But sweeter far thy face to see,
And in thy presence rest.

Oh hope of every contrite heart!
Oh joy of all the meek!
To those who fall, how kind thou art;
How good to those who seek.

But what to those who find?
Ah, this nor tongue nor pen can show.
The love of Jesus—what it is,
None but his loved ones know.

Jesus, our only joy be thou,
As thou our prize wilt be;
Jesus, be thou our glory now,
And through eternity.

Louisville, Ohio.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

HIGH SCHOOL CITY AND COUNTRY EDUCATION

The dweller in the country seems to have about as good opportunity for education as his cousin in the city, but he does not take as good advantage of it. The federal Bureau of Education states that there are today in the United States twenty-one thousand, seven hundred high schools. Reports have been received from seventeen thousand, seven hundred and eleven of these, of which three thousand, nine hundred and sixty, or 22.4 per cent are urban high schools, that is, they are located in centers of two thousand, five hundred or more population; thirteen thousand, seven hundred and fifty-one or 77.6 per cent, are rural—located in centers of two thousand, five hundred, or less in population.

In the thirteen thousand, seven hundred and fifty-one rural high schools there are only one million, seventy-nine thousand, eighty-six children, or 28.8 per cent of the total high school enrollment; in the three thousand, nine hundred and sixty urban high schools there are two million, six hundred and sixty-two thousand, three hundred sixty-four children, or 71.2 per cent of the total enrollment.

It is estimated that more than eighteen of every one hundred children fifteen to eighteen years of age in urban areas continue their education beyond the high school, while only 7.2 of every hundred children of the same age-group in rural areas seek further education preparation.

As secondary education has developed and is now functioning, the urban high school child has a much better chance to go to high school, and when he does go he enjoys an educational opportunity much better adjusted to life's needs than that now available in the rural schools.—The Christian Evangelist.

FINDS JEWISH COLONY IN HEART OF AFRICA

The French consul at Akka, in southern Morocco, M. Rene Leblond, recently discovered a thriving Jewish colony in the heart of the African desert. While map-making by airplane over the Sahara, H. Leblond was forced to descend in a lonely spot where he was soon surrounded by tribesmen. Recalling the fate of other French aviators who have fallen into the hands of desert-dwellers, M. Leblond steeled himself for an ordeal. To his astonishment, he was received with the greatest honor, and found himself in the midst of a colony composed of descendants of Jews who had fled from the vicinity of the Mediterranean years ago. The last white man in the colony had penetrated there in 1866. Only vague rumors of the world war had been heard. Although these Jews spoke an Arabic dialect, they used Hebrew lettering in their script, and they preserved their Jewish religious ceremonials.—Christian Century.

THE COST OF CANDY

A New Yorker eats an average of twelve pounds of candy a year, while the average person in Nevada eats seventeen pounds. Nevada has the highest candy figures of any state in the country. New York gets away with 130 million pounds, New Jersey with 31 million pounds a year. These statistics were recently given over the radio. The speaker said that a report from eighty per cent of the nation's candy manufacturers shows that in 1926, the latest figures available, over $258,000,000 was spent for candy in the United States. New York's candy costs $43,000,000.

Try to figure out whether the churches get more than the candy trade, whether the clergy cost less than candy, whether any one gives up candy to give money to the church, whether New Yorkers think candy is more worth while than cathedrals, or vice versa, whether people give up more money for luxuries than for necessities. And as the Irishman said, it leaves you "not dead, only spacheless."—The Living Church.

THE "ROMAN QUESTION"

One of the most significant events of recent times is the proposed settlement of the "Roman Question," which is the long-standing quarrel between the Vatican and the Italian Government, involving the claim of the popes to temporal sovereignty and power. Since the loss of the last of the Papal states in 1870 the popes have shut themselves up within the limits of the Vatican, in sullen protest against the legality of the Italian occupation. Now, apparently, an agreement has been reached providing for the cession by Italy to the Holy See of a small extension of territory lying southeast of the Vatican gardens, including the villas of Bameleck and Doria-Pamphili, with extraterritorial rights. There is also to be paid an indemnity of about $52,632,600 to compensate for property taken by the Italian Government in 1870. Thus the Pope once more becomes a temporal sovereign, ruling over a Papal State, sending his embassages to the other royal courts of the world, and receiving with regal pomp the plenipotentiaries to his own "State." True, he will have no subjects as yet, but they will doubtless come later. At any rate, the Papacy has won a great moral victory for the principle for which it has contended, and the end is not yet. We may be sure of further developments.—C. M. Elderdice in The Methodist Protestant.

THE MIND UNDER THE GUIDANCE OF THE HEART

In an address on "Our Aims in Teaching the Bible in College" Dr. L. W. Crawford, of George Peabody College for Teachers, stressed the spiritual side of the instruction and insisted that "fellowship as well as scholarship, heartsearch as well as research, mysticism in preference to skepticism, construction rather than destruction, undergirding more than undermining, an appeal to the heart as well as the head, a reverent search for the truth rather than an agnostic attitude toward the truth, more spiritualizing and less dogmatizing, faith and trust founded on an understanding knowledge rather than doubt and disbelief fostered by cynical, unanswered questions, a conviction that, though Paul may plant and Apollos water, God gives the increase—these should be outstanding guides in the formation of aims."

These aims are quite such as all the schools need to keep prominently before them. Unless the Godward side of instruction is made prominent the truth will not be seen in proper proportions—indeed, it may be missed entirely.—The Christian Advocate (Nashville).

THE GOAL OF AMERICAN EDUCATION

Every intelligent churchman in the United States will be thrilled by the announcement of a meeting to be held at Cleveland, February 24-28. The department of superintendence of the National Education association will bring together thousands of schoolmen and women to discuss "how the public schools can better serve democracy and increasingly produce a higher type of citizen." The announcement calls this subject a statement of the goal of American education, a major objective of the church and the hope of good citizens everywhere. In such an endeavor it recognizes a joint interest of the schools and the church, and appeals to the churches to devote the morning service, February 24, to a consideration of the subject of the convention. As far as our people sense the profound significance of such an appeal, the suggestion will be sufficient.—The Baptist,

Our Worship Program

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENTS

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE EMPTY VINE—Hosea 10:1-4. "Israel is an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himself." Israel was empty because he was selfish. He failed to bring forth the fruits of righteousness because he was interested primarily in self. He kept up the pretense of being religious; he built altars and made "goodly images," but underneath it all was a divided heart. The heart cannot be centered on self and at the same time give sincere and acceptable worship to God. The divided heart cannot serve God, for Jesus said, "No man can serve two masters."

TUESDAY

A HEART-TESTING—Jude 1-4. "I exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith that was delivered unto the saints." The faith for which we are to contend is not merely an intellectual affair, but is a matter of conduct and of life as well. It means fidelity to the life of reverence and devotion, freedom from carnality and worldliness and to be clothed with spirituality and power. It means holding to the faith as it is in Christ Jesus and demonstrating that faith in life. The test comes to each man's heart.

WEDNESDAY

(The program of "The Fellowship of Prayer" on the theme, "The Christian's Heritage" begins today, February 13th, and concludes with Easter Sunday.)

TAKE HEED TO THYSELF—1 Tim. 4:16; Eph. 4:17-32. Many of the ills of life come from self-neglect. It is true, some are overmuch concerned about themselves and so are kept in ill health, but many are sick because they are careless of themselves. The lenten season calls for self-attention. Absorbed in my work, or diverted by my pleasures, have I been neglectful of myself, careless of the inner life? My own spiritual health is of primary concern. If I would be used and useful in the service of Christ, I must keep myself fit.

THURSDAY

OUR LORD'S TEMPTATION—Heb. 4:15; Matt. 4:1-7. "But was tempted in all points like as we, yet without sin." Our Lord's temptation was a distinctly private affair, and no one would have known about it if he had not told it. So, many of our struggles are hidden from men; there is no one to see and know but God and conscience. But may we keep in mind when tempted to do a thing of which we would be ashamed to have men know, that nothing can be concealed from God. He knows the thoughts and intents of the heart. Let us then throw everything open before him and cry, Search me and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts.

FRIDAY

OVERCOMING THE WORLD—1 John 2:12-17; 5:4. "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world." Has the world been too much with us, laying waste our powers and alienating us from the life of the Spirit? Do we find ourselves more at home with the world than in fellowship with Christ? Are secular things more interesting to us than the things of the Spirit? Let us be on our guard, knowing that the world offers only temporary satisfaction and that if we are to live and rejoice in the things of the Spirit we must overcome the world.

SATURDAY

PRIVATE PRAYER—Matt. 6:5-15. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet." Private prayer should be the great joy and comfort of the Christian. And yet very often it is but a hurried task, a part of the day's routine, perfunctory and feeble. "My words fly up, my thoughts remain below." So my spiritual life is left un nourished. The trouble is we do not take prayer seriously enough. We do not take enough time for prayer. Somehow I must be made more sensible of my own great need of God's presence.

SUNDAY

DAY OF REST AND GLADNESS—Matt. 11:28-12:14. "And ye shall find rest unto your souls." This is the Lord's Day, a day of rest and gladness, rest from the toils of the week and rest from the cares of life. May it be for each one a day of physical rest and of spiritual renewal and enrichment. On this day, let us heed the voice of heaven, "Be still and know that I am God."—G. S. B.

The Prayer and Dedication of a Girl

"Our dear Heavenly Father, redeem us from the curse of self-indulgence, spare us from days of idle ease, guard our passions, control our lips, purify our souls. Help us, the light-hearted, fun-loving, pleasure-seeking, hope-inspired girls of our day, to acknowledge thee, Savior, Shepherd, Friend."
Amen.

8. Hymn (Tune—Cannonbury)

O Father, thou who givest all
The bounty of thy perfect love,
We thank thee that upon us fall
Such tender blessings from above.

We thank thee for the grace of home,
For mother's love and father's care;
For friends and teachers—all who come
Our joys and hopes and fears to share.

For eyes to see, and ears to hear,
For hands to serve, and arms to lift,
For shoulders broad and strong to bear,
For feet to run on errands swift.

For faith to conquer doubt and fear,
For love to answer every call,
For strength to do, and will to dare,
We thank thee, O thou Lord of all. Amen.
—Holmes.

9. Litany for Fathers and Mothers

"We pray for all fathers and mothers that they may realize the Fatherhood of God, and so practice his presence, that the children may be won for Jesus.

That they may have the love of parents and the wisdom of teachers; that their lives may be ruled by simplicity, gladness and sympathy; that they may guide by the constraining influence of love, rather than by the restraint of fear.

That they may with patience foster in children a love of goodness, truth, and beauty;

And that they may lead the splendid energy of youth to find its outlet and satisfaction in fellowship and service, that by the inspiration of thy loving Spirit they may direct the thoughts of their children, through curiosity to wonder, through fairies to angels, through the imagination of the delights of playtime to the worship of the joys of the Eternal.

That all children may acknowledge Christ as their Captain, Hero, King." Amen.

10. Beatitudes for the Home

Blessed are they who rejoice in their children;
To them is revealed the Fatherhood of God.
Blessed are they who know the power of love;

They dwell in God, for God is love.

Blessed are the songful of soul;

They carry light and joy to shadowed lives.

Blessed are they that see visions;

They shall rejoice in the hidden ways of God.

Blessed are they that have understanding hearts;

To them shall be multiplied kingdoms of delight.

Blessed are the childless, loving children still;

Theirs shall be a mightier family—even as the stars of heaven.

Blessed are they whose memories we cherish;

Our thoughts add jewels to their crowns.

—Oxenham.

11. Hymn: Home, Sweet Home

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,

Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home;

A charm from the skies seems to hallow us there,

Which, seek through the world, is ne'er met with elsewhere.

Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
There's no place like home,
O, there's no place like home.

—Paine.

12. Benediction

May nothing evil cross this door,

And may ill-fortune never pry

About these windows; may the roar

And rains go by.

Strengthened by faith, the rafters will Withstand the battering of the storm.

This hearth, though all the world grow chill,

Will keep you warm.

Peace shall walk softly through these rooms,

Touching your lips with holy wine,

Till every casual corner blooms

Into a shrine.

Laughter shall down the raucous shout

And, though the sheltering walls are thin

May they be strong to keep hate out

And hold love in. —Untermeyer.

OPTIONAL

The Unveiling of Pictures

"Art is the smile of the human soul upon the house and upon the furnishings. It is the charm of thought and of sentiment embodied in all that is of use to man."

"For all singers and musicians:

For all who work in form and color to increase the joy of life;

For poets and craftsmen:

For all who rejoice in their work and make things well. WE GIVE THEE THANKS."

Dedication of Books

The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, bring when thou comest, and the books, especially the parchments. 2nd Timothy 4 (13).

We bless thee, O Lord, for all the friendships with which our lives have been enriched.

And among these companions of ours that have made the day inspiring, are those who have spoken to us in the pages of good books.

Any humblest book we take into our hands has a mute yet eloquent story to tell of the ministry of writings, all through the centuries since men first expressed their thoughts in written characters. Whether on slabs of stone, on leaves of trees, on skins of beasts, on rolls of papyrus or on printed pages of books, the dower of years has been gathered and preserved for our enrichment in our books, whether few or many, costly or inexpensive, we have silent companionship of our own choosing, our inspiration to noble living, and our unfailing friends.

Amen.—Daily Altar.

Dedication of a Garden

Make silent our hearts in thy love this day,
O silent and steadfast God:

Breathe thou thy peace:

Fill us with stillness and calm:

Attune our hearts to the silent music of Nature:

Teach us to listen to stars, to flowers, to hills.

To placid lake water under the moon:

That hearing this speech in the silence,

This voice of thy love,

We may know thee and love thee forever.
Amen. —Hoyland.

Dedication of a Tree

For the strength and peace of the trees,

We thank thee, our God:

For their quiet unshaking growth,

For their stalwart and trusty friendship,

For their sociable, neighborly silence:

For their ancient calm on a windless day:

For their cheery, murmurous stir
When the breeze is abroad with its melodies:

For the quiet and sure revelation of thee

Which they bring to our souls

As we sit thus silent amongst them,

We thank thee, our God. Amen.
—Hoyland.

Very few large churches remain in the are to reach our goal the more than forty churches that have not yet reported will have to boost the total. This week's report

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for February 17)

VII. Prayer

Scripture Lesson—

Printed Text—Matt. 6:5-13; Luke 18:9-14; 1 John 5:14, 15.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 121.

Golden Text—If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will,
and it shall be done unto you. John 15:7.

Introductory Note

The Lord's Prayer is a part of the Sermon on the Mount and was delivered by Jesus in the midsummer of A. D. 28, during the second year of his ministry, on the Horns of Hattin, southwest of Capernaum.
He spoke the parable of the Pharisee and the publican in Perea in March of A. D.

30, near the close of his ministry. John wrote his epistle near the close of his life, about A. D. 85 to 95, in Ephesus.

Approaching the Lesson

Dr. Hermon Eldredge says, Everybody prays.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire,
That trembles in the breast."

We all have those "deep desires" whether they are "uttered or unexpressed;" and we all have our own way of praying, but we all pray.

Jesus says that the Pharisee "prayed thus with himself" and it really never got farther than "with himself."

A Boston newspaper, in giving an account of a public gathering stated that the minister "gave one of the most eloquent prayers ever offered to a Boston audience" and one who was there in commenting on it said that the report was correct and that the prayer was really addressed and offered to a "Boston audience" and not to the throne of grace and it never was delivered there.

For we often "say prayers" without doing much real praying. Our "sincere desire" is not centered in our petition and therefore we "pray not."

The Model Prayer

Our Lord gives us a model which embodies all true prayer. It covers the whole range of our being and wants, spiritual as well as temporal, and should be the touchstone by which we test all our petitions. "Intercession also, implied in the plural pronouns our and us," says Dean Goulburn, "instead of being a clause added on to it, is woven into its very texture. Break off the minutest fragment you please, and you will find intercession in it." The more thoroughly and carefully the Lord's Prayer is studied the more will its fullness and beauty open before the mind. It gives us the warrant of asking for temporal blessings, but teaches us that the best good is in doing the Father's will and trusting his care who "knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him." Mt. 6:8, 32.—Illustrator. "Our Father in Heaven"—and here and now. "Hallowed Be Thy Name"—and every work of thine.

"Thy Kingdom Come"—on earth and not in heaven only.

"Thy Will Be Done"—not just at funerals, but in our everyday life.

"Give Us This Day"—us—all of us—not just "me" but OUR daily bread.

"Forgive Us Our Debts"—for we all have sinned—all of us.

"And Lead Us not Into Temptation"—we must face it, but God grant that we go not "into" it.

"Deliver Us From the Evil One"—who seeks to make us do the things we hate when we are our better selves.

"Thine Is the Glory"—all his is ours and we are Christ's and Christ is God's.

"Forever. Amen."—Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day—O, thou who changest not, may we abide with thee.

Forever and forever and forever.

Amen and amen and amen.—Selected.

Give Us this Day

Some one tells us that "Believers are beggars, Mt. 7:7-11; Jn. 14:13, 14; recognizing God's providence. This ought to be the language of every heart, signifying with our much or little that we acknowledge our dependence. But we need bread for our souls as well as for our bodies, "the bread of the mighty," Ps. 78:25, margin, "angels' food," bread of heaven, Ex. 16:15; Jn. 6:35. We can only have it from the Father through the pierced hands of the Son, Jn. 6:50, 51.

Forgive as We Forgive

That is distinctly Christian. Christian forgiveness is a higher kind of forgiveness. The subject is often referred to in Scripture when the "spirit of forgiveness" is meant, or what we may perhaps call "forgiveness." If we were asked to fix on some one thing which distinguishes (differentiates) the Christian from all other religions, we should incline to instance its "doctrine of forgiveness," which amounts to this—that the injured man is bound to endeavor, by the signs and expressions of his forgiveness, to try to melt and win his injurer. Other religions say, "Wait till forgiveness is asked." The Christian religion says, "Ask your injurer to let you forgive."

Not Into Temptation

"Bring us not into temptation."—Wey. "For you would not lead us into temptation."—Mod. Eng. How easy it is to tear a piece of paper along the line in which it has originally been folded! How easy it is for a second temptation to overcome when the first has been yielded to! A sin that has once gained the victory over our moral nature has put a fold, as it were, in that nature, and destroyed its straightness and smoothness, so that when the same temptation comes a second time, it seeks the weak point which it had formerly made, and, along that line of least resistance, we are turned from our righteous principles and strong resolutions.—Macmillan. Young man, bow down your head and let me tell you something that will do you good. Don't you ever go near anything that would tempt you to do wrong. "Avoid it, pass not by it," Pr. 4:15, don't go in a mile of it if you can help it. Many a poor fellow has gone down by lingering near and meddling with temptations that he thought he had power to resist. When Adam and Eve were forbidden to eat of the tree of good and evil, their safety lay in keeping away from it; but by lingering near the temptation it became, through the agency of the devil, irresistible. You can put down as a fact that the devil is extremely intimate with that temptation which seeks to destroy you. There is a hundred times more religion in keeping away from temptation than there is in meddling with it.—Prisoners of Hope.

Why Some Prayers are not Answered

"Certainly all the 'pretense' prayers must go among the eternal strays. Like many letters which never reach their destination, many prayers have to be marked 'misent' or with some other fatal brand, and consigned to oblivion. Sometimes prayers remain unanswered because they are not directed right—not addressed to God, but to the audience. Other prayers never 'go through' because the address is illegible. They are too full of pomp and rhetorical flourish—mere 'monologues of flowery prose.' Other prayers get lost because they are 'unavailable matter'—prayers whose answers might gratify us, but would fall like showers of daggers on our neighbors—and so are denied passage through the divine channels as sharp-edged tools, corroding acids, explosives and the like are not allowed in the mails. No legally 'stamped,' sincerely directed and well-meaning prayer is ever lost. The answer may be delayed, but the prayer is 'on file.'"

Your Christian Endeavor Questions Answered

Question—How has your society handled the Quiet Hour Department work? Do your young people enjoy testifying for Christ?

Answer—Each Sunday evening fifteen minutes before the regular Christian Endeavor meeting there is held a pre-prayer service for the purpose of beseeching God's blessing upon the following meeting and also praying for direction in all the work of the society. This meeting is very helpful. Then, of course, the Quiet Hour Committee seeks through its individual influence and the meetings it sponsors to enlist as many as possible of the young people among the comrades of the Quiet Hour. Many of our young people testify splendidly for Christ. They take part in different meetings.

Question—How do you make your consecration meetings different from other meetings?

Answer—At each consecration meeting the roll is called and the members respond with a verse of Scripture. Sometimes the type of verse to be given is suggested before hand so that the verses given follow one theme. Special features can be used in such a meeting with effect the that emphasizes the consecration idea. At times a special speaker can be called in. The pastor should be used in consecration meetings to give the challenge to a yielded life.

HOMER A. KENT, Service Superintendent.

BIBLE MEMORY VERSES ON TRUTH

Verses to be committed to memory by the Juniors for their use when alone all through life.

I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.—Ps. 17:3.

The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips.—Mal. 2:6.

Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts: and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.—Ps. 51:6.

Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart.—Ps. 15:1, 2.

Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds.—Col. 3:9.

Putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor: for we are members one of another.—Eph. 4:25.

The lip of truth shall be established forever; but a lying tongue is but for a moment.—Prov. 12:19.

Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight.—Prov. 12:22.

These verses may be recited by the society in concert, one or two being added at each meeting. If you can, learn the references; at any rate, the names of the books.—Junior Endeavor World.

The third visitation of the "flu" at Riverside Institute is now a matter of history. We are happy to tell you that it was light here, with no serious cases developing. And though we had a good many sick at one time, there were not enough to justify the closing of either the Sunday services or the day school. Four of the teachers had it, namely, the Misses Bessie Hooks, Clara Hall, Omeda Hadden, and the writer. All have completely recovered from it.

The attendance at the Sunday services has held up well despite the sickness so prevalent this winter. This we have always regarded as a sort of barometer of the work and conditions, for hope always abounds as the attendance runs high. But with God there can be no defeat or turning back.

Because of the enforced absence of the writer, Brother Early recently occupied the pulpit and preached a good sermon on the Cross as the theme.

A Christmas Workers' class has been recently organized among the students, and meets twice a week. This work is designed to give information in ways and means of leading souls to Christ, and of conducting Sunday schools. A goodly number of our young folks want to do Sunday school work as they go out but do not know how to start it. This class work is designed to help them.

The boys' dormitory has been put in somewhat better condition by the money raised here locally, though the task is not completed there yet.

In spite of the "flu," bad roads, and inclement weather the Sunday afternoon services at Haddix have been kept going by two of the teachers, assisted by some of the students.

Some innovations have been put on at Riverside Institute for this year. The first is a school store. There had been a good deal of consideration of the matter, but after a place had been fixed up for it, the project was launched. It is proving to be a success, and a help in the work, the profits going to some phases of the school activities.

The other project is a school paper. This had also been under consideration for a good while. But this year, my oldest son, Garber, got interested in it, and encouraged

REMARKABLE CONVERSION OF A DISTINGUISHED MOHAMMEDAN

The story told by a missionary in Persia has been recently published by the "Missionary Review of the World," New York, from which we quote the following excerpts:

"We have been greatly cheered by the appearance of a Paul, a man who seems to have been struck with a heavenly vision, to which he is not disobedient. Mir Jawad needs some introduction to be properly understood. He is a Sayyid (descendant of the Prophet Mohammed), belonging to one of the best families in Tabriz. He was educated according to the best Moslem traditions, so that he has been a professor in a Moslem school of theology for several years, and has few equals in the mastery of Arabic or the Islam code of laws. He is wealthy, owning parts of three villages, and having also other sources of income. Knowing these things you can appreciate him better.

"Not more than a month after our first meeting, he cast a spell over us by getting up in a meeting where several Moslems were present, confessing Jesus Christ as his Savior and calling upon the other men there to be fair with their consciences and face a decision, join him and consecrate themselves to making Christ known in Islam. He followed this by leading in prayer at our regular prayer meeting service three days later. Now, by Islamic law, it is possible in extreme cases to call a man up before court and have him take an oath. When news of these two things came to official ears, Mir Jawad was called before the Court of Justice and ordered to take an oath on the Koran that he was a Moslem. He replied by taking off his Sayyid's hat, producing a copy of the Koran and a book of Moslem ethics, and turning them over to the court, as he said, 'I no longer wish to be known as a Sayyid or a Moslem, for I have become a follower of Jesus Christ.' He left the place, bought a new hat, and came right to church, for it was Sunday morning.

"Then things moved fast. Some men came to me advising against having any communication with the man, for they thought a riot was going to follow if the fellow persevered in his madness. The next day was the first day of mourning for the death of Fatima Mohammed's daughter. This mourning lasts three days, and consists in huge gangs going through the streets, beating themselves with chains, other gangs singing weird tunes and beating their breasts, while some go to other excesses of fanaticism. Shortly before noon a man came in to tell me that he had just been down in the Rasta Bazaar, one of the most crowded places in the city, where all the gangs pass, and he had seen Mir Jawad get up before the gangs and call out, 'You cannot find salvation this way, salvation comes only through Jesus Christ.' Hearing this, Rabbi Stephen and I set off to find him. As we went down into the Bazaar and met the gangs shouting with hoarse voices and reeking with sweat, raising their arms in unison and then bringing their open palms down with heavy thuds against their bare chests, a mass of ignorant fanatics ruling supreme, I confess that I would have been scared stiff to stand up and witness for Jesus Christ,—and I had nothing to lose of either goods or reputation. But this one-month-old Christian, with everything to lose, had a courage which beggared mine.

"We now traced him for a while, till we found he had been taken to the police station. He was sent home under guard and confined in his own cellar for two days. Now began his trials at home, for they threatened him by confiscating all his wealth, as per the rights of the law of apostasy. They would serve his food separately, washing all the dishes three times so as not to let the contamination spread (in truth it pays to be a blasphemer here, for you get your dishes well washed at any rate). But these seemed to be the least of his worries, and the first time he was free he came to the church to see us; en route he began speaking with some men and read to them out of the New Testament. Two police caught him, beat him with their fists,—and Mir Jawad enjoyed the hospitality of the jail for a day and night. The man's absolute fearlessness has been astonishing, for never before in Tabriz has there been such a general surprise."

We are informed that since the receipt of the above communication so much excitement has been stirred up in Persia over the conversion of this outstanding man and several friends that the Persian Government has made it a matter of protest to the State Department in Washington. Mir Jawad has also been spirited away by his family to a village where he soon had the people in commotion. We may venture to state that the mere publishing of this matter constitutes a direct challenge to the adversary, and we may be assured that all the powers of hell will be directed toward the silencing of this new witness for the truth. Pray for these Moslems who have seen and followed the true light, and who are being persecuted for righteousness' sake.

THE MISSIONARY'S CHALLENGE

The missionaries have done much more than to put a few million Asiatics through the formal process of becoming members of this or that denomination. They have brought the best there is in Christianity, as a religion, to the serious attention of millions who have not and will not become Christian in name. And this is back of all the more obvious gains in the way of education, sanitation, and medicine which even the missionary baiters concede.

Furthermore, the presence of the Christian has served as a challenge to the leaders of the East to purify their own religious beliefs and observances. In every country there are vital organizations at work to rid their shrines and temples of bigotry, superstition, and grossness. It is so because of the Christian influence of recent years. Primarily the reforms were for the defensive purpose of making it more difficult for the Christians to win converts from the other religions. But in the fight against bigotry the leaders of all religions, including Christianity, have found that they have one more thing in common.

The score to the credit of the missionaries is not measured by the statistics of converts. Their merit outside of the strictly religious field is also great. They are the most generously disinterested and creditable representatives of the West who dwell in the East. They are the wholesome and much needed offset to the bad element among the foreign commercial people and to the fox-trotting tourists. They are an important factor for international good will and friendliness. They have not robbed the Eastern countries nor approved their political exploitation, although they have been used for centuries by foreign powers as an excuse to justify such exploitation. Now they resent that and are demanding of their own governments that old injustices be ended and that no more crimes against Asia be committed under the guise of making it safe for Christianity.—Charles A. Selden, in "Are Missions a Failure?"

Educational Day Offering
(Recognized with permanent endowment) ..... 150,000.00
Endowment notes in the process of collection (which will not be recognized as permanent endowment until paid) ..... 100,000.00
(Arrangements are under way for acceptable collateral for these notes to the amount needed to meet the requirements demanded of us.)

This gives the total, including all the above items of ..... $500,000.00

We have about $15,000.00 in annuities and some non-income real estate holdings that are for endowments, but at present cannot be counted. That which is recognized as endowment by the standardizing agencies, must be income investments netting the college 5% annually. Real estate holdings that are non-income bearing do not count on present endowment and annuity bonds will not be credited as permanent endowment until after the death of the beneficiaries.

You can readily see the situation and the importance of adding to our actual permanent endowment. There is bound to be some shrinkage in the payment of notes. I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of prompt payments of the notes and for the churches I am yet to visit to do their best.

Here at the College we can only work with what we have. We are your agents and nobody has any personal interest to serve outside of the good of the church. All here are doing their best to make possible a future for the College and contribute to a larger and stronger church. This is God's work and none are sacrificing more and working harder than those in charge of the school. We are within reach of the goal. Do not fail this great cause.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

THE PRESENT SITUATION OF THE COLLEGE ENDOWMENT

We believe it will be of interest to all the members of the church to know the exact condition of this fund. There seems to be some under the impression, that because the dial has reached the $200,000.00 mark of my campaign that we are "over the top" and that we can let down in our giving to this fund. Nothing could be more damaging and farther from the truth. It is highly important that all the churches I am yet to visit do their best and that all the pledges already taken be paid as soon as convenient. We are within striking distance of the goal and for any to fail us may result in defeat. Remember we have to September first to qualify in Ohio. This is no propaganda scare to raise money, but an immediate imperative which we may face to our regret if there is any slacking.

THE DIAL

I refused to have the goal set for more than $200,000.00 for my task. I believed this amount could be raised and expected it to go over. It should reach $250,000.00 and will if all our people cooperate to this end. Remember that in the amount on dial, are annuities and the major portion notes, under collection. Allowance has to be made in shrinkage, from deaths, etc. The dial will have to go way beyond its present mark to net the $200,000.00 in actual cash.

THE FORMER CAMPAIGN BY DR. BEACHLER

This campaign netted the college about $150,000.00. This was the beginning of bigger things for the college. It was the first time in its history that it had anything to work with.

THE LIVING ENDOWMENT

This includes the W. M. S. in sustaining the chair of Dean Miller in paying $2,500.00 per year, which is credited as 5% on endowment which is equal to $50,000.

The National Sunday School Association is also contributing annually $2,000.00 to the religious work department, which capitalized at 5% is equal to $40,000.00.

The Educational Day Offering has averaged about $3,000.00 per year, which counts for $60,000.00. This gives us a total endowment of $150,000.00. This is allowed on our endowment requirements. It is imperative that this support should be no less. The Educational Day Offering must be continued and given full support.

ASHLAND CITY CAMPAIGN

This totaled about $90,000.00 and the City insisted that their gifts be used on new buildings. These buildings were much needed and without them we could not accommodate our present student body and carry on our work. The facts are, the college with its additional buildings is crowded for room. The chapel is not large enough. We cannot accommodate all who want to take meals in the dining hall. The dormitory that in the past accommodated both the men and women students, is now too small to take care of all the women students. The men have been placed in private homes. Ashland city has contributed to the school for building purposes in the last ten years $150,000.00. The city's gift does not count on endowment, as it is for equipment.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT ENDOWMENT

First Mortgages, Securities and income investments held by the College and counts on recognized permanent endowment $250,000.00 Living Endowment, including W. M. S., Nat'l S. S. Ass'n. and

ALTOONA, PENNSYLVANIA

The last Sunday, and next to the last day, in the year 1928 was a memorable one in the family life of Elder J. E. Shope and wife. These elderly people have their home with their son-in-law, Brother J. C. Day. The occasion was the sixtieth anniversary of their married life. The pastor and wife were invited to share what seemed to them a very happy event. They had the pleasure of having with them on the occasion all the surviving children, three daughters and three sons. Elder Shope has passed his eighty-first year of life, and on December 30, 1928, he and his good wife celebrated the sixtieth year of their married life. The occasion was not only a memorable one, but apparently a happy one. Sixty years is considerably more than the average of human life, while sixty years of married life is unusual. We congratulate Brother and Sister Shope in having walked together in loving companionship for so many years.

Elder Shope was baptized into the Church of the Brethren at the age of twenty-three years and called to the ministry and ordained about four years later. His ministerial life thus extends over a period of fifty-five years. During this time Elder Shope preached in many of the churches in Pennsylvania and received into the church by baptism hundreds of people. His first sermon, which was preached at Valley Point, Pennsylvania, was based on the text, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up."

Elder Shope identified himself with what was then known as the progressive movement, now legally named The Brethren Church, in which he and his wife now hold membership, locally in the First Brethren church, Altoona, Pennsylvania. He lived contemporary in the ministry with such faithful and loyal men as W. L. Spanogle and Stephen Hildebrand, both of whom he has outlived.

Brother and Sister Day, with whom Elder Shope and wife have their home, are among the most faithful and loyal members of the First Brethren church. Indeed the church has no more ardent supporters in both life and means than these two people, thoroughly indoctrinated in the teachings of the church, to which they cheerfully and unreservedly contribute their life and means.

It is said that there are two periods when one feels proud of his age. One when he is six years, "going on seven." With what pride the boy says that! And again when he reaches eighty,—he is forever "going on" the year following. In middle life it is different, we are just forty, even though we begin the forty-first year next day. It is an achievement for any one to round out fourscore years and more and continue active. It means that many a battle has been fought with death and come out victorious. Life is a struggle, a conflict, forever contending with its enemy, death. It can not be otherwise than that one who has lived as many years as Elder Shope has, will have to his credit many victories. For the Christian the last struggle will not be a defeat. Death is not victor. He loses in the final conflict, when with Paul the dying Christian cries out, "O grave, where is thy victory?" Yes, where? It is a triumph for one whose life has been hid with God in Christ. What is apparently a victory for death is after all his defeat. So may Brother and Sister Shope triumph in their last struggle. It will mean life eternal in a world where death can never enter.

The best wishes of a host of friends are with our elder brother and sister.

A. D. GNAGEY.

DAYTON NEWS

Another series of special meetings has become history in the Dayton church. According to the wishes of the Advisory Board of the church, it was to be a January meeting, in keeping with former precedent. Circumstances seemed to determine December 30th, as the day of beginning. The meetings continued three weeks.

Inasmuch as our evangelistic party all hailed from Indiana, we took the liberty to designate them as the "Hoosier Trio." There being no remonstrance or objection on their part, we allowed it to stand that way. The members of said trio were Rev. Frank Coleman, evangelist and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer in charge of the music. It proved to be a very amicable and happy arrangement for all concerned.

Merely as a statement of fact we hit on a very unfavorable period for the meetings. The "flu" epidemic was rampant from the start and it continued through the three weeks. Many of our loyal people could not be in the services at all. Others were afraid of exposure to it. Others found in it a fine excuse. So that was that. Besides, we had very much weather which was decidedly unfavorable and which militated against anything like a large, uniform attendance. This was very disconcerting.

But in spite of these odds a good fighting morale was maintained and very good results were realized. We had thirty additions—all baptized and received into the church. Besides, the church was greatly edified and blessed. Brother Coleman delivered a series of good, straight, convincing sermons. The Richers handled with rare and pleasing ability the music end of the meetings. We had a lot of great singing. They went from our midst happy and with a check in hand which met the conditions stipulated by them. Brother Coleman came for a free will offering on the last Sunday. And I am sure that he too went away feeling good because he was handed a remuneration for his work which was very generous and which was just as free as it was generous.

Thus we are sure that seed has been sowed, and influences set in motion which will go on in the many years to come.

As a "followup," or conservation measure we are proposing a quiet campaign of soul winning to go on steadily until Easter, with a goal of 30 more added to the church. And yet, we are not planning that Easter shall mark the close of that kind of work among us. We will also carry on the Annual Increase Campaign in the church school which also climaxes on Easter.

Later we may report on other of our activities in the church. We close this little report by adding that a good year closed among us January first, with many things to encourage us. It is true that here at Dayton as elsewhere, the roses all have a few thorns, and the path has here and there a rough place. But we are bound to say that things for the future look good at Dayton. Patience, prayer, and a lot of thoughtful, united, hard work puts congregations over the grade.

In the Master's exalted Name,
WM. H. BEACHLER.

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

There has been no word to the Evangelist from the Louisville church since late in the fall when Brother L. P. Clapper gave a report of our re-dedicatory services. Since that time we have been enjoying to the fullest our splendid new plant, busying ourselves getting things shaped up for a fruitful year's work.

At our fall council meeting a special time was set for the election of two deacons and two deaconesses. This election resulted in the selection of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Clapper and Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Miller. These good people have been ordained to these offices, and we feel assured that with the added strength they will lend to our organization, the work will be easier and more efficient.

Since dedication day a few things of interest have taken place. First of all and immediately following the dedication a short meeting was held. These meetings seemed to be enjoyed by every one who came, and splendid crowds greeted us every night. I was assisted in this effort by A. E. Schwab of our own congregation who in a very pleasing manner directed the music. His fine help assisted by a very faithful choir meant much to the success of the undertaking. As a direct result of these services eight were added to our church roll, seven by baptism, and one by relation. These with the pastor's family who had previously presented their letters brings the additions up to thirteen. That number has not unarmaged us, but has only put new zeal in our veins and we mean to add fifteen more to the number by the close of the year if God wishes it to be so.

On the Sunday before Christmas the Sunday school put on two special programs. The morning service being given over to the Children's Division who rendered a very delightful miscellaneous program, with a short Christmas address by the pastor. In the evening the adult division put on a very impressive "White Gift" service which was followed by the presentation of the Christmas Pantomime, "Why the Chimes Rang." The gift of the evening amounted to sixty odd dollars, perhaps a few dollars in advance of any previous gift.

On New Year's eve we enjoyed one of the most helpful and impressive Watch Night Services, I ever experienced. The whole evening's service was arranged by the Sunday school. At eight o'clock we met in the Elementary Assembly room where we listened to a surprise program put on by the different classes of the entire school. At nine o'clock the Superintendent escorted all to the social rooms in the basement where light refreshments of cocoa and wafers were served and two hours of good clean fun was enjoyed by all. Near the close of the second hour, our good moderator arose to give a speech. He said it had been given him to pull another surprise, this time on the pastors' family. At the close of his remarks he ushered the aforesaid family into the kitchen and unveiled before them a bountiful supply of groceries, and a little purse containing fifteen dollar bills. We surely were surprised, but right agreeably, and after some little time managed to voice our appreciation in a few very mumbled words of thanks. When the hour of 11 arrived we all assembled in the main auditorium for an hour of devotion and praise. This hour was led by the pastor who gave a twenty minute address and the last twenty minutes of 1928 were very profitably spent in a candle lighting service of reconsecration. All went to their homes in the early hours of New Year's day, hoping that this might be an annual affair.

All the different organizations are functioning. A Junior Christian Endeavor Society has been organized with a membership of twenty-two, and are doing splendid work under the leadership of the pastor's wife. We have also arranged for a Daily Vacation Bible school to be held in June. Thus we feel we are caring in a little way at least for our children who mean the future life of the church.

The W. M. S. is alive and are making things lively, both in a spiritual and a financial way. They have already paid out $1,000 toward furnishings for the church and have on hands something like $350 on another $1,000 pledge, besides putting in a fine gas range at the parsonage.

We have already grown to love Louisville and our work. Always happy to hear of victories won in other fields. We press on to higher ground in the service of the King. Remember us when you pray.

A. E. WHITTED.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH OF LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

The Second Brethren church of Long Beach was organized January 18, 1928, with a membership of eighty-five. Rev. J. G. Lienhard being called as pastor. During the year since the organization there have been thirty-seven additions to the roll either by letter or baptism. There have been seven marriage ceremonies performed, and eight funeral services conducted by the pastor. Losses during the year by letter, none; by death, none.

Rev. Lienhard has been called again to serve during the year of 1929. He has been very faithful in the Lord's service, and is well loved in the community, perhaps because he has a great burden for those outside of Christ.

Our aim is not to satisfy the people by flattery or flowery language, but to present the Word of God to them in all its fullness.

We held our first communion service of the year January eighteenth. There was a goodly number present to partake of this holy ordinance.

We as a church have very much to thank the dear Lord for in the manifold blessings he has heaped upon us, and especially do we thank him for our Sunday school. We have a membership now of approximately three hundred, and are very happy to say that this number has outgrown our present building, so walking by faith we are now erecting a three story building, which we hope for a time at least will obviate our crowded conditions. We hope to dedicate this new building some time in February. Our total attendance during the year was ten thousand four hundred and sixty, an average of two hundred and one a week. Our average offering during the year was twelve dollars and thirty-seven cents per Sunday. The total offering during the year was six hundred and forty-three dollars and thirty-seven cents.

We realize that it is only through prayer and the consecrating of our lives fully to the Lord's service that we as a church can hope to stand in these terrible days of apostasy. Satan is on the job with much stronger forces than ever before. Our aim and purpose is that we might be found worthy to be caught up to meet him when he appears, with many sheaves gleaned from the harvest field God has entrusted to our care. Our plans for the future are found in Philippians 3:13-14, "Brethren I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

THE PASSING OF BROTHER J. I. HALL AND WIFE

On Tuesday, January 8, Brother J. I. Hall was taken with chills and on Thursday of the same week he passed on to the reward awaiting the faithful. Ill only two days, it was a decided shock to his dear ones and friends to hear of his going on before. Brother Hall had been caring for wife and daughter who had been ill for some days. On Saturday the twelfth it was the sad duty of the writer to officiate at the quiet funeral service held in the home. At the time of this service Sister Hall was lying in bed ill with pneumonia. We laid the remains of Brother Hall away in the beautiful Dayton cemetery. It was on the next Tuesday that we again were called by the sorrowing daughters to serve at the services in honor of mother. It surely was sad. On Wednesday, just four days after placing the body of her husband in mother earth, we laid the body of Sister Hall beside that of the one who had been her constant companion for many years. Thus Brother and Sister Hall are sleeping side by side not far from where they began life and where Brother Hall began his ministry. Their two daughters, Lulu, wife of Rev. Poffenberger of the Christian church, and Edith, who was living at home, along with brothers, sisters and many other relatives and friends mourn the passing of this devoted pair of God's servants.

Brother Hall was what could be called a prince of a good man. And his wife was a queenly woman. Together they served the Lord in the ministry for nearly thirty-five years. Just three years ago Brother Hall was superannuated because of failing health. He had served the church at Bethlehem, near Harrisonburg, Virginia, where he began his ministry and preached while teaching school. Then he held pastorates at Milford, Indiana, St. James, Maryland, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, where he served for many years and which was his last active pastorate. After being superannuated Brother Hall preached for the church at Quicksburg, Virginia, and the Hammer church in West Virginia. He also preached some for the Trinity church in the Fort Valley shortly after leaving the Martinsburg work. Brother Hall enjoyed telling the old, old story. He was loved by all who knew him. The Harrisonburg Ministerial Association turned out in a body at the funeral services and Dr. Wright, President of the Association, assisted at both services. The neighbors were loud in their praises of both Brother and Sister Hall and said they were ideal folks. How nice to be thought of in that fashion by those who know you best.

By way of personal appreciation I would say that I have known Brother Hall for quite twenty years and have appreciated his friendship very much. I have been with him in meetings and found him to be a kindly, quiet, loving and lovable man of God. He was old enough to have been my father, having passed the three score and ten last September, and I accepted his fatherly advice in the same spirit that he gave it. I knew him to be a man who abhorred contention. His very presence spoke of peace and that spirit ruled his home. Others may have known Brother Hall longer and even better than I knew him, but I can say that in all these years all that I came to know or about him was of the best. Surely in the passing of this good brother and his dear wife earth is poorer and heaven richer. May the comforting grace of the most high God rest upon his beloved daughters and the other loved ones who meet and miss him. And may his life be an inspiration to those of us who are younger in the service of the Master. Brother Joe, as he was known to his immediate family and a few intimates, leaves many behind who owe much of what they are or can hope to be in the spiritual sense to him. And once more we must say good-night here, but may it be only to say a happy good morning up there. E. L. MILLER.

BEDFORD COUNTY CIRCUIT NEWS, PENNSYLVANIA

On November 4th, we observed Rally Day in the New Enterprise church. We did not reach a goal of large numbers but we enjoyed the day just as much for we love to do all we can for the Lord. Brother Cook brought us the message of the morning. After we had lifted the offering we found we had twenty-three dollars in cash for this special day. Others who knew we were observing this day sent in their offering. Our numbers are not large but there are occasions when our hearts are made glad because we are serving our Lord and Master the best we can.

In the evening of November 4th, Brother Cook opened our evangelistic campaign. Our meeting lasted two weeks. During this time we had on one or two nights small crowds, but most of the time we had excellent attendance. Brother Cook brought good Gospel messages. One night it rained but the folks came just the same. During the meeting we had two confessions. On Sunday evening, November 18th, our meeting closed with our fall communion service. A number of the Brethren from Martinsburg and others enjoyed this feast with us.

Rally Day was observed at Yellow Creek and Raystown some Sundays previous to the day observed at Enterprise. Our attendance was good at both churches. Our Woman's Missionary Society is doing good work at both Yellow Creek and Raystown.

At Raystown we have had some trouble in getting to church. A new road is under construction and since this new road goes past the church, the folks away from the church are unable to attend services.

One might think that getting to church would be possible. Some of the folks at Riddisburg tried to walk over the mud. When the road is completed folks will be able to attend church. This road will be a blessing to all once it is completed. Under the present conditions the folks at Raystown show their loyalty and earnestness for the carrying on of the Lord's work by helping in other ways as well as by coming to the services whenever it is possible.

NEWS FROM SPOKANE, WASHINGTON

As there is always a "first time," this is mine as correspondent and we hope to improve. When Brother Bauman left Sunnyside, he came direct here for a meeting, and were it not because of his being so far from home, we should have advised against beginning the meeting because of "flu" conditions, for the nearest school to the church had four hundred pupils sick at that time.

We had been doing much planning and much praying and felt that we must make an effort, which we did, and Brother Bauman went at it with his old time spirit and energy while Brother Broad took care of the singing. Strangers came and were interested, the people rallied well, and much visiting was done during the day. Then as though to assure these Californians that there was a sure enough "flu" epidemic, Sister Bauman came down with it and was sick almost the whole time of the meetings while Brother Bauman lived on a diet of raw onions to keep the flu away.

Those of us who were fortunate enough to keep well during the three weeks were blessed with a spiritual feast which brought to us an awakening, and one after another came out for re-consecration. The unsaved were moved and young men and young women came out for Christ whole-heartedly, and still the effects of the meeting are being seen while on every hand we hear the questions, "Are those sermons in print?" or "When is he coming back again?"

We were very fortunate the second Sunday of our meetings to have in addition to Brother Bauman, Sister Neilsen from South America who spoke to us and who should walk in on us the same day but our own Brother and Sister Hathaway, and you may be sure we had some day of it. During the evening service Brother and Sister Allen volunteered for service in Africa, having since made application to the Bible Institute of Los Angeles.

MARGARET GRIMSAUD, Correspondent.

After all, perhaps the most awful error of our smart and giddy-paced age is that we have mistaken knowledge for truth and cleverness for wisdom and have forgotten to distinguish between the "childish things" which St. Paul said should be put aside and the great childlike things which abide and to which we owe the strength and sanity of life.—Joseph Fort Newton.

THE SACRIFICE HIT

Every boy who plays baseball knows what the sacrifice hit is. There is a runner on first base and a man at the bat. The man at the bat hits the ball down in front of him so that he is put out, but while he is being put out the other runner goes to second base. That is what we call a sacrifice hit. It is sacrificing yourself so that the other fellow can get along.

Now do you know that life is just a big game, and no one ever learns to play that game as it ought to be played till he has learned to sacrifice for the good of others?

Some one told me of a little boy who had a dog he loved very much. This little dog was learning to bark, and if you have ever had a little dog you know that when he is learning to bark he practices all the time. You might as well try to stop a little dog from barking as to stop a little boy from running. You can't do it.

Next door to where that little boy lived was a sick woman, and the barking of the puppy was very annoying to her. The little boy found out about it. He thought and thought for a whole day, and then he went to his father and asked him if he would please sell the little dog. His father said, "Why, Robert, I thought you loved him?" "I do, but his barking makes Mrs. Brown sick, so I think we had better send him away."

I know that it was a hard thing for the boy to give up his dog, but he did it to help some one else along. He was making a sacrifice hit.—Ex.

JAMIE'S SERENADE

"Mamma, what are serenades?" asked Jamie.

"It's a song," said mamma. "But why do you want to know?"

"A song!" said Jamie. "Why I heard Uncle Jim say that he went out to give a serenade on Tuesday night. I thought it was something to give some one."

"Why, you give them a song, you see. When you are very fond of some one, you go at night and sing a song under her window. That is to show the person that you love her."

"Must you do it at night?"

"Yes, I think so."

"But s'pose your mother won't let you sit up late at night, or s'pose you fall asleep, and can't wake yourself up."

"Oh, the people that give serenades do it secretly, and they commonly have no trouble in keeping awake at night."

"Oh," said Jamie, as if he were perfectly enlightened about the matter.

Then mamma forgot all about the matter, but Jamie pondered long and earnestly.

Two nights later grandma was just settling herself for her first nap, when she heard a sound that made her raise her night-capped head from her pillow in haste.

"Father, that's Jamie!" she exclaimed.

"Nonsense! Jamie was in dreamland an hour ago," said grandma.

Then a shrill boyish voice arose on the night air:

"My kitty has gone from her basket,

My kitty has gone up a tree;

Oh, who will go up in the branches,

And bring back my kitty to me?

Br-ing back, br-ing back,

Oh, bring back my kitty to me!"

"Jamie Carroll, what do you mean? Come right in out of that damp night air."

"Wait till I finish my song, grandma," said an aggrieved voice. "You oughtn't to interrupt 'cause it's a serenade."

"Does your mother know you're here?"

"Of course not. Serenades are secret."

"Let the boy finish his song," said grandma, with a chuckle.

"Have you got all your clothes on?" demanded grandma.

"Why, of course."

"Well, put this scarf around your neck, and finish your song. Then come to the kitchen door, and I will give you some refreshments."

"Oh, do you get refreshments for serenades?"

"Yes, indeed! Now hurry."

The shrill refrain was taken up again, and the music finished in double-quick time. When he finished, he found grandma at the door waiting for him, with a plate of the little chocolate cakes that Jamie thought were the very best things in the world to eat. Grandma was there, too; and when the refreshments were disposed of, he escorted the small serenade home.

"Good-bye, dear," said grandma. "I enjoyed your music very much."

But mamma collapsed with a string of incoherent exclamations when she opened the door to the runaway. "Why didn't you tell me about it?" she demanded.

"Why, mamma, you said yourself that they were secret. And I love grandma the best after you, and I wanted to surprise her. She liked it very much, and I had refreshments and lots of fun."

"But you'll tell me about it next time, won't you? Because people can always tell secrets to their mother."

"All right," said Jamie, "I will."—Christian Standard.

STONER—Martha Jane was born in Stark County, Ohio, January 24, 1850, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charlotte Preston, at Louisville, December 24, 1928, at the age of 78 years, 11 months. She is survived by four children, Mrs. D. D. Stoner of Canton, Ohio; Charlotte Preston, Louisville; Mrs. Iva Mooms, Canton; and Dr. G. N. Stoner, Louisville. Some fifteen years ago she united with the First Brethren church at Louisville and has since lived a very beautiful Christian life. At her request the funeral sermon was preached by Brother E. M. Riddle, of Warsaw, Indiana, a former pastor, assisted by the writer.

About the Benevolence Day Offering

FOR THE SUPPORT OF THE SUPERANNUATED MINISTERS AND THE BRETHREN HOME

By Rev. E. L. Miller

... We appeal for loyal support of the Benevolent work of the church. ... Paul says, "But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." However this may be interpreted or construed, I feel that it is proper to say that it includes the treatment of the aged ministers and workers of the church. How can we square ourselves with God and at the same time permit our aged folks to suffer for even the meanest necessities of life?

By Rev. J. L. Kimmell

James says: "What does it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and some of you say unto them: Depart in peace, be warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what does it profit?"

By Rev. W. Irwin Duker

Now, brethren, we may grow eloquent with flights of oratory, we may praise our fathers with long perorations and with much display of intended support. But this is the time of the year when coal, warm clothes and sustaining food, are more fitting. ... If you feel that our responsibility toward those who have labored before us is a just obligation, say it with dollars.

By Rev. A. V. Kimmell

The Brethren's Home has as its objective the creation of a place which can in every way be called a "Home." It is primarily for the purpose of contributing to the comfort and happiness of those who have spent their lives in the Christian ministry, of which service there is none worthier. ...

The present program is working toward the making of the Brethren's Home self-supporting and the liberal gifts of the people are needed to bring this about.

A Pessimistic President
Religion with no Shirt
Missionaries Wanted Plato's Failure

by
Alva J. McClain

AN International Conference is proposed by Senator Borah for the purpose of humanizing the rules of warfare and making more secure the rights of neutrals. Certainly, if we cannot get rid of war, anything would seem sensible that might alleviate its terrible cruelties, especially as they affect innocent non-combatants.

But President Coolidge is against the proposed Conference for several very interesting reasons. He is doubtful as to the motives of the nations which would attend; and even if some useful agreements should be reached he is certain that our own Senate would never ratify them; and even if that obstacle were overcome he thinks the nations will do as they please, anyhow, in the next war, regardless of agreements.

Thus the President expresses his opinion of the world after dealing with it for seven years as its highest ruling official. Not even the prophet Jeremiah could have painted a gloomier picture.

But Jeremiah had this important advantage—by the Grace of God he could always see the light beyond the darkness. "Behold, the days come, saith Jehovah, that I will raise unto David a Righteous Branch, and he shall reign as King and deal wisely, and shall execute justice and righteousness in the land" (Jer. 23:5).

This prophecy should be good news for disillusioned and discouraged rulers. It is good news for the rest of us.

ONCE upon a time, according to an ancient legend, the king of a great realm fell sick with a strange disease. Ordinary remedies having failed, all the wise men were called together in solemn conclave to determine what should be done. Only one thing, they said, could save the king. Search must be made for a perfectly happy man. The shirt of such a man, if worn by the king, would cure the terrible disease.

At once the hunt began for a perfectly happy man, through cities and villages and to the uttermost borders of the kingdom. For a long time the quest seemed vain, but at last far up on the mountain side, alone in a humble cabin, they found an old man who said he was perfectly happy. But, alas, he had no shirt.

"Modern" religion is like the old man on the mountain side. It has no shirt. It has no remedy for the disease of a world which is stricken unto death.

IN spite of the falling off of missionary gifts during the past several years, reports from approximately one hundred Boards in the United States and Canada indicate that workers are needed even more than money.

There are definite calls for 1,186 missionaries to sail in 1929. Of this number the money is ready for 754.

In nearly every instance special educational preparation is required. The largest need is for ordained ministers, next for teachers, then doctors, and last for specialists of various kinds. But almost without exception, every worker must be able and willing to take part in the supreme business of missions, namely, the direct winning of men and women for Jesus Christ—which is as it should be.

For Asia the calls are 661; for Africa 174; for Latin America 150; for Oceania 31; and for fields not specified 146.

An analysis of these figures reveals three definite needs: first, for more missionary volunteers; second, for more adequate preparation on the part of those who volunteer; and third, for more money with which to send them out.

But above all these the greatest need is for PRAYER—prayer addressed to "the Lord of the Harvest." He is able to supply all the other needs. Mission Boards forget that, sometimes.

THE philosophic speculations of the ancient Greeks constitute one of the most amazing of all the reaches of the human mind. Even after 2,500 years learned men talk about Plato with profound respect and are not quite sure that they have plumbed the depths of his writings.

Yet, with all his intellectual greatness, it must be said that Plato and his philosophic successors never solved a major human

Questions and Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

7. I am a pastor. My car is an old model, it is in good running order. It is evident that some in my parish think that their minister ought to have a more modern and up-to-date car. I feel the need of a larger and better equipped library to improve myself. Should I purchase a new car to improve my social standing or ought I to purchase new books to improve my mind and incidentally my sermons?

I would above all else like to know this brother's name. He interests me. If he is a young man, I should say get the books, improve the mind and preach better sermons. If he is a middle-aged or elderly pastor I should say you would do well to save your money in either case. Buy what books you wish to read; subscribe for your favorite papers or magazines and do your best in your preaching. But seriously, a self-respecting congregation ought to pay the pastor sufficient salary to give money for the necessary books and reading matter. How can any minister fulfil the apostolic injunction to give himself to reading if he has no reading matter? At any rate if I were in this pastor's place I should provide for my necessary reading such books as I could buy. I would try to stay alive mentally and I would study to show myself an approved preacher of the Word. Thus I would give no occasion to my congregation to be ashamed of my preaching and I would have the consciousness of having worthily, though humbly, represented my Lord in the pulpit and in my personal growth in the Christian graces of character. I would rather, and I now speak as one sitting in the pew, be able to say "My pastor preaches sermons worth any man's hearing," than to say of him, "My pastor drives a Rolls-Royce."

8. The Brethren Church has fewer congregations than she had twenty years ago. Do you not think that the Church should enter upon a more vigorous extensive campaign?

In 1895 there were reported 138 congregations with a membership of 10,031; in 1905 157 congregations reported with 14,117 members; in 1910 we had 219 churches reporting with 18,617 members. By 1920, only ten years later, we had dropped to 177 congregations and since that time we can count around 175 organized congregations. The report of the statistician made at Ashland in August, 1928 showed that we have 174 congregations with approximately 30,000 members. So there are several matters upon which we might well reflect. Thus—

We have lost in the number of organized churches though we have held our own, with small increase, in membership. Every organized church that we lost was a loss of a possible center of Brethren strength and influence.

It is a serious matter for any church not to add even on an average of one good strong congregation to the number each year. But we are not doing that. What is of greater concern is the fact that of the churches reported there is a considerable number that have a continuous struggle to exist at all. Many of them are weak in numbers and lack leadership and outlook.

In the light of these facts should we enter upon an extensive program? Yes, by all means. And the first step is a really scientific and accurate survey of our present fields and churches. Then we should center our strongest efforts upon those places that give promise of permanence and strength. We should also give the necessary pastoral help to those places less promising but where we have a membership, however small, of faithful men and women. We must undertake the care of the smaller churches. Only one other thing can be done. That is to discover the places where Brethren churches can be established. When we open a work in a new field we must place there in full charge under the Mission Board the very strongest minister we can command for such work. The best in the Church must do this work or it will not be done. Brethren, this should be a matter of serious and prayerful consideration.

The Honor Test Offering

If there is any one thing that more than another tests the Christian honor of an individual or church, it is the care and support given the aged dependents. Christian standards will not permit men to turn their old, outworn servants, whether human or beast, out to starve and to die. The least humane thing that will be tolerated with regard to the treatment of wornout animals is to shoot them and put them out of their misery. But our valuation of human life will not permit such treatment being accorded to men and women who have passed the age of self-support. They must be cared for and given every chance to live out their natural life. And even with regard to animals, that is coming to be considered the only decent thing to do. And infinitely more strongly ought men to feel themselves honor-bound to give proper care to their fellow mortals who are no longer able to bear the burden and heat of the day, and find themselves financially unprovided for. This is true irrespective of the life-service of any individual, but merely on the basis of the obligation of society or an individual for a fellow-human. Charity is not merely the privilege of the few, it is the obligation of the many; it is a social duty.

But with regard to those whose lives have been a distinct contribution to the welfare of the world, or to some particular phase of society's uplift, there is the obligation of gratitude as well as humanity's concern. And those who have been best served owe most, and their servants, once grown old and incapacitated, have a claim upon them for the things needful for the comforts and provisioning of life. And what group or segment of our social life has been better served than has the church group by its ministers, and where has service been more sacrificially rendered? Where are there those who have a stronger claim upon society, and particularly the church portion of it, for the support which they themselves are no longer able to provide, than have the superannuated ministers? And what class or group or portion of organized life is under a more bounden duty to care for its disabled veterans than is the church? What it gives to its aged ministers is not alms but deferred payments, and what the preacher receives is not charity but his wages, not gifts but his dues. And the church can no more refuse or neglect to care for the needs of its aged ministry and maintain its honor than can a son refuse to provide for his needy parents and keep his honor. It is a duty that goes with the relation, and few things so merit public censure as the refusal to meet such primary obligations and essentials of honor. The church in endeavoring to collect funds for this purpose is merely meeting its heaven-born responsibility and honor-bound duty. And the readiness of the response on the part of the membership is an indication of the keenness and nobility of their sense of honor. The time to demonstrate in this matter is February 24th, when the churches are requested to lift offerings for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund and for the Brethren Home. That will be an honor-test offering.

And do not forget the two-fold purpose of the offering—the Superannuated Ministers' Fund and the Brethren Home support. There are two separate and distinct Boards asking for offerings on this day. The one is charged with the responsibility of collecting funds and distributing them according to instructions by General Conference to the aged ministers who maintain their own home and who need help. The other is charged with directing the affairs of the Home for the aged at Flora, Indiana, and of receiving funds for the support of that institution which gives a home to those who have none, and to other old people on conditions. Both constitute the so-called "Benevolent" work of our church, both are authorized by Conference, and both are to receive a portion of the offering to be lifted on February 24th.

Do not imagine that the work of the Brethren Home is unimportant. The providing of a home, which includes the necessities of life, for those of our number who have no home and have grown old and incapacitated for service, is a duty that strikes deep in the human heart and is strongly enjoined by the word of God. He that provideth not for his own house hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. Jesus bitterly rebuked the Jewish leaders who sought by trickery to evade their responsibility to their aged parents. He also set the example of filial care and concern by those thoughtful words spoken from the cross: "When Jesus saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he said unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour the disciple took her unto his own home." Here is an ordinary Christian duty that ought to be emphasized at other times than when we are taking an offering. If our people accepted this responsibility more faithfully as individuals, insofar as they are able, there would be less need for the church to take offerings for this purpose. But where there are brethren who are in need and have no relatives who are able or willing to care for them, the church must step in and supply the need. It is a Christian duty that is inescapable, applying to the group as to the individual. We do not urge it upon you as a matter of charity; we are not asking for alms for others; we are asking for the meeting of an obligation, the discharging of a bounden duty. Let us prove our honor by our offering.

Cause of Perplexities in Religious Journalism

We have been led on numerous occasions to attempt to acquaint our readers with some of the problems facing the makers of church papers. We have assured our constituency that our little group is not the only one that has its financial troubles. The situation is general; the religious journal is having a struggle to exist and in many instances it loses the fight. The cause for this is hard for the uninitiated to understand. The following editorial from The Baptist is a splendid setting forth of certain elements that enter into the problem. Our fellow-editor writes under the subject, "The Complexities of Modern Life Create the Perplexities of Religious Journalism." What he says is so important to an appreciation of the situation that we are passing it on to our readers:

In the good old days when life was simple, when dollars were scarce, when the home and the church were the main centers of social life, the editors of religious journals had no such perplexities as now prematurely streak their hair with gray and rob them of necessary slumber. The complexities of modern life are unprecedented. Never before in the history of the world was human life beset by so many interests that demand time, money, attention, energy. And these interests are not simply the cheap appeals so insistent today for superficial pleasures. Above and beyond these cheap appeals are interests of real value like the radio, the automobile, the flying-machine, modern industrial production, specialization in thousands of different lines of endeavor, and not least, the moral questions of world dimensions which demand scientific solution. Life is no longer simple, wages never can be small again, isolation for either individual or nation is forever out of the question.

What has all this to do with the perplexities of the editors of religious journals? In general, perplexities arise out of complexities. In particular, editors of religious journals are at their wit's end to maintain their papers or magazines against the relentless competition of the complex demands of modern life. Pastors of churches keenly feel the pressure of the complexities of present-day living on their people. It is increasingly difficult for the average minister to get and hold a congregation. The crowded mid-week prayer meeting is largely a thing of the past. The local church in a community is no longer the important center of community life that it once was. Yet there never was a time in the history of the United States when the churches and the religious journals were needed more than today. Ethical idealism, spiritual culture and aggressive evangelism must be magnified. The pulpit and the religious press are the instruments best adapted for the accomplishment of these ends. Adjustments have to be made in both pulpit and religious press to meet the demands of complex living, but neither pulpit nor religious press can be dispensed with.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. J. L. Gillin gives us another interesting installment of his travelogues. His observations are especially arresting to the attention this week.

Send offerings for Superannuated Ministers to J. J. Wolfe, North Manchester, Indiana, and for the Brethren Home to Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana.

Brother C. D. Whitmer, whose address is 217 E. Dubail Avenue, South Bend, Indiana, and who is serving the church at Brighton, Indiana for half time, informs us that he is open to a call to another church near South Bend for half time.

We have a brief report of a meeting conducted in the Allentown, Pennsylvania, church by Sister Emma Aboud. There were six confessions and four baptisms as a result of the meetings. Another baptism was the result of regular services conducted by the pastor, Brother S. E. Christiansen.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us a number of items of interest in his college news this week, among them being those indicating that the college attendance and finances are matters of encouragement. Taken as a whole, the church is giving the college splendid support, and that gives promise of a bright future for both.

In a personal note from Brother L. V. King, pastor of the church at New Lebanon, Ohio, he informs us that five were recently added to the church and that three more are soon to be received. On Tuesday evening, Lincoln's birthday, before these lines are published, they are to "vote on building plans." For some time they have been aware of the necessity of providing larger Sunday school quarters to make possible larger growth.

"The Stillwater Valley News," a little newspaper published by Brother Hugh C. Marlin at Covington, Ohio, has recently begun its daily visits to our office. Brother Marlin, who is pastor of the church at Pleasant Hill, not only preaches the gospel from his pulpit, but also from the editorial columns of his daily paper, his editorials each day being sermonettes, instead of discussions of the topics of the day. The paper is running its fifth year.

Brother Freeman Ankrum reports the passing of Elder A. B. Duncan, one of our veteran ministers and the organizer of the Oak Hill, West Virginia, church and for a long period its pastor. He was one of those fine, quiet souls, who did not spread his ministerial influence over many states, but lived intensively in his own locality and district. He left a blessed heritage of service and influence both by his own right and through the instrumentality of his noble family.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary, reports a splendid gift from the church at Dallas Center, Iowa, where Brother A. D. Cashman is the faithful pastor. It is pointed out that this church was not so hard hit financially as were other churches in that district, though it was not without its reverses. One thing that is growing upon us as we observe the growing endowment is the conviction that the membership of our churches far and near are characterized by a concern for the welfare of the brotherhood and a loyalty to the general interests that is most heartening. The thing that is necessary is to bring the people in touch with the need, and that is the task of the leadership.

Our correspondent from the First church of Long Beach, California, says the work there is progressing nicely. The Sunday school attained an average attendance of two less than 500 for the year. In fact, the school has grown to the point where it has taxed the capacity of the church and it is now decided that a new Sunday school annex is to be built at an approximate cost of $75,000. They read their Bibles out there; seventy-four of the membership read their Bibles through during 1928. The prayer meetings and Bible classes conducted by the pastor, Dr. Bauman, are credited with being a feeder to the Sunday school, an unusual claim for Bible classes and an indication of their marked success.

We made a blunder in our editorial items last week by mentioning the name of Brother J. E. Shope in connection with that of our lamented Brother J. I. Hall as "passing away." Brother Shope, we are glad to say, is still among the living and he and Mrs. Shope were reported by Dr. Gnagey last week as celebrating their sixtieth wedding anniversary. We had in mind another aged brother whose obituary did not get published last week and then wrote the wrong name with that of Brother Hall. We are very sorry and humbly beg the pardon of Brother and Sister Shope. We wish to congratulate them on this unique occasion, their sixtieth wedding anniversary. Brother Shope is past eighty-one years old.

Brother John F. Locke, pastor of the Bethlehem church near Harrisonburg, Virginia, makes mention in his communication of the improving health of Elder J. M. Bowman, who has borne his long illness with fortitude. He also expresses the sense of loss on the part of his people over the death of Brother and Sister J. I. Hall, and pays tribute to this splendid pair of God's servants. Brother Locke is to have the great privilege of traveling in the Holy Land, Egypt and other parts of the Near East. We hope he favors the Evangelist family with occasional reports of observations made on the trip. Good arrangements have been made for the care of his work while he is gone, not the least important of which arrangements is an evangelistic meeting to be held by Brother E. L. Miller in April.

The ninth conference of Pacifist churches is scheduled to be held at Wilmington, Ohio, from the afternoon of Friday, March 1 to the afternoon of Sunday, March 3. The conference aims to give to those concerned with the peace work of the Brethren, Friends and Mennonites, an opportunity to compare notes on work done, to consider present needs and to discuss plans for effective future work. It aims also, through stirring messages from inspired speakers, to encourage and stimulate to greater efforts. Outstanding among the speakers invited are Kirby Page, editor of the World Tomorrow, Frederick J. Libby, of the National Council for the Prevention of War and Dr. Henry J. Cadbury, chairman of the American Friends' Service Committee. Members of the Wilmington community are offering over-night hospitality to those who request it. We urge Brethren pastors and laymen, that those who find it possible to attend shall not allow indifference to hinder them. We ought to get in on such conferences. Those interested may write Eldon Haines, R. F. D., Wilmington, Ohio.

The church at Milledgeville, Illinois, where Brother George E. Cone is the earnest pastor, was recently led in a revival effort by Dr. J. C. Beal, of Canton, Ohio. The snow and ice greatly hindered, so much so, that the meeting became more of a Bible conference than an evangelistic meeting, according to the pastor's report. Those who were able to attend were greatly enthused over Brother Beal's Bible expositions. It is said that it was practically impossible to get the unconverted to the meetings, due to the weather conditions. That is the case to a considerable degree, judging by reports, in many places even when weather conditions do not interfere. The complaint coming from evangelistic campaigns far and wide is that sinners do not attend services these days as they once did. That fact presents a vital problem in the matter of evangelism that the churches must face and seek to solve. Most of our evangelistic sermons are delivered to church members. How is the church going to reach the unconverted? That is our problem.

Apropos the obituary of Miss Mazie Teeter as published in this issue over the name of Brother H. C. Marlin, it seems fitting, in view of the unusual service and influence of the deceased, to add a further word of recognition. Her life made a significant impression on the Pleasant Hill community because of her work in the school room and also in the church. Both kinds of work are never unimportant, but when one stays on the job in both lines of service for nearly a third of a century and is faithful to both through the years, the value of that life cannot be estimated. And her community appreciates what she did. We notice by the daily paper published in Covington, Ohio, nearby, that, "In recognition of the faithful services rendered by Miss Mazie Teeter, who spent 31 years of her life as primary teacher in the Pleasant Hill schools the community will unite in placing a suitable memorial in the school building." She well deserved the honor. She was one of those quiet, efficient, well-poised leaders who are the saving salt of the communities in which they live, and such communities are honoring themselves when they honor their fallen servants.

The Superannuated Offering

By B. H. Flora

I was asked by the director of this department to write to the Evangelist readers, urging our people to remember the aged ministers and to contribute to the Superannuated offering.

Jesus tells of a man who said he could not dig, and was ashamed to beg, and therefore decided to make provision for his days of inactivity by forming friendships with some of his fellows who would in turn be friends to him. So he showed favors to certain men and they accepted his kindnesses and thus made themselves obligated to him, so that no doubt when he lost his position, they took him in and cared for him. This was a worldly man and he made friends of his kind, but Jesus said he showed wisdom in making these friends.

Permit me to ask a few pointed questions.

First, to the ministers:

Are you proving yourself a friend to the brother minister who first discovered your talents, gave you encouragement, ordained you to the sacred office of the ministry, vouched for you and helped to pave the way to your present splendid position? He showed you kindness; you owe much to him. Are you proving yourself a real friend to him now that conditions are reversed and he is needing help and you are comfortable and secure?

Second, to the Laity:

Are you showing yourself a friend to the minister who called you out of darkness into the marvelous light of the Gospel, baptized you, received you into the church, married you, or ministered to you when you laid your loved ones away? Have you forgotten all the kindnesses he showed you, all the services he rendered in your behalf, all the encouragement he gave you? Do you remember how thankful you were during the days of his ministry to you? And how you expressed to him your gratitude then? Are you now his real friend when he is needing help?

Third, to the Churches:

Are you a friend to the pastor who organized you into a church, preached for you for years, directed and inspired you in the building of your house of worship, built you up in numbers, served your community, ministered to your members in their homes and poured his life out to you until you thought you should get a younger minister? You remember how you appreciated his service at the time and how you delighted to spring a surprise on him and his good wife, giving them some substantial for you, rejoicing in your success and in looking over the old keepsakes. Old people are looked upon as being forgetful, but they have a faculty of remembering old friends and of appreciating new ones.

Jesus said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Jesus is the greatest friend of all, and he has done that which makes us forever his debtor. What can we do to show him our friendship? He tells us how we can prove our friendship to him when he says: "In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me."

I remember one of our ministers who was a charter member of the re-organized Brethren church. He was very active in organizing and caring for the churches. His preaching was of the old-fashioned kind. He thrilled his audiences; he held them spellbound; he preached with power. The people came for miles around to hear him. They loved him and praised him. They called him to conduct their funerals and to officiate at their weddings. His good wife lived very much alone,—he was gone so much in the service of the people. Finally his voice gave out and his eyes failed him. So he went no more about his ministry. I visited him and his wife in their affliction. There was no such provision for helping the aged ministers then as we have now. And there were many things they needed. The old sacrificing sister said to me: "I always thought I would like for a son of mine to be a minister, but I have changed my mind." And I, knowing what she meant, made no reply. This preacher had a host of friends in Indiana, but they seldom thought of him and he was ashamed to beg. His serving days were over; he had preached his last "farewell sermon."

Now, if all the good brethren who read these words will be "a friend in need," which is the way to be "a friend indeed," there will be rejoicing among the aged ministers of our church, and I think also among the angels. Are you a real friend?

"So when you are puzzled at the existence of pain; when thoughtless, shallow doubters tell you that he can't be good or all-powerful else he would not permit it—just say to yourself with deep humility: 'I don't understand the mystery of pain; I don't understand how God allows it. And yet, on the other hand, I can't imagine a perfect training life without it. And I know that at any rate God knows and God cares. So I wait and submit to his mysterious training for myself and for the poor troubled world, and look forward to the life for which he is training us—a life in which there shall be no more pain.'—J. Paterson Smyth, D.D.

Design In Nature

By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D., President of Ashland College

It would seem as if there were small place for chance in nature. When one comes to understand the very marvellous array of morphological features and then the function which they are to serve, it would seem as if chance were wholly shut out. Design is everywhere apparent. True, it is not always easy to see the raison d'être for some of these morphological features, yet those which we do understand are so nicely adjusted to the ends which they are to serve that it takes a mighty stretch of the imagination to suppose that all of these came about through impersonal and blind forces.

In pre-scientific times, explanations for some of these rather baffling questions were oftentimes grotesque, illogical, non-sequitur, and therefore, did not satisfy. In time such answers and explanations drove thinking men to abandon them all and to seek answers within the bounds of reason and the possible, and so the so-called scientific spirit grew up. As an example of the grotesque answers, take the case of Vesalius, who dominated the field of Medicine for more than 500 years. When asked why a man's ears were no longer than they are he replied that it was so he could wear a hat.

Much the same kind of reasoning is still found today, the case of flower colors will serve as an example. It is well known that certain kinds of plants have colored floral leaves. Moreover, they are oftentimes very gorgeously and even artistically tinted and pencilled and the forms are very bizarre. Indeed a very gigantic industry has been built up on this very fact, so that we now have to "say it with flowers." But will anyone be so naive as to assume that this is the reason why they are colored?

Is it not rather evident that all such morphological features have to do with the object which they are intended to serve, rather than for any extrinsic purpose? That is what I mean by design in nature—purpose, intelligence—call it what you will. I certainly would not put a keyboard on an automobile, but I would on a typewriter, for the simple reason that in the former case it would not only not serve a useful and designed purpose, but would hinder the machine from doing what I expect it to do, but I would find it useful on a typewriter.

And so with every form and function in nature, at least so far as animated forms are concerned, it would seem that design were evident. In human anatomy alone, we see the most marvellous adaptations for specific and definite ends. All nature is, to say the least, reasonable. There are a thousand questions which children put to us as to the why of certain natural phenomena and to which we so often give the wrong answer so that the child has to unlearn half of it when he becomes mature. There is no gain made at all by referring such natural events to remote and illogical causes, and the oft-repeated answer, "Oh, it just happened so," satisfies no thinking person. In the words of a well-known advertisement, "There's a reason." We have two eyes, but the reason is not because they "are so precious that if we lost the use of one we still could see with the other," for on that basis, ten would be better and show more wisdom in the design than two.

I am asking here, for a reasonable attitude of mind towards natural phenomena, nor does this attitude demand or even suggest a skeptical one. It does, rather on the other hand, demand logical reasoning and the elimination of chance. It certainly does not add to the dignity and creative power of God to try to explain his wonderful works by concocting far-fetched and fanciful theories about them. It is true that the axis of the earth is inclined about 23½ degrees to the plane of the ecliptic and there are doubtless good and sufficient reasons why it is so, but to say that it at one time was perpendicular and that, when "Satan fell as lightning from Heaven," he hit the earth with such terrific impact that the axis was tipped, is to talk the baby-talk both of religion and of science. Science need not invent out of pure fancy and caprice any "reasons," nor need religion go to extremes of human folly in order to explain the works of nature, and therefore, of God.

If you believe the Bible, I call your attention to the fact that it says, "How marvellous are thy works, in WISDOM hast thou made them all." And if you do not rely upon the words of the inspired writer, then open your own eyes and see that nature, life, and all there is, show design in their every feature. And if you do that, you will at last arrive at the idea of God, designer, maker, and upholder of all things.

Revival Within the Churches

By A. D. Cashman

(Moderator's address delivered at the Illiokota District Conference at Waterloo, October 3rd, 1928. Published in two parts. Part I.)

The word church, as used in the New Testament, while having one meaning has two applications. It means a called out or assembled company of people and is applied both to a local gathering of people who have assembled in one place and to a company of people called out from the old creation into the new. In this address, both meanings will be used and they will be distinguished by the expressions "local church" when applied to the former meaning, and "the true church of Jesus Christ" when applied to the latter.

In reality, the real church of Jesus Christ has no mission, for God has never commissioned her to undertake any work whatsoever. All divine commissions are given to the individual believers. The local organization is in existence because individual believers, who are commissioned of God, unite their purposes and ambitions for mutual results. Consequently, the function of such a local church should be the same as that of each individual in the original group. What the function of the local church, so defined, is, we shall discover out of God's word. She should be busy building up the body of the Lord Jesus Christ of which Jesus himself is the Head. Note Ephesians 1:22-23. "God hath put all things under Christ's feet and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." These members are the called out ones referred to in Acts 15:13-19, and are incorporated into the body by being made one Spirit with the Lord. The body is not yet completed, and since the figure of the temple of God, of which Jesus is the chief corner stone and every saved soul is likened to a stone in the temple, refers to the same thing, the temple is not yet completed. The body, or temple, was growing in Paul's day and it is growing now, but there needs to be further increase, or growth, before its completion (Eph. 2:20-22). The local church needs to function by doing God's will towards getting an increased number of people, not for the purpose of getting their names on the church roster to puff up the pastor and people in the eyes of the brotherhood, but to be, "no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and the household of God."

of the local churches to be. According to the practices permitted in some of them, one would think that they were merely welfare organizations for community betterment. Judging by the way many members object to money going out of the community for missionary purposes and yet liberally support the home church, it would seem that they consider the church merely as an influence for making the dollar worth more, and the community a more pleasant place in which to live. Judging by the number of socials, parties and banquets in some of them, one would be almost forced to the conclusion that they were merely social centers. Upon listening to some of the material, which is foreign to the word of God, that goes out from some pulpits to the congregations, it would seem that the function of the church was to produce an adequate place for the propagation of the opinions of men. The thing most common, which is foreign to the real function of the church, is the effort put forth to create an environment which will encourage members to reach a standard of living by human efforts, so that they will ultimately win the favor of God and receive salvation as a reward. For these things to have the predominance in the practice of the church is contrary to the purposes of God. For it has always been true that man has a tendency to love that which God hates and to hate that which God loves. (God hates sin; man loves it. God loves the Jew; man hates him.) What God emphasizes, man minimizes. God emphasizes the horribleness of sin; man slights it and accepts it as of little consequence. God warns us about Satan the enemy of us all; man encourages him and allows him to take control of the life.

Satan has been God's enemy, at least since Adam and Eve were placed in Eden. (No one knows how long before that.) It is the function of the local church to ally itself with God in a warfare against this wicked one. To do this, it is necessary for its working members to be one Spirit with the Lord. It is the power of the Spirit permeating the members to defeat Satan in the lives of mankind. Without the power of God, man is helpless in a warfare against Satan. Paul knew that when he said to the Christians at Ephesus, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God." What is the necessity of all this supernatural power? "That ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." Let us not allow our churches to become unconscious of the warfare in which they should be engaged. Let us not fail to point our members to the power with which to fight.

It is a grievous situation for the pastor to go into a church with a membership of anywhere from 100 to 250 and have a mere handful who are interested enough in this warfare to back him up with a life of prayer and service. In many cases, instead of having a healthy group of born-again souls to help him put on a constructive program that is in keeping with the true functions of the church, the pastor must spend a large portion of his time maneuvering in this respect, there would quite often be poor attraction for the unsaved who might be contemplating a new life. In the early day, the unsaved said, "Behold these Christians, how they love one another!" Today in view of the dissensions and personal grudges, an outsider says, "If that is Christianity, I don't want it."

Much effort is being put forth by the churches to add new members to the local churches. All that is done in this respect is commendable, providing a great majority are added to the real church of Jesus Christ. However, this is not always the case, so that the membership of the local church consists of three classes of members. They are, first, the spiritual Christians who usually make up the minority, as far as numbers are concerned. The second group is composed of carnal Christians who allow the flesh to predominate the Spirit in the warfare that Paul speaks of in Galatians 5:17. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh." The third consists of a group of unregenerate men and women who have succeeded in getting their names on the church books without experiencing the new birth. The last two named groups constitute some problems that have caused me to think that a discussion about a revival within the churches would furnish some suggestions which would be profitable and yet in keeping with the real function of the churches. Let us first give some attention to the problems of a revival among carnal Christians. These Paul speaks about in 1 Corinthians 3:1-3.

Carnal Christians are perfectly saved folks because they have met the condition of salvation by trusting in the blood of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. However, because of indifference, unconfessed sin and unyieldedness to the control of the Holy Spirit, they are not working the works of God and are the tools of Satan in that they assist him in hindering the growth of the true church. Therefore, I would suggest that which has already been suggested by the apostle Paul in Galatians 6:1: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." God would be pleased to have all of his children to say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Then there would be normal manifestations of the indwelling Christ. Those which are mentioned in the Scriptures are the following:

1. The knowledge of God as Father (Matt. 11:27).
2. A new reality in prayer (Romans 8:26-27).
3. A new ability to understand the Scriptures (John 16:12-15).
4. A new sense of the sinfulness of sin (Psalms 119:11).
5. A new love for the unsaved (Romans 5:5).
6. A new love for the saved (1 John 3:14).
7. Manifestations of the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22-23).
8. A consciousness of salvation through faith in Christ (John 5:24).

Among carnal Christians, there are those who desire to do the will of God but must say as Paul did in Romans 7:21. "When I would do good, evil is present with me," and must attribute the blame to the sin that dwells in them. These have learned that Jesus saves from the guilt of sin but as yet have not made the discovery that the Holy Spirit has come into their lives to give them victory over the power of sin. Let us reveal this knowledge and encourage this class of church members to an aggressive warfare against Satan by emphasizing such passages as Galatians 5:16. "This I say then: Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." Gal. 5:25: "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (1 John 4:4). "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world" (Romans 8:31). "If God be for us, who can be against us?" In Jude 9 it is said of Michael the archangel, that he durst not bring against Satan a railing accusation when contending with him but said, "The Lord rebuke thee." In just the same manner it is only possible for any child of God to gain victory over the power of sin.

Another group of carnal Christians may be revived and encouraged to yield their lives unto the Lord by pointing out the loss accrued by the refusal to do so. These are they who have no fellowship with God (1 John 1:6), "If we say that we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth." No answer to prayer, for when the believer is out of fellowship, God hears no prayer of his. No reward for service, for his service under such conditions is likened to wood, hay and stubble and is burned (1 Cor. 3:12-15.) To such let us stress the importance of the confession of sins for restoration (1 John 1:9) and make an appeal for a yielded life by directing them to Romans 6:11-13: "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lust thereof. Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments as righteousness unto God." Romans 12:1, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." 1 John 2:15, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." And other passages might be cited.

BUSINESS—AND THE LORD'S DAY

A realty company sends me two railroad tickets, and invites me to be their guest on a given Sunday. They are going to have a "big sale of beautiful homes and restricted home sites." The practice is not uncommon in our cities. Sometimes there is a big tent with a sort of barbecue free lunch for prospective purchasers.

What are the reasons for such a program and the results coming from it? Have people no other time to go than Sunday? Does not their work permit them to go on any other day? Are most of the people lacking in any Christian ideals for the use of the day? Is buying a home "a work of mercy or necessity?" Are such business enterprises steadily encroaching upon the rest-day for workers? Shall a Christian stenographer, who is asked to report Sunday morning for this special-sales work, tell her employer that she has other ideals for the use of the day?

We are getting close in America to what is called the Continental Sunday, in which business and recreation combine to weaken religious obligation and lessen religious opportunity. What answer do Christian young people make? What ideals for using the Lord's Day do you set before yourself? Are we inclined to pick the religious season as the dumping-ground for all the odds and ends of the week? Are baths, mending, reading, visiting, the highest employments for the Lord's Day?—Ernest Bourner Allen in C. E. World.

SHALL THE ENGLISH CHANNEL BE TUNNELED?

Premier Baldwin of England is in possession of a report from a committee appointed to investigate the advisability of placing a tunnel under the English channel, uniting France and England. For half a century this proposition has been before these two nations, but each time, while business and professional and social leaders have supported the proposition, the British army and navy experts have successfully vetoed it. What will they do now? Many realize that it is a project as meaningful as the Suez and Panama canals for England and the Continent. Financiers are agreed that there will be no difficulty in financing this billion-dollar project of forty-four miles of tunnel. Further, though it would take six years to build it and approximately a supply of sixty thousand men on the British side, nothing here stands in the way of its construction. All agree that the tunnel would make for better international relations and friendships, that business life would be helped, and that an interchange of visitors would be advanced. Since any future attack on England would likely take the form of an air attack, the military experts may now withhold their customary objections. While those outside of England and France have nothing directly to say as to the project, yet all will hope the tunnel will be constructed.—Religious Telescope.

DRIER AND DRIER

Ninth anniversary of the going into effect of the Eighteenth amendment found the temperance sentiment throughout the world stronger and more confident than ever before, believes Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism. "The amendment became operative nine years ago," Dr. Cherrington says, "after the most herculean and intense efforts on the part of the liquor forces to prevent its adoption. Obviously its enforcement has not been all that might be desired, yet, despite imperfect enforcement, and despite the combined assaults upon it by the foes of prohibition, the results of the National prohibition law have been so beneficent and so generally recognized that every effort to weaken the law or to make the amendment null has been met by defeat. The Congress which will sit March 4 is the driest deliberative political body ever elected in the history of the world. The gentleman who will be inaugurated President of the United States on that day is fully pledged to and whole-heartedly in favor of prohibition and its complete enforcement. The incoming Vice-President, as president of the Senate, is bone dry. The people of the United States have the right to expect not only that the National prohibition laws will in no wise be weakened by Congress, but also that they will be rigidly enforced by the incoming executive."

GET ALONG WITHOUT GOD?

From a recent article by Gamaliel Bradford I quote the concluding paragraph:

"Will the world get along without God? The Society for the Advancement of Atheism assures us with the gayest confidence that it will. Science, education, more enlightened consideration of hygiene, of social needs and relations, will dispose of the old, despised moral and religious taboos, men and women will be virtuous and self-sacrificing and industrious because it does not pay to be otherwise, and all will be for the best in the best of scientifically approved and regulated worlds, from which God will be dismissed because he has served his purpose.

"It may be so; but one who doubts about many things will be inclined to doubt most of all about this. Science is singularly uncertain. Wisdom is at best perplexing, baffling, most of all conflicting. Ignorance grows and swells and overwhelms us more than ever before, since the vast increase of general knowledge gets daily more and more out of the grasp of an individual. The one thing that is indisputably certain is human suffering and misery, which even the Society for the Advancement of Atheism has so far been unable to abolish or reason away. And so long as human suffering and misery exist, the need for God, which some think created him, will continue to exist and the world will cry out for him till it finds him. In a hundred thousand years no remedy for wretchedness and weakness and despair has ever been found more comforting than the old Hebraic murmur, 'For underneath are the everlasting arms, underneath are the everlasting arms'—The Living Church.

SCIENTISTS AND SCIENTISTS

Dr. Henry Fairfield Osborn, President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, delivered a merited rebuke to Prof. Harry Elmer Barnes, Smith College Sociologist, at the recent meeting of the American Association in New York, where both Dr. Osborn and Dr. Barnes have spoken. Dr. Barnes is sometimes brilliant, frequently superficial, and not generally convincing. His call for a new God revealed chiefly his lack of familiarity with the old God. There can be no conflict between some scientists and religion and between some religionists and science. The truly scientific mind is invariably humble and generally devout. Dr. Howard Kelly is a supreme example of the Christian scientist.—Methodist Protestant.

LICENSED VICE SEES "HANDWRITING"

Licensed prostitution in Japan met its first decisive legal defeat last week when the Prefectural Assembly of Saitama, near Tokyo, unanimously passed a resolution providing for the gradual abolition of this evil in that Prefecture. The practice will become dead automatically in Saitama prefecture upon the expiration of the present licenses. The reason advanced for the step was that the custom is incompatible with the enlightened civilization and the spirit of the "Showa" era. Vice quarters have in the past been extremely prosperous in Japan, but in recent years, thanks to the developing moral consciousness of the people and the activities of such anti-vice organizations as the "Purity League" and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, their prosperity is declining. A concentration of the combined forces of several reform agencies in Saitama Prefecture over a period of two years has been largely responsible for this signal victory. Mrs. O. Kubishiro, general secretary of the Japan W. C. T. U., says, "The institution of the licensed quarter is now under the ban in two prefectures in Japan and other sections of the empire will soon follow their lead."

Causes of Perplexities in Religious Journalism

The preacher publishes good tidings and the publisher preaches good tidings. This justifies the claim that the religious paper is the pastor's best assistant.

Here is a service not fully appreciated which the denominational paper renders week by week. Indeed a Christian journal which does not live to promote ethical idealism, spiritual culture, evangelistic passion, Christian missions on a world scale, and the faith of the gospel is unthinkable. As a purveyor of news the denominational paper is indispensable. But the news bears the same relation to the religious paper that the announcements in the church bulletin bear to the pulpit. The announcements read by the pastor is not preaching and the news disseminated by the editor is not journalism. Christian journalism at its best is inspired preaching on a high level of intelligence, eloquence and spiritual power. No other agency in the organization and work of the evangelical churches of Christ in the world can take the place of the Christian journal which holds itself to ideals of literary excellence, of evangelizing fervor, of spiritual interpretation, of world redemption, of Christian unity, of human brotherhood in Christ. The complexities of modern life create the perplexities of religious journalism, but the perplexities must never be permitted to result in the embarrassing abandonment of the denominational paper.

MONDAY

SIX DAYS SHALT THOU LABOR—Ex. 20:9; Rom. 12:9-18. Today I must be about my work. I may return to it eagerly because I love it, but whether I love it or not, I must work. We are all agreed that work is a blessing as well as a duty. The blessing of work is inherent in the quality of life. It is what we are here for. And its rewards, whatever form they may take, are the witness of achievement, the assurance that we have attained to some of life's values. So I will go cheerfully to my work, expecting that there I shall find the service for which I made, and so the way to happiness and enduring rewards.

TUESDAY

WORK WHILE IT IS DAY—John 9:4; Mark 6:25-33. "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is yet day; the night cometh when no man can work." These are solemn words. Let me take them to heart today. What have I accomplished to justify the life and the abilities with which God has endowed me? And what am I doing now? The sigh of Cecil Rhodes may have an echo in every mind—"So much to do and so little time." Life is much too short to spare any time for utilities. I may not stop to resent or retaliate an injury. Nor can I afford to waste time on vain regrets. Let me remember, not with anxious fear, as a cheerful incentive to diligence, that the night cometh.

WEDNESDAY

FINISHED WORK—John 17:4; Mark 4:26-33. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." These are surprising words. In that brief life, what has been accomplished? The sower had cast the seed into the ground, leaving the earth to bring forth fruit to itself. As for me, perhaps I overestimate myself. It may be my vanity or my ambition that reproaches me. God may not expect so much of me as I think. And I am impatient of results. I would be sower and reaper too, which may not be. If I have reaped that whereon I spent no labor, shall I not sow for harvests that I shall never see?

THURSDAY

WORKING FOR WHAT?—Matt. 6:16-24. "Verily I say unto you, They have their reward (already)." The principle of reward is a sound one. I must work for something, not merely to be occupied. What am I working for? Is it money, to lay up treasure on earth? Is it some little or great honor among men? As I working for the means to gratify myself in pleasure? Or am I working for a living? Whatever it is, I will work while there is expectation, after that there is only dreariness. The plight of the hypocrites was pathetic because they had their reward already. There was nothing coming to them. I want to work for something that cannot be paid off today or tomorrow; something that will satisfy, and yet forever be incomplete.

FRIDAY

ENDURING IN HIS PRESENCE—Heb. 11:23-30. "For he endured as seeing him who is invisible." Now praise we famous men. I may not forget that this is Washington's birthday. It appears that Washington was a thrifty and prosperous man of business. He took care of the property that he inherited, and sought to increase it by all honorable means. At the same time the lack of self-seeking, the sheer unselfishness of his patriotism is an example to public men, and to those in private life as well. This combination of conflicting traits is pertinent to this series of meditations. The clue here as elsewhere is in the sense of God's presence and authority. If I seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, then all things else will take care of themselves.

SATURDAY

SORROW TURNED TO JOY—John 16:16-24. "And ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." My sorrow is ever with me. I would have it so. To forget would be disloyalty. There is comfort in remembering and grieving. It assures me that love is triumphing over death. It opens my eyes to new and higher mysteries and joys and life.

SUNDAY

GOD'S RELATIVES—Mark 3:35; Luke 10:38-42. "For whosoever shall do the will of God, that same is my brother, and my sister, and mother." Jesus adopts himself into every Christian family, and makes our homes his own. How precious is the intimacy and understanding of the home! How infinitely more precious is it to belong to God's family circle!—G. S. B.

Stories Worth Remembering on Christian Stewardship

TITHING OR GIVING?—They gave of their own accord (8:3). Mamie had a bright silver dollar given her. She asked her father to change it into dimes. "What is that for, dear?" he asked. "So that I can get the Lord's part out of it." And when she got the smaller coins, she laid out one of the ten. "There," she said, "I will keep that until Sunday." When Sunday came, she went to the box in the church and dropped in two dimes. "Why," said her father, "I thought you gave one-tenth to the Lord." "I said one-tenth belongs to him, and I can't give the Lord what is his own. So, if I give him anything, I have to give him what is mine."—From Christian Witness. Sent by Emily McFarland, Newark, Ohio.

THE ALTERED CHECK—The fellowship in the ministering to the saints (v. 4). A story is told of Henry Thornton. An appeal was made to him for missions, and he made out a check for five pounds. Before the ink was dry a telegram was handed to him. He opened it, and turned ashy white. He said to the visitor: "I have just received bad news. I have lost thousands of pounds. Give me back the check." The visitor supposed that now the check would be canceled, but Mr. Thornton altered the five pounds to fifty, saying, "God has taught me that I may not much longer possess my property, and that I must use it well."—From Scraps. Sent by W. E. Griffin, Atlantic City, New Jersey.

ONE CAUSE OF SPIRITUAL ILLNESS We exhorted—he would also complete in you this grace also (v. 6). Shear the sheep? Yes, frequently and close. Is it not hard on the sheep to shear them? Not at all. It is good for them in every way. If sheep are not sheared they become unhealthy. How many of God's saints are forfeited with the things of this world? Their spirituality is smothered by an excess of the things of this life. Many are sick because their lives have no outlet. Their affections are turned after their earthly possessions and not set on things above.—From Ten Years in Texas, by Gambrell. Sent by W. C. Garberson, Longmont, Colorado.

HOW MUCH SHALL WE KEEP?—See that ye abound in this grace also (v. 7). There was a servant of God who had a little girl, and he was anxious that she should be brought up to serve him, and he wanted to teach her that we should give one-tenth of our possessions to God. One day he called her into his study, where he had arranged ten piles of money. And he said: "You see, I have ten piles of money here. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine—these belong to me; but this tenth one belongs to God." The little girl said: "Oh, Father, are you going to keep all the nine for yourself?"—From The King's Business. Sent by Howard M. Green, Warsaw, New York.

TREASURE FOR HER NEW HOME—Abound in this grace also (v. 7). A poor widowed laundress lost her only child, a daughter. A few days after the funeral she called on the clergyman who had attended her daughter in her illness, and, handing him a packet containing twenty pounds, asked that it might be conveyed to some missionary society. The clergyman, knowing well her circumstances, naturally remonstrated; but with great modesty she urged him to take it, and said: "When my child was born I thought, 'She'll live to get married some of these days.' And I thought I would begin to put by a little sum to be a store for her then, and I began that day with sixpence. You know what happened last week. Well, I thought to myself, the heavenly Bridegroom has come, and he has called her Home to be his Bride; and I thought, as he has taken the bride, it is only right he should have the dowry."—From The Christian. Sent by W. R. Clark, Oxford, England. Prize illustration.

POSTPONING GIVING—Proving — the sincerity also of your love (v. 8).

"What is that in Thine Hand?"

"It's not what you'd do with a million,

If riches should e'er be your lot;

But what are you doing at present

With the dollar and a quarter you've got?"

—From the King's Business. Sent by Howard M. Green, Warsaw, New York.

WATCHED DAD CONTRIBUTE—He that soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly. (9:6). When the family returned from Sunday morning service, father criticized the sermon, daughter thought the choir's singing atrocious, and mother found fault with the organist's playing. But the subject had to be dropped when the small boy of the family piped up: "But it was a good show for a nickel, don't you think, Dad?"—From the Illinois Farmer. Sent by G. E. Walden, McLeansboro, Illinois.

WHERE HIS TREASURE REALLY WAS—He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly (v. 6).

HIGH RENT

He dropped a nickel in the plate,

Then meekly raised his eyes;

Glad the weekly rent was paid

For the mansion in the skies.

—From The Friendly Messenger. Sent by Howard M. Green, Warsaw, New York.

WHAT HIS REWARD DEPENDED ON

—He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully (v. 6). There is an old story that contains good advice. A minister who was to preach in a strange church took his little son along. Noticing a collection box in the vestibule he put in a coin. After the service was over, the treasurer asked the minister to wait until he received the offering for the visiting minister. He opened the box already mentioned. It contained the single coin which the minister had put in. On the way home the little lad said, "Father, if you had put more in you would have got more out." This rule holds good at all times.—Sent by J. A. Clark, Hempsteads, Bacup, England.

THE TRUE SPRING OF STEWARDSHIP—Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart: not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). Give, not from the top of your purse, but from the bottom of your heart. —From Moody Monthly. Sent by G. R. Collmer, Zacapa, Guatemala, C. A.

"WHILE IT IS CALLED TODAY"—Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart (v. 7). A certainly godly woman unexpectedly received a legacy of $5,000. True to her practice maintained in poverty she at once put $500 in her Tenth Box and it was used in Christ's work. She never mentioned the disposal of the tenth, but after her death there was found entered in her diary the day she received the legacy: "Quick, quick, before my heart gets hard." —From Alliance Weekly. Sent by Mrs. Lura E. Bowden, New Albany, Indiana.

AN UNEASY CONSCIENCE — Not grudgingly, or of necessity (v. 7). A man was once asked for a donation for some church purpose, but excused himself by saying: "I am fattening a calf, and when it's fat, I'll give the proceeds." The same excuse was given three times over in response to appeals. One day he was approaching church a little late, and heard the choir singing "The calf has never yet been told," and thought, in the distance, the words were, "The calf has never yet been sold." Conscience stricken, he sold the calf and gave the proceeds to the church.—From 1000 Illustrations. Sent by Mrs. S. M. McConnell, Monmouth, Illinois.

WHY HE GAVE—Not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). A wise old German once said, "I like to give willingly; when I gives willingly it enjoys me so much I gives again." —From Christian Herald. Sent by Emma S. Keller, Brooklyn, New York.

HIS REWARD LOST—God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). I heard of a rich man who was asked to make a contribution on behalf of some charitable object. The text, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he repay him again," was quoted to him. The man said that the security might be good enough, but the credit was too long. He was dead within two weeks.—From D. L. Moody. Sent by Mrs. Lura E. Bowden, New Albany, Indiana.

A POOR SUBSTITUTE FOR GIVING—God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). A Scotch minister in needs of funds thus conveyed his intentions to his congregation: "Well, friends, the kirk is urgently in need of silver, and as we have failed to get money honestly, we will have to see what a bazaar can do for us."—From W. H. Bowman, in "Money." Sent by Mrs. Lura E. Bowden, New Albany, Indiana.

GIVING THAT COSTS LITTLE—God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). A little girl and her mother were walking in the orchard one evening. The girl said to her mother: "Ma, I wish you would give me an apple tree for my own." "Why, dear, they are all yours as much as mine," said the mother. "But," said the girl, "I want one to give all the fruit it bears to God." Her mother then told her to select any tree she chose. She selected the most thrifty looking tree in the orchard, and laying her hands upon it, said with much solemnity, "Tree, from now on you belong to God!"—From the Evangelical Messenger. Sent by Wm. D. Combs, Oneida, New York.

-RECORDED IN HEAVEN—God loveth a cheerful giver (v. 7). A poor Irish woman went to a priest in Boston and asked him to forward to Ireland her help for the famine sufferers. "How much can you spare?" asked the priest. "I have a hundred dollars saved," she said, "and I can spare that." "What is your name," he asked, "that I may have it published?" "My name?" said the brave soul, counting out her money; "don't mind that, sir. Just send them the help, and God will know my name."—From Sunday School Chronicle. Sent by Miss G. B. Downe, Kingston Hill, Surrey, England.

BEFORE ALL OTHER GIFTS—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). Most people think the Gospel is an invitation to do something for God. There could not be a greater mistake. A drunkard, very conscious of his weakness and helplessness, was urged by a lady to "Sign the pledge and keep it." "But," cried the distressed man, "I don't want something to keep! I need something to keep me!" Thank God, he soon did get, not something, but Some One who kept him—that Savior, the Lord Jesus, of whom it is said, "He is able to keep."—From the Sunday School Times. #### Explanatory Notes

Andrew was a son of John, or Jona, of Bethsaida. The name is of Greek form and means "manly." Andrew and his brother Simon lived in Capernaum. There is a tradition that Andrew spent some years in Scythia, accounting for his becoming the patron saint of Russia.

Simon is the Greek form of Simeon.

Messiah is the Hebrew equivalent of "Christos" or Christ, which is a Greek word meaning "anointed" or "the anointed one." It derived its meaning from the ancient custom of consecrating a king by anointing him with oil.

There are several forms of the name here rendered John. The Hebrew form was "Johanan," which is variously rendered in the new Testament "John," "Jona," or "Jonah."

Cephas is a Greek form of the Aramaic "Kepha" which has the same meaning as Peter.

Simon Bar-Jonah is Aramaic for "Simon, son of John."

The word church occurs twice in Matthew and nowhere else in the Gospels.

The Greek Hades corresponds to the Hebrew Sheol, the place of departed spirits. Probably the gates of Hades means the power of the unseen world, especially the power of death."

Two words, each translated love, are used in the passage from John. The word used in the first and second questions by Jesus is said to mean a love based on judgment, while the word that Peter uses signifies a warmer affection. Evidently the words were interchangeable, however, for Jesus in his final repetition of the question uses the word Peter had used.—Dr. E. Leigh Mudge.

We Must Grow

If a Christian looks upon himself as a "tree planted by the rivers of water that bringeth forth his fruit in his season," he judges rightly. But to conclude therefore that his growth will be as irresistible as that of the tree, coming as a matter of course because he has by regeneration been planted in Christ, is a grave mistake. The disciple is required to be consciously and intelligently active in his own growth, as a tree is not, "to give all diligence to make his calling and election sure." And when we say active we do not mean self-active merely, for "which of you by taking thought (or being anxious) can add one cubit unto his stature?" asks Jesus, Mt. 6:27. But we must surrender ourselves to the divine action by living in the Spirit and walking in the Spirit, all of which conditions are as essential to our development in holiness as the rain and sunshine are to the growth of the oak.—A. J. Gordon.

Brought About by Christ

God's power for our growth is brought to us by Christ. Peter emphasizes this truth in the last verse of this, his Second Epistle: "Grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ;" and Paul felt deeply that all his power came from the same source, for he wrote (Phil. 4:13): "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me." The Christian who would grow stronger day by day must day by day draw nearer to Jesus Christ by earnest prayer, eager study of his words, and honest obedience to his commands.

Growth is the big word in the realm of life. You can build a house, a monument, or a temple, but you cannot build a tree, a bird, or a man. These are living organisms and reach maturity by means of growth, as all living things do. A stone may be chiseled into the shape of a man, but it is still a lifeless stone statue. Christian characters must be grown. And this requires not a saw and hammer, but food, and health and time and culture. At present, we fear, there is too much of the mechanical and too little of the natural method in the formation of character.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

The more we exercise the spiritual faculty, the more certain do spiritual things become. He who habitually obeys conscience sees, more and more clearly, the eternal distinction between right and wrong. He who habitually disobeys his conscience at last can hardly discern any law of duty. To him who constantly looks forward with trust to a future state, immortality becomes more and more certain. The pure in heart, who habitually look up to a heavenly ideal of goodness, see God more and more.—James Freeman Clarke.

By daily increase we shall be made capable of daily increase. Life is growth; the divine life in him is not growth, but in us it does grow, and our infancy will be turned into youth; and our youth into maturity; and, blessed be his name, the maturity will be a growing one, to which gray hairs and feebleness will never come, nor a term ever set. More and more of God we may receive every day we live, and through the endless ages of eternity; and if we have him in our hearts, we shall live as long as there is anything more to pass from God to us.—Alexander Maclaren.

He was never a good man that amends not. For if he were good he must needs desire to be better. Grace is so sweet, that he who ever tastes of it must needs long after more. And if he desires it, he will endeavor it; and if he do but endeavor, God will crown it with success.—Joseph Hall.

We are building every day
In a good or evil way,
And the structure, as it grows,
Will our inmost self disclose.

Till in every arch and line
All our faults and failings shine;
It may grow a castle grand,
Or a wreck upon the sand.

Build it well, whate'er you do;
Build it straight, and strong, and true;
Build it clean, and high, and broad;
Build it for the eye of God!

Leaders that Lead

The leaders of our prayer meetings should lead in prayer. They should fill the meeting with the devotional spirit by being themselves quiet and devotional. They should draw from the Endeavorers sentence prayers and longer prayers, making advance arrangements for the latter if necessary.

The leaders of our meetings should lead in testimony. They should themselves give personal testimonies, speaking as far as possible out of their own experiences, so as to promote the same kind of testimony from others. They should plan ways of drawing out the testimonies of the Endeavorers, and there is no better way than to give out in advance questions on the topic, handing them not to the ready speakers who may be counted upon to take their part anyway, but to those that need this aid.

The leaders should lead in song, not by conducting drills, for those spoil any meeting, but by themselves singing with the spirit and the understanding, and so setting a good example.

The leaders should lead in the use of the Bible, themselves putting heart into their Bible-reading, and prompting the members to use their Bibles in preparation for the meeting by answering the questions the leaders have given out.

The leader is not to show himself off, but to draw the members out. He is never to scold, but always to inspire. As he truly leads, the meeting will be a success. He has a magnificent opportunity.—L. R. Wales.

HERO-WORSHIP

By Faith C. Isaac, Intermediate Superintendent of the Washington Christian Endeavor Union

To be a hero-worshipping Intermediate with the Intermediates one is working among is a high ideal.

First, the superintendent knows personally the greatest hero of the age, the Lord Jesus Christ, as his or her personal Savior. Then it becomes a goal to have every Intermediate with whom he comes in contact know him, too (Phil. 3:10).

With this foundation, a definite programme, using plans of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, works out beautifully.

times very acceptably at our Chapel services.

There have been several new additions to the enrollment with the new semester. We have gained as many as we lost through failures and withdrawals.

Professor Monroe recently spoke before the Coterie Club of Ashland.

He is also representing us at the inauguration of the new president of Ohio Wesleyan.

Mrs. Edwin E. Jacobs is spending some weeks with relatives in New York.

We have recently been visited by representatives of the State Office of Public Instruction and also of the Association of Ohio Colleges. Getting ready all the reports including the financial statements has been a very big task.

The finances of the College at this writing seem more encouraging than usual. Financial depressions are reflected in colleges finances as well as elsewhere.

We recently defeated Bliss Business College on their own floor in Columbus, Western Reserve in Cleveland, and Kenyon on our own floor. We played Ohio State here last Saturday. Score, Ashland 40, Ohio State, 29.

I shall be in Columbus this week conferring with the members of a committee of the Associated Colleges of Ohio.

LONG BEACH NEWS

We are happy to report to our Brethren. "Truely the Lord has been with us."

At our January business meeting a fine report from each auxiliary of the church was given, showing all departments in a healthy, growing condition.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

This place is about twenty miles northwest of Des Moines. The church is not large numerically, but is made up of loyal and spiritual people. They have a fine church building and a parsonage. Brother Cashman is their pastor. He and his wife are held in very high esteem by the church and community.

It was a pleasure for me to work in this congregation, as I found them interested in the future of our church and willing to do their best to give aid to the College program. Several years ago when Brother Porte was pastor I held an evangelistic meeting for them, so it was like visiting old friends.

Brother Cashman is a graduate of Ashland College and his wife formerly was a member of the faculty. It is needless to say that they were willing and anxious to give me every aid in my work and made my stay very pleasant.

Dallas Center is the first town in the State of Iowa that I have visited in which there was no bank failure and while they felt the effects of this State's financial reverses, yet they were in better financial shape than most of the places I have visited.

Investments is one of the biggest words in American life and business today. The Church of Christ was instituted to carry forward the business of the Kingdom of God in the world. It should be the objective of the followers of our Lord to promote to the best of their ability his work and to make the work of the Kingdom first in their support—NOT LAST.

There is no place in the work of our church that money is going to count more for the church than in the College. IT IS A PERMANENT INVESTMENT that will continue to make possible a Christian education for young men and women as long as time lasts, as this is PERMANENT ENDOWMENT we are raising. The church will receive the LARGEST RETURNS for it is investment in trained young life for service that will multiply and extend their mission.

The total gift of the above congregation was $1,765.00.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Girls' Glee Club has just returned from an itinerary in northern Indiana and I hear good reports of their work. I think the churches were generally pleased.

Dr. W. S. Bell has been spending some days in the office going over some financial matters. Listing our notes and getting the proper names, etc., of them all is a big task.

I spoke before the Brotherhood of Alexander Mack at our Mansfield church one evening last week. The luncheon was well attended. Brother Russel Barnard is the capable pastor.

Rev. Frank Holsopple, pastor of the Brethren in Roanoke, Virginia, has been here for the past few days, holding a revival in our church. He has spoken several tendance for the year 498, an average increase of 48 over last year. We feel that part of this is due to the work done in the mid-week Bible classes, which act as a real feeder for our Sunday school, also the work done by the Transportation Committee in bringing children to the Sunday school who otherwise would not be able to come.

The Primary Department with Mrs. A. H. Kent as superintendent gave a fine report, showing a splendid gain along all lines and with an enrollment of 255 and an average attendance of 186.

The four Christian Endeavor Societies, Adult, Senior, Intermediate, and Junior, gave encouraging reports of work accomplished in the Master's vineyard.

The new Sunday school building plan is progressing nicely and we expect to break ground for the building in about six weeks.

Seventy members of our church promised in January, 1928 to read the Bible through; instead of seventy we were able to place seventy-four on the Honor Roll.

Our prayer meetings, as well as Thursday evening Bible classes, conducted by our pastor, Brother Bauman, are well attended.

We return daily thanks for these many blessings which we enjoy, and ask an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood that we may ever be humble, zealous workers in his vineyard, until our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ shall come.

BETHLEHEM CHURCH, HARRISON-BURG, VIRGINIA

A good many of the Evangelist family know Brother J. M. Bowman. Some months ago I made mention of Brother Bowman's illness in a letter to the Evangelist. I am happy to say that he is still improving slowly. He has been confined to his bed for a year with his illness but this has in no wise dimmed his radiant faith or dulled his intellectual ability. I feel sure that he would enjoy letters from friends throughout our brotherhood, for one seldom finds a person more interested in the spread of the Gospel and in the Brethren cause than Brother Bowman.

A pall of gloom settled over our church community when it was learned that Elder J. I. Hall had been called home. Brother Hall began his ministry in this church and preached here for some time while teaching school nearby. Four days after the death of Brother Hall his good wife followed him to the spirit world. Both Brother Hall and his good wife have relatives in this church and the sudden call home of these beloved has consequently set heavily upon us. Prayers and sympathies of all the folks of the church and community have been expressed to and in behalf of these dear sorrowing ones. The Brethren church has lost a pair of consecrated workers who in self-effacing spirit have wrought long and hard for the Master. May our loss be their gain!

During the next few months the pulpit at this place will be supplied by the Rev. Minor C. Miller, General Secretary of the Virginia Council of Religious Education and Professor of Religious Education in Bridgewater College. The reason for this is that the writer expects to leave February 14 for Egypt, Palestine, and other Mediterranean countries. The trip will gratify a long standing ambition to actually set foot on some of the territory where transpired the greatest events in the history of mankind.

In the latter part of the month of April

Rev. E. L. Miller, pastor of the Maurertown church and Moderator of the Southeastern District Conference will begin a series of evangelistic meetings here. We look forward with great pleasure to the coming of Brother Miller and pray that these meetings will do much for the Kingdom's upbuilding in these parts. Everyone in this church has met Brother Miller and to know him is to love him so the right sort of support will not be lacking when he arrives on the field. Brother Miller is doing a wonderful piece of work for the Brethren cause in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, generous as he is, with his time, energy, and splendid abilities. Without the kindly aid of this genial and versatile friend and brother minister, I know that my own beginnings in the ministry would be far more difficult, and as for the work in general here in this section he has proven himself to be the right man at the right place.

We extend our greetings and good wishes to all of the Evangelist family. Brethren pray for us.

The Lamented
Elder A. B. Duncan

REV. A. B. DUNCAN—AN APPRECIATION

With the passing of Rev. A. B. Duncan of Oak Hill, West Virginia, this county has lost one of its foremost citizens and the Brethren church has lost a man who always stood firm for the Whole Gospel. While he was perhaps not as widely known as many of the older men of the ministry, his ministry covered a long period of years which were spent in this section of West Virginia. He had had the advantage of only ten months of subscription school as the pioneer schools were called, but was thoroughly schooled in the experiences of life. He possessed a keen, retentive and analytical mind. He was noted for his wit, which did not leave him during the period of his affliction. As one who was his pastor for over five years, I am led to believe that no young man in the ministry ever had a more sympathetic adviser from an aged minister in his congregation than was "Father Duncan" to me.

There was never a sign of jealousy or envy, and suggestions were made in the spirit of great meekness. The advancement of the Kingdom and the growth of the local church was ever his goal. He was liberal with his means in the building of the parsonage, the getting of a residential pastor, and the building of the new church. He was unable to ever enter the new building in his lifetime but had seen it and kept in constant touch with the work. He left a family that was a great pride to him and also the community. The Duncan quartette is known all over this section of the state. He officiated in over five hundred marriages and a great number of funerals. The work and standing of the Oak Hill Brethren church is a monument to his life as a minister who was willing to bury himself that there might stand in this community a testimony to the Whole Gospel. He has often said that, "anything more is too much and anything less is not enough."

ALLETOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The First Brethren church, Allentown, Pennsylvania, have just closed a three weeks' evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Miss Emma M. Aboud. Miss Aboud is a conscientious, tireless worker, wholly dependent on prayer and the guiding of the Holy Spirit. She preached the Word and there was a deep spiritual refreshing among the members and friends alike. The services were well attended and on several occasions chairs and pews were filled. There were six confessions and four baptisms as a result of the meetings. There was a fifth baptism but she had come forward during the regular service under Brother Christiansen. On her last night two classes of six girls each came forward, for reconsecration to be used in the Lord's service. Our prayers go with her to her own field.

MEETING AT MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLIONIS

On January sixth we started a meeting under the leadership of Brother J. C. Beal. We considered ourselves fortunate in securing his services for a series of Bible studies and sermons. The plan was for at least two weeks and preferably three weeks. All arrangements having been made it was thought the wise plan to go forward with the arrangement even though there were a great many in the community who were afflicted with the "Flu" and several of our own number so afflicted. A few had pneumonia. The time for Brother Beal to arrive brought us a snow storm with falling of temperature. This continued not just for one day, but for a week, then on into the second week and clear through the third week. During this period we had snow, rain, sleet and more snow. Temperature ranged from a few degrees above zero down to more than twenty degrees below zero. All through the three weeks it was very cold and so icy, most of the time, that it was impossible for the many to venture out after night. Many of the older members found it impossible to come to the church, and it is still very difficult to get about. Needless to say the meeting, of necessity, took on the form of a Bible conference. We had planned that it should be partially a Bible conference but not entirely so. The idea was a Bible study hour either during the afternoon or in the early evening with the evangelistic services in the evening.

In spite of the extremely cold and bad weather there was a splendid attendance for the Bible study hour from seven until eight in the evening. The poorest attendance, so far as numbers go, was on a slippery, bad night when the sleet had broken the wires down and the electric lights were off during the hours for meeting. That night we had fourteen who sat quietly and listened attentively while, by candle light, Brother Beal expounded to us the Scriptures. With all the bad weather the average at Bible study was around thirty and when the weather was at all possible there were very good attendances at the meetings.

To be sure we were disappointed, and so was he I presume, in the fact that there were no additions to the number confessing Jesus Christ as Lord and being added to the church, which is his Body.

Those who were able to attend the meetings regularly were helped into a deeper understanding of the Word, encouraged in the faith, strengthened for the witness to the truth, prepared more fully to be able to contend earnestly for the faith, and prepared more fully to present the truth to others.

This we feel is well worth the time and effort which has been put forth. We believe that, had we been permitted good weather, we would have had full houses and splendid results numerically as well as in attendance and interest in Bible study. Certainly the Lord is able to make all things work together to his glory.

GEO. E. CONE.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

It was the writer's good fortune to be permitted to spend a part of the month of January in a meeting with our church at Milledgeville. I have been associated with the present pastor, Rev. Geo. E. Cone, in past years and it was a real pleasure to be privileged to work with him. He is absolutely true to the Word, a thing of vital importance these days, and is doing a fine piece of work. I found here some whom I had met while at Sunnyside, Washington, and renewed old friendships.

I landed at Milledgeville in the midst of real winter weather and this condition maintained throughout the entire meeting. Ice and snow and then more ice and snow. With the thermometer at zero and below, the going was anything but pleasant. Despite all this there was an interest that was commendable. Even when the pastor and evangelist had not faith to expect any one, the faithful ones were there. One evening, in the midst of a storm, we were without lights. In spite of this, fourteen were out for the Bible study and by use of candles the work was carried on. We got a little taste of conditions as they were in by-gone years and appreciate just a little better the blessings that have come through the discoveries of men.

Under these conditions it was next to impossible to get the unsaved to the services. On very few occasions were there unsaved in the audience. One cheering feature of the meeting is that so many of the young people were definitely interested in the Bible study and the result will be entirely worthwhile in the lives of these who are to be the future leaders of the activities of the church.

I had my home with the pastor. Brother and Sister Cone did everything possible for my comfort. I appreciate their every effort and shall remember with great pleasure the hours of real fellowship we had. They are wielding a large influence in the lives of the young people of the church and community and the years ahead will bear the fruit of their labor.

A liberal free-will offering was given the evangelist on the last Sunday of the meeting.

Despite all the handicaps of the meeting. I enjoyed my stay with the Milledgeville folks and shall look back upon our fellowship with pleasure, shall rejoice in the new friendships made, and shall be glad to know of the continued success in their work.

I am now back in Canton trying to get things in shape for our special meeting which is to begin February 17. A fine crowd greeter the pastor on Sunday morning and a spirit of cooperation is manifest that should bring success in the months ahead.

J. C. BEAL.

GENEVA'S ONE DARK MEMORY

I had not finished in the previous letter all I wanted to say about Geneva. We took one of the tours one afternoon and saw most of the important sights. I think I mentioned most of the important ones. There is one monument, however, in Geneva which always arouses my saddest thoughts. That is the monument raised to the memory of Servetus on the spot where Calvin allowed him to be burned. That act is one which will cloud Calvin's fame to the last hours of history. One can abate something of the blame we must heap upon him, if we remember that Calvin had come out of a church which believed in destroying men and women who were heretics. Yet, he was a reformer. He had set himself against the doctrines and practices of that church. However, he was so much the victim of his "logic box" that he was willing to allow a man who differed from him to be burned at the stake. I have no doubt that Servetus was a pestilential fellow. Most men are who oppose our views. He probably said things which made Calvin look very small and mean. People who differ from us sometimes have that propensity. Possibly he was a man of intemperate words. Good men sometimes are. But, whatever his faults Servetus was a fellow Christian trying to serve his Master in the way he thought best. He should have been tolerated in brotherly kindness. He might have labored with or even belabored with good strong words, but he should not have been burned.

Well, the modern Calvins are much the same, although they are not as much ashamed of their work as Calvin was of his. Calvin never boasted of what he had done, in fact he rather avoided the subject, and if it was pushed to his attention he rather apologized for his deed. There are few of the modern Calvins who have yet shown any shame.

We had a long ride from Geneva to Paris. It is 380 miles, and took us from 12 noon to 10:15 at night. We started out on what might have been termed the "fast snail" until we struck the main line from Marseilles to Paris at Bellegarde. From that point on we certainly did go. Of course they have no such trains as the Twentieth Century or the Broadway. But it was a good European train.

Paris seems to me to be run down at the heel. It is much dirtier than I remembered it. The buildings look old and are not kept up well. About the inhabitants there is a look of poverty. These French common people are poor, or at least give one that impression, much more so than the people of Italy or Switzerland. We see lots of old men going about in very poor clothes. Many young ones look as if they had not had a good meal. They wear poor clothes. That is less true of the French women one sees upon the street, but they do not look as well dressed as I remember them 20 years ago. They certainly know they have had a war. The only ones I have seen over here who seem to be getting along all right are the Germans. Now, I may be mistaken. It may be that I am still moved by memories of the war. Or, it may be that only the Germans who are better off travel. The last is probably true. However, Germans aside from Americans are the ones who travel. All through the Orient the Americans predominated. Yet, in India we found one large ship of the Nord-Deutscher Lloyd with a cargo of Germans touring the East. When we got as far as Egypt, they were most numerous next to Americans. They have been growing more numerous among the tourists ever since. We saw crowds of them in Palestine, in Italy. The impression one gains is that the Germans are able to travel. I notice also that those who eat at the hotels we stay at always have plenty of wine and beer, and smoke good cigars. They travel well. What I should see if I went to Germany, of course, I am unable to say. When you talk to any of them you may meet on the trains or in the hotels, they complain a great deal about the heavy taxes they have to pay in order to pay the War Indemnity to the Allies. They are poor sports.

I am not sure that the French are much better. They are a thrifty people. They are taxed heavily, but not heavy enough to balance the budget. The consequence is that the French franc, which normally should be worth 20 cents, is worth less than 4 cents. What has happened to the money? Here right now one sees the best example of the working of what in economics is called Gresham's Law of Money I have ever seen. This law states that when two kinds of money, a gold or silver, on the one hand and a cheap money like paper or copper on the other, circulate together, the poorer drives out the better, unless the government makes the poorer as good as the other by exchanging good money for cheap. Now, there are few silver coins left in France, and I am told practically no gold coins are in circulation. I get only paper and copper with some brass coins issued by the French Chambers of Commerce. Why is that? Simply that when France failed to balance her budget, issued so much paper money that she could not redeem it with gold on demand or even with silver, the gold and silver were worth so much more than the token money that men bought up all the gold and silver and sent it abroad or melted it down. Now, Poincare is going to attempt to stabilize the franc at 4 or 5 cents July first, by cutting down the expenditures to equal the income, and by redeeming the brass, copper and paper in silver or gold, i. e., by returning to the gold standard.

This money situation is one of the explanations of the poor condition of the lower classes in France today. Wages always rise less slowly than prices. When anything disturbs the value of the unit of money changes go on in wages and prices of goods. Usually that makes a wide divergence between the price level and the wage level to which people have been accustomed. It means riches for some who know how to make use of their opportunities, but it means poverty to those who do not.

My, my, when shall we learn some of these simple economic and social principles which make it so apparent that War does not pay. Even the victors in war today lose. I am not sure that Germany did not win the war in an economic sense. England and France will suffer from this war for a century to come. We have suffered nothing compared with them. Whatever you may think of the British, you have to admit that they just drew their belts a little tighter and said, "We shall pay our war debts." There are many things I do not like about the English, but they are good sports. They have financial integrity. They are paying an ordinary income tax of 20%, and those who have larger incomes pay much more. How would you like to pay one-fifth of what you earn up to $800 to the government? Well, that is the British situation. And they are not grumbling about it to anyone. No wonder these Europeans envy the Americans and think they might well forgive the war debt. They see thousands of us traveling about, having money to spend, and they think it is hard that they had to fight the war and pay for it too. Moreover, so many of these American tourists are such asses. They swagger, throw their money around in tips, and let on as if they were the lords of creation. They are not so many but they attract attention, and all of us are judged by them. On the other hand, some of us are rather thrifty and are frugal with our tips, or give none, spend as little as we can, and then we get cursed for not spending money among these poor people who lost the most from the war. Well, it's a case of "Damned if you do, and damned if you don't." Americans are not loved. They are envied. They are hated. But that fine spirit which welcomed us when we came into the war has evaporated. We must not be too hard on them. The French are hard pressed. They are too poor to feel very generous. They have suffered more than any of us can possibly conceive. Think of the homes which today are mourning for the loss of one or more loved ones. Women I see pushing carts around Paris today whose supporters were killed in the war! Millions killed or wounded! Then her financial condition is so bad that it does not help the disposition. We have been through the Louvre pretty thoroughly. It is indeed a wonderful gallery and museum. Its riches are incomparable. John has greatly interested in it.

One afternoon we took a tour down to Versailles. It was well worth while, as you know. It is all the richer in historical associations now since the Peace Conference. Paris, May 6, 1928. J. L. GILLIN.

DIVINE LOVE REBUFFED

This was the sad lament which registered the grief which the Savior felt when his love was spurned and rebuffed by those whom he came to seek and to save. John spoke truly when he wrote the words in his first chapter, "He came unto his own and his own received him not." Deeper yet was the sting of grief when he stood on the heights that commanded a view of Jerusalem and shed tears because his own knew not the day of their visitation. His longing to bring them into fellowship with the Father and his profound sorrow because of their unbelief finds eloquent expression in the immortal words, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killest the prophets and ston-est them that are sent unto thee! How oft would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, but ye would not." It is the wail of a love so divine, so infinitely rich and impressive that only those who are "born from above" can measure its beauty and its depth. Christ gave Nicodemus a glimpse of that love when he uttered those wonderful words which are the Gospel in a nutshell. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life"—words that make an appeal to the heart such as no preachments of man can ever make. Here is an offer of life to the human race that is dead in trespasses and in sins which only the few are ready to welcome and receive; for many are called but few chosen. The saddest tragedy in life is man's rejection of God's abounding love in Christ. "How oft would I, but ye would not," rings down through the centuries as Christ's great lamentation. It is a heart-rending fact, that "wide is the gate, and broad the way that leadeth to destruction, and many go in thereat." The words of Christ still keep ringing in men's ears, "And ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life."

O Thou giver of light and life, grant that our ears may be open to hear thy blessed invitation, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Remove the blindness of our hearts that we may see thee and know thee. Amen.—The Lutheran.

AN ESSAY ON RABBITS

Little children, one of the "best citizens" in our town has just been to a bad movie.

He is disgusted with the picture that was shown.

But did he get up and go out in order to express his disgust?

Oh, no. He sat through it to the end.

Why?

Because he was afraid of being called peculiar.

When he did go out, did he go to the manager and voice his protest against a bad picture?

He did not.

Why?

Because he is a coward.

Are a great many "best citizens" disgusted with bad movies in their town?

They are.

Do they ever get up in a body and go out and tell the manager what they think of the picture?

They do not.

Why not?

Afraid of being peculiar.

If a dozen "best citizens," men and women, would go out together in the middle of a bad film and register a protest with the manager would it have any effect in cleaning up the film business?

It would have tremendous effect.

Do good people in the churches complain a good deal about bad films?

They do. In private.

Could they bring the movie people to time and clean up the entire situation if they went in a body to a bad film and went out together and told the manager why?

They could.

Why don't they?

Why were there not five righteous men in Sodom to protest against its iniquity?

Answer: This is an essay on rabbits.—Christian Herald.

problem. They found men in the darkness and they left men in the darkness. Why was this? What was it that made the greatest of human philosophies powerless to rescue men from intellectual pessimism and moral degradation?

Dr. George G. Findlay, great English scholar and expositor, gives the right answer. "The philosophic conceptions of Plato and Plutarch were too speculative and ideal to affect the common mind; they were powerless to move the heart, to possess the imagination and will. These enlightened men scarcely attempted to overthrow the idols of the populace; and their teachings offered a feeble and slight resistance to the tide of moral corruption. False religions can be destroyed only by the real. The concrete and actual is displaced by the more moral actual, never by abstractions. It was faith in a living and true God, in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ as the supreme fact of the Universe, the enthroned Almighty and All-holy Will bent upon blessing and saving men, that struck down the idols, that transformed society and reversed the stream of history. It was not belief in "the Divine" as the highest category of human thought, as the Substance behind phenomena, the unknown and unknowable depositary of the collective powers of nature. Such ideas, at the best, shed but a cold glimmering light upon the path of daily toil and suffering; they proved themselves nerveless and pitiless, all too faint to encounter the shock of passion and to master the turbulence of flesh and blood. Not in the name of Pythagoras or Plato did the Greek find salvation." Amen.

It was the late President Mullins who once spoke of certain types of philosophy as a sort of "metaphysical cliff-climbing." Now cliff-climbing is fascinating business for those who are willing to take the risks, and it does provide exercise of a kind, but it is not the most essential thing for a dying world of men. Exercise is not to be despised, of course, but men need life more than intellectual exercise.

There is no life in Plato. History should teach us that much. For life we must come to Jesus Christ, the Lord of Life. "For there is none other Name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved."

The devil can make a good man very sure of the truth of a fallacy.

OUR LITTLE READERS

ANALYZING GOOD LUCK

Uncle Joseph Carson had been visiting his brother's family only a week, but during that time he had heard from a dozen different boys that Dick Balmer was the luckiest boy in Dayton. His nephews told him so several times a day, and the neighbor boys and school friends of Jesse and Julius Carson repeated the assertion.

"How do you mean lucky?" asked Uncle Joseph.

"Why, just downright fortunate," said Julius positively. "Mr. Brace took him for a camping trip in the Fall, and all the fellows were wild to be chosen. Perfectly glorious time, uncle! Two weeks in the Michigan woods with hunting and fishing and all that."

"And if there's a paying job anywhere that fellow gets it," said Jesse enviously. "The rest of us get the two-for-a-penny tasks, while people run after Dick with the big ones."

"What do you think he's landed now?" put in Fred Forbes, who had just joined the group in the sitting room. "Going to tutor that crippled boy of Mr. Turner's—the new family that moved into the big main house. I could have done that as easy as anything, for the little boy is only in the fourth grade. All Dick has to do is to keep him up with his problems and read to him every day. Some people get all the snaps."

"And I don't see how they do it," groaned Luke Richards. "I was the very first applicant for the place of taking tickets at the soldiers' entertainment, but Dick got that too. Talk about luck! That fellow has all the luck going."

Lucy Carson was quietly picking a flower to pieces, studying its parts for her botany class in the school, unmoved by the talk of her thirteen-year-old twin brothers and their friends.

Uncle Joseph picked up a flower minus three petals, and held it up before the discontented boys.

"Here, boys," he said. "Lucy's analyzing this flower. Why don't you pick Dick's luck to pieces as she takes this flower apart, and see why he has all the good fortune?"

The boys stared, thinking Uncle Joseph must be losing his wits, but that gentleman was on coolly: "Let's begin. Now let's take off the first petal. How are Dick's studies in school?"

"He's the best pupil in the eighth grade," said Jesse.

"First rate! Is he prompt—punctual?"

The boys had to admit that he was always on time. Then followed such questions as whether he was good-natured, courteous, studious, obliging, fair in games, anxious to please and determined to succeed. As the analyzing process went on, and one by one the petals of Dick's character were held up to view, the boys began to look sheepish.

"It kind of looks as if Dick works for everything he gets in the way of luck," said Julius shamefacedly. "Maybe if some of the rest of us stood as well in school and in games as Dick does we'd have good luck too."

"Not good luck, but good management," said Fred Forbes. "It seems the only secret of the whole thing is hard work."

"That's the open secret of all good luck," said Uncle Joseph briskly. "If you see anyone who is successful in business or in games or school or anywhere, just pick his good luck to pieces, and you will find that it all runs back to hard work and common politeness. Don't forget that, if you want to succeed and be happy."—Exchange.

KEEPING SUNDAY

There are enough holidays for most of us. Sunday differs from other holidays in the fact that there are fifty-two of them every year. Therefore, on Sundays go to church.

Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees, or by a running brook, or in a man's own house just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold facts the average man does not thus worship or thus dedicate himself! If he stays away from the church he does not spend his time in good works or in lofty meditation.—Theodore Roosevelt.

IN THE SHADOW

YOCUM—"Her sun has gone down while it was yet day." But we rejoice in the fact that as the sun goes down on one orb it rises again in all of its splendor to shine upon another. Likewise those who die in union with the Lord shall rise again "in the power of His arm." "We are dead and 'yield ourselves unto God.' For 'if we be dead in Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him."

At the early age of thirty-one years and one month, Mrs. Lloyd Yocum of Ellet was called to her reward. She was a loyal friend of the Brethren Church of Ellet, Ohio. Although frail of constitution she faced the world bravely bearing the marks of her Savior in her shining countenance, cheerful words and helping hands. She leaves to remember her in a bright and good son, her husband, daughter, mother, stepfather, a brother, Wesley of Ellet, two half brothers and many other relatives and friends. Services were conducted February 2, by the writer at the funeral home at Ellet.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

V. THE FAITHFUL STEWARD

By Rev. J. L. Kimmel

This great country in which it is our good fortune to be citizens, has, we are told, outclassed the whole world in the accumulation of wealth. We are also told that a great period of unprecedented prosperity is before us.

This is good news even to the Christian people, for the Church of Christ cannot possibly hope to promote her interests in the world without money.

Christ recognized this truth when he said, "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness so that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

Every person no matter how great the opportunities cannot make money—making money and saving money is a gift of God.

Blessed is that man who is able to make money and then use it for a righteous purpose.

The Brethren people are beginning to see more and more their opportunities and also their responsibilities. Now since Dr. Bell has passed the Two Hundred Thousand ($200,000) Dollar mark for Ashland College Endowment we may begin to think of an endowment for Ministerial Relief. You want to remember that the Board of Benevolence is an incorporated institution and that the endowment campaign has already started.

Through the Jesse Eyman Estate the Board of Benevolence has come into possession of more than ten thousand ($10,000) dollars as a permanent endowment fund.

We should have a number more such men in our church who could see the opportunity of this righteous cause.

The other churches have been raising millions for Ministerial Relief and we must do so by the thousands and have a permanent fund or else our ministerial ranks will become depleted and the work must suffer.

What is Man?

The Suicide of "Science"

Darwin's Horrid Doubt

"Thinking" without Thinking

by
Alva J. McClain

LOSS of belief in the existence of God, so common in our day, would seem to be the utmost limit in the way of scepticism. But now there comes forth still another form of unbelief. Having dispensed with God, the unbelievers are turning their attention to man. A group of pseudo-scientists, together with their satellites, have abandoned belief in the existence of man. They deny the existence of "man" in the ordinary sense of that word, that is, man as a being with mind, personality, freewill and moral responsibility.

What we call "man," they say, is only an animal organism which reacts automatically to outside stimuli; and what we call "thought" is really nothing but certain glandular and muscular responses which take place somewhere in the region of man's neck. Of course, it follows that for such a being there could be no freedom or moral responsibility, since all his actions are rigidly determined by the stimuli of his environment. Such, in brief, is the scheme offered by the new cult.

PSYCHOLOGICALLY, it is called "Behaviorism." And some one, with a sense of humor, has defined a "behaviorist" as a "philosopher who has made up his windpipe that he has no mind." The pope of the new cult is Dr. J. B. Watson; its prophet is H. L. Mencken; and Mr. Clarence Darrow completes the trinity.

The worshippers are many. Its popularity may possibly be explained by the fact that it relieves man of all moral responsibility. Man, according to the theory, must do whatever he does. To blame him for his conduct is absurd. And of course, all this is very convenient for those modern souls who always try to do what they want to do.

THE rise of such a cult should not surprise us. When men abandon belief in the existence of a Personal God, how could we expect them to keep on believing in the existence of man as a person created in the "image of God?"

In this theory of man, the so-called "free thought" has arrived at the blind alley of self-annihilation. While attempting to maintain its boasted freedom from "theological interference," it has reached the astonishing conclusion that there is no such a thing as "freedom," and finally that there is no such thing as a mind which "thinks." Thus man, having set out to follow the truth no matter where it led, finishes by denying the possibility of truth. And the psychologists, who started to explain the nature of "knowledge," conclude by proving that knowledge is impossible. That which began confidently as "science" ends by destroying itself.

The rather curious aspect of the matter is that the "Behaviorists" apparently do not see where they have landed. Having proven to their own satisfaction that "thinking" is an illusion, still they insist that the rest of us must accept what they "think" about "thinking." Not even the Roman Catholic church ever asked men to do anything so absurd.

DARWIN, one of the greater deities of the cult, and who is partially responsible for laying its foundations, once had a remarkable premonition of the end to which the thing would at last come. In a letter to a friend he wrote, "But then with me the horrid doubt always arises whether the convictions of man's mind, which has been developed from the mind of lower animals, are of any value or at all trustworthy. Would anyone trust the convictions of a monkey's mind, if there are any convictions in such a mind?"

Darwin evidently saw farther than his disciples, for his "horrid doubt" has today become a finished dogma. And, mark well, it destroys science as well as religion, if accepted. This new psychology is like the snake, described by Dr. Mullins, which in the presence of danger begins to swallow its tail and keeping on swallowing until nothing is left.

HERE we have the remarkable paradox of thorough-going "evolutionary science." Having used the so-called "scientific method" to show that man is only a complex animal organism with no more mind than a monkey, it now tells us that the conclusions of such a mind cannot be trusted.

Well, it is no secret that some of us have suspicioned the conclusions of this "school" for some time. But we still believe that

Questions and Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

9. What is the meaning of the word "Advocate" in 1 John 2:1?

The passage referred to reads, "My little children, these things write I unto you that ye may not sin. And if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:..."

To answer this question fully one should have all the passages where this word, in the original, occurs before him. These passages are: John 14:16, 26; 15:26 and 16:7. In each of these passages the word is translated "Comforter."

The original Greek word is parakletos, equivalent to the English form Paraclete. The word is derived from para, along side of or to the side and kaleo, to call or summon. Hence the word means originally, one who is called to the side of another to aid him. It is used in classical Greek of an advocate or legal counsellor. Later usage seems to have developed the idea of one who comforts.

We may next note that it is used only by St. John in the New Testament. Also that in the passages indicated from the Gospel its reference is to the Holy Spirit, while in the Epistle it refers to our Lord Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit is another Advocate or helper according to the Gospel. I would prefer the word Advocate or Helper in each of these passages.

10. Will you give a good popular definition of God?

This will perhaps be difficult to do. I may give the readers two statements from great writers that may be helpful. "God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth."—The Westminster Catechism. "God is the infinite and perfect Spirit in whom all things have their source, support, and end."—Strong.

But why try to define when the terms of the definition require more explanation than the original word? There are some words that can not be defined. We may often form the best conception of the meaning of a term by description. At any rate we can know God best by what he does, by his modes of activity, by the revelations of himself. The finest statement of the Christian conception of God I know is that given by Clarke. It reads thus: "God is the personal Spirit, perfectly good, who in holy love creates, sustains and orders all." Quoting again he says: (1) The nature of God: He is a personal Spirit.

(2) The character of God: He is perfectly good.

(3) The relation of God to all other existence: He creates, sustains and orders all.

(4) The motive of God in relation to all other existence: His motive is holy love."

11. Does the Old Testament idea of God and that of the New Testament stand in contrast, or do they supplement each other?

From the beginning of Revelation God disclosed himself more and more fully in the historic process until we see him in his highest manifestation in Jesus Christ. He is the same God throughout the whole process of disclosure. Who he is, what he does, what his attributes and characteristics are become more and more clearly defined. At last in the highest conception we can form of him he stands revealed as "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Paul said, "In him (that is, in Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." The writer to the Hebrews, 1:1, says, "He (Jesus Christ) is the effulgence of his (God's) glory, and the very image of his (God's) substance...."

The Growing Unity of Dunkerism

There has been manifest in many quarters a growing friendliness among the divided ranks of Dunkerism, and an increasing disposition to fraternize and cooperate. For a number of years this drifting together has been apparent. But there has been a noticeable reluctance on the part of church leaders to say anything definite that could be put into print, or to commit themselves to anything tangible. They were somewhat like two bashful young lovers, whose days of courtship had not reached the point of courage and frankness. But now men are beginning to find the courage to speak out on the subject that is of such vital interest to all. They are beginning to think in terms of possible agreements and to commit themselves to something definite, not officially, of course, but individually and in small groups. And because this is true, a day of hope has begun to dawn.

The most pronounced and tangible statement that has come to our notice is that which was published in the Evangelist two weeks ago under the signature of Rev. Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. As will be remembered, it was a paper read before a joint meeting of the ministers of the Church of the Brethren and of the Brethren church of the city of Johnstown, and contained a commendable outlined suggestion as a basis of approach on the part of the two branches of the Dunker fraternity. And the fact that this paper came to the Evangelist with the unanimous approval of the ministers of the two groups and the recommendation for publication is significant. It is evident from that fact that the two groups of Dunkerism in that community have begun to realize the folly of division and have begun to take their courtship seriously. The points of agreement and the principles outlined as a basis of approach by Brother Ashman are worthy of wide consideration, and should be the beginning of a period of frank, friendly, considerate discussion of our agreements and the advantages of a reunited fraternity.

In Ohio there has been developing a friendly approach that is far-reaching in its possible consequences. Each year at the Ohio Pastors' Convention which meets in Columbus the latter part of January there is a period of two or three hours during that convention given to denominational luncheons. For three years the ministers of the Church of the Brethren and those of the Brethren church have been lunching together, and the approach was first made by the ministers of the Church of the Brethren. This last year the discussion became very frank and definite regarding methods of cooperation and means of promoting a popular demand for union. The editor has had the privilege of being present at these three fraternal luncheons and has been delighted to notice the growing spirit of understanding and of frankness. We are not authorized to report any definite proposals, as Brother Ashman made, for none such were offered. But we can make mention of the following points which were discussed with much candor and in which practically every one present participated. There was no voice of disagreement on any point but quite general agreement expressed. These points are worthy of consideration by other such groups.

1. That the two denominations should have and maintain a Committee on Comity, or Fraternal Relations, or Interchurch Cooperation, or whatever each group might choose to designate it, authorized to meet and consider such problems as properly relate to such committees.

2. That each group in launching home mission enterprises should avoid any attempts to build up on another's territory and that the existence of two Dunker churches (one a "Progressive" and one a "Conservative") so located as to be competing for the same territory is to be deplored. And further, it was suggested that it would be the part of wisdom, in the case of establishing new mission points where neither church is located, and where members of both branches are resident, to have the mission boards of both branches represented make a survey of the field jointly and discover which branch has the better claim upon the field, which has the better chance of succeeding, and which is the better able to advance the cause in that particular field. We understand this has been done already in certain localities.

3. That the giving of letters of membership on the part of each group to the other is desirable; and especially in communities where both branches are not represented, the branch that is located there should be privileged to solicit letters of membership on behalf of members of the opposite branch moving into that community and to receive them into full fellowship.

4. That fellowship meetings in the various localities of ministers of the two branches of Dunkerism should be encouraged, as well as other means of building up the spirit of cooperation.

5. It was suggested that the exchange of ministers for both pastoral and evangelistic services should be looked upon with favor.

6. It was suggested that in communities where both branches have churches and neither are able to provide separately the proper pastoral and equipment needs of the community, that we should give encouragement to a cooperative plan whereby both groups could be served by one pastor and ultimately brought to unite their resources for the providing of proper local equipment, while each group would be permitted to present its own denominational missionary, educational and other projects for support.

It is taken for granted that not all these suggestions would be fully acceptable to all parts of either brotherhood at present, but there are a number of localities in both fraternities that have already been considering these and other similar points, and in some quarters some of them are actually being put into practice.

Surely two church groups with such a common precious heritage and with such identical faith and practice, ought to be about ready to lay aside prejudices and begin to talk points of agreement and methods of cooperation. Dunker people are historically a Bible people. They have come up through the years with both feet on the Bible; they have not quibbled about the practice or questioned the veracity of any portion of the blessed Book. And if they still profess to cling to such a position, why should they not soon be willing to forget their old differences, which are not differences any longer, and consider how they may go forward together. People who endeavor to keep conscience thus sensitive in matters of faith and practice can scarcely be content long to labor under the sin of division.

Starving and Freezing in China

"The worst famine in fifty years" is the authoritative word from the famine area of China. A cablegram just recently received from Shanghai says that it is reliably estimated that "twenty million in Kansu, Honan and Shensi are starving and freezing this winter." One in every ten is a child, and tens of thousands of these children are without adult relatives. Many have died and others will soon die unless outside aid comes speedily. In desperation they are already "eating clay, tree bark, pig weed, grass roots, chaff—anything to stop the gnawing hunger. The cabled stories of the sale of babies and young girls indicate how desperate the condition has become in the Shantung famine area, and remind us of the record of a terrible famine in Samaria in Bible times when mothers killed their children for food. In that case the lepers outside the city walls, suddenly finding themselves in the midst of an abundance of food left by the frightened enemy of the besieged city, hastened to bring word to the starving inhabitants. Christian America also finds itself surrounded by plenty, and even luxuries, in most parts, and we cannot but believe our fortunate people will respond to this urgent call for relief.

It should be said that the government of China is doing what it can to feed its starving millions, but it cannot cope with the situation alone. Recent cablegram says: "Government appropriates two million more to raise through surtax. Leading Shanghai shops give five per cent of daily gross income. Seven thousand of Honan refugees arrive at Nanking. ... More coming for food. ..." For five dollars a month you can become the father and mother to some homeless orphan, saving its life and preparing it for self-support.

The wise use of all famine Child Relief funds is assured by the fact that actual relief operations will be directed by the National Child Welfare Association of China, of which the Hon. H. H. Kung, Minister of Industries and Commerce, is chairman. Those who wish to help in the relief work may send their gifts to the Association for the Welfare of the Children of China, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We naturally prefer life's pleasant ways, but the noblest and most abiding qualities result from its disciplines.

Some professed Christians never get the help of heaven because they are unwilling to do their plain duty.

Don't expect gospel measure returns on miserly measured investments.

The work at Lanark, Illinois, under the pastoral leadership of Brother Harold Fry, is making progress notwithstanding the heavy winter weather that slows up activities in that section. Three were recently received by baptism.

Some of the most effective sermons are built around the lives of some of God's worthy saints, and this week Brother Thoburn C. Lyon brings us a beautiful lesson from the life of a noble sister who was a former parishioner and who recently passed to her heavenly reward—Sister Finn of Washington C. H., Ohio.

Brother A. T. Wirick, president of the Board of Trustees of the Shipshewana summer resort and conference center, writes of some of the improvements that are being made, and from all that is being done it certainly seems that the management of affairs is in wise and energetic hands. Those who are able and disposed to lend a hand in the promotion of this commendable undertaking will find suggestions in Brother Wirick's letter. Plans are under way to make this coming summer's programs the finest that Shipshewana has known.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the first general conference of the mission churches in our Argentine district held at Rio Cuarto, January 10 to 14, where thirty-five visiting delegates were in attendance. It was a splendid success—the delegates were successfully entertained, the program was an inspiration, and their coming together meant much in the way of making stronger the bonds of Christian fellowship and of centering the membership upon the great objective of building up "a self-supporting native church."

Another appeal is made this week for support of the Superannuated Ministers and the Brethren Home. February 24th is the day set aside by General Conference for the lifting of an offering for this two-fold purpose. If for some churches that date should not be suitable, of course, it is your privilege to select a more convenient date. The main thing is to take the offering. Send money for Superannuated Ministers' Funds to J. J. Wolfe, Secretary, North Manchester, Indiana, and for the Brethren Home to Henry Rinehart, Treasurer, Flora, Indiana.

We are in receipt of the 1929 "Year Book" of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California. It is a neatly printed publication of 52 pages and cover, containing the officary, membership roll, pictures of the church's missionaries, full information regarding the Sunday school organization in all its departments and classes, a detailed financial report and explanation of their financial system and budget for the year, followed by the church constitution and telephone list. It is the most complete church year book that comes to our desk.

News has reached Ashland that Brother A. C. Hendrickson, who lives at Ontario, California, and is a member of the La Verne church, has suffered a stroke of paralysis. Brother Hendrickson was formerly a member of the Ashland College faculty and bursar and is widely and favorably known in the brotherhood for his business acumen. Let his many friends pray for him in his affliction.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his College Endowment canvass in two of our Iowa churches—Garwin and Des Moines. At Garwin he experienced considerable difficulty in getting in touch with the members, once because of the "gumbo" mud and at another time because of snow. At Des Moines he found the little band struggling bravely with their burden of local expenses and did not press them for Endowment Funds, but they made a small offering. From the two places he received $555.00, which makes the total of the present campaign to stand at $202,878.20.

Brother George A. Copp, treasurer of the Southeastern District Mission Board, reminds the churches of that district of the amount of their apportionment, and urges that payments be made. One of the strongest reasons for prompt payment on the part of the churches is the fact that they have something to show for what they are spending—one of the most promising and rapidly growing mission churches in the brotherhood—Winchester, Virginia. Besides it is an undertaking that all have had a part in launching and for which all are responsible.

Our good correspondent from Nappanee, Indiana, reports that the work is going forward and that the people have the spirit of work. That will make for success in any undertaking. They enjoyed a very helpful series of Bible lectures by Dr. G. W. Rench in December, and just now they are rejoicing over the success of their evangelistic campaign under the leadership of their pastor, Brother S. M. Whetstone, who was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richer, song leader and musicians. This was Brother Whetstone's fifth such meeting in this church. There were fifteen additions to the membership and the church was left in the soul-winning spirit which is expected to result in another ingathering at Easter.

Dr. J. L. Gillin's article this week deals with his visit to some of the battle fields of France and observations made concerning events and scenes connected with the terrible war. If those in our fair land who are indifferent to the awful havoc wrought by war, or who look upon it as a necessary evil about which they can do little or nothing, or if those who, in the midst of their abundance, have been annoyed at the insistence on the part of France that the terrible ruin and devastation wrought upon her land shall be taken into account in the settlement of the issues of the late war,—if such could visit the scenes of that awful holocaust, their attitudes might be changed. Furthermore, such a visit might bring us all to a keener sense of the horrors of war and stir us to a more loyal support of programs that aim to outlaw war and build for peace.

In a personal communication from Brother W. S. Crick, pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, which is receiving aid from both the Ohio and the General Home Mission Boards, we have the following encouraging news. He writes: "You will probably be interested in learning that Fremont went 'over the top' last Sunday in the matter of providing $500.00 for curtailment of the church debt, and the $135.00 interest due. ... This means that in the last two years, Fremont has paid $1,000.00 on the principal and $570.00 interest, a total of $1,570.00 on the debt, and at the same time has met all current expenses promptly, pledged $805.00 to Ashland College and expended $200.00 in repairs and improvements." This shows that Fremont is keeping faith with the Ohio Mission Board by endeavoring to liquidate their building debt as soon as possible, when they will not need the help they are now receiving for pastoral support. These good people and their faithful pastor are to be commended. Dr. Beal is announced to begin a meeting there March 11th.

Facts Relating to the Brethren Home

By J. Allen Miller, President of the Board

The time for the Annual offering to be made for the maintenance of The Brethren Home is here. Sunday, February 24 is the date. We are desirous in this brief article to set forth some of the facts relating to the Home, its organization, its purpose and its needs.

First. The Brethren Home is an Incorporation under the Laws of Ohio and is controlled by the General Conference of the Brethren church. The immediate management and control of the Home is entrusted to a Board of Nine Trustees elected by the General Conference. The Board at present is constituted as follows: Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana; Ira Fudge, Gratis, Ohio; W. V. Pearson, Flora, Indiana; Melvin D. Kerr, Bryan, Ohio; A. V. Kimmel, Los Angeles, California; G. W. Brumbaugh, Dayton, Ohio; Ephraim Culp, Goshen, Indiana; Martin Shively and J. Allen Miller, both of Ashland, Ohio. The care and management of the Home are under the Superintendent and Matron, Brother and Sister John Briggs.

Second. The purpose of the Home is set forth explicitly in the Object of Corporation. It is as follows: The Object of this Corporation shall be to better provide and care for the aged and infirm members of the Brethren church, who may be incapable of self-maintenance, and all such homeless and needy children as may be reasonably accommodated under proper regulations.

It should be added here that by action of the Board no children are at present received. There are two reasons, namely, insufficient capacity and the strict requirements of the Indiana Laws governing orphanages. Until larger equipment is made possible the Board has decided not to undertake the care of orphaned children. Philanthropic minded people should bear this need in mind.

Third. We are very anxious for every member of the church and every friend of the Home to know just what we have in the way of holdings and property and what our needs are. Accordingly we give you here a brief summary of the Treasurer's report made at General Conference at Ashland, Ohio, in August last. This report was submitted by Brother Henry Rinehart and covers the year beginning August 1, 1927 and ending July 31, 1928. It is as follows:

Values of all Properties

Farm Lands located at Flora, Ind. ....	$30,000
Administration Building .....	36,000
Town Property (Flora) .....	7,000
Fixtures, furniture, stock, farm implements, etc. ....	6,875

Total valuation of all properties .....$79,875

Receipts

Cash on hand, Aug. 1, 1927 .....	$ 1,215.91
Received from Individuals .....	124.15
Received from Churches and Societies .....	1,324.49
Received from the Eyman Estate .....	1,636.23
Received from sales from Farm and by Matron .....	1,904.38
Received from all other sources .....	500.00

Total receipts from all sources .....$ 6,705.16

Expenditures

Salary Superintendent and Matron .....	$ 1,040.00
Interest on Annuities .....	1,603.00

Interest and Principal on Farm Loan .....	562.88
All other expenses including labor, heat, light, insurance, and maintenance .....	$ 2,995.38
Total expenditures .....	$ 6,201.26

Obligations

A word needs only be said on this point. The Board has two financial obligations to be set over against the above valuations. These are:

1. A balance of about $8,000 due on the last parcel of land acquired. This amount is due the LaFayette Land Bank on a long time loan and requires an annual payment of $576.98.

2. In acquiring this property and in the erection of the Administration Building the money needed came from two sources, namely, gifts and annuities. These annuities amount to $34,700 and bear interest during the lifetime of the annuitant. This entails an annual expenditure upon the Board of $1,886.50.

Fourth. The Board is proud to call the attention of the whole church through the Evangelist to this splendid acquisition to our General church holdings and interests. It is on the basis of what has been accomplished at a very small and inconsequent expenditure of the church's money that we appeal for the necessary contribution to now carry forward the work so well begun.

We also appeal for this gift from the churches on the ground of the good done in the name of the Master to those to whom we afford a home and home care.

General Conference approves our asking for fifty cents per member for the support and maintenance of this fine piece of Christian work. Our appeal is to the pastors and through them to the churches for their gift of money.

Ashland, Ohio.

The Brethren Home

By Martin Shively, D.D., Secretary of the Board of Directors

Only a few months ago, after a meeting of the Executive Committee, which was held at The Home, Dr. Miller, who has been president of the Board of Directors from the first, gave to the brotherhood a report of what we found there, as to buildings, equipment, land, and inmates. What he said through the columns of the Evangelist, could not but have been a source of keen gratification to all who read his announcement, for he showed conclusively that the church has there a plant and equipment of which it may well be proud. Some day, perhaps, with its splendid farm, it may become entirely self-supporting, but when such a probability was mentioned a year ago by one of the Directors, I said that I had no wish to see that day, at least not for a good many years. There are several reasons for such a feeling on my part. First, there ought always to be such a retreat into which not only the aged minister and his wife can come to spend their last days in comfort and quiet, but such a place is equally necessary for the aged of the laity,—folks who would otherwise be but poorly cared for, and the care of such is among the duties which fall to the church. The amount per capita, necessary to sustain it, is very small indeed, and none who are desirous of helping needy humanity, especially the needy of their own denomination, will feel otherwise than glad that an opportunity such as this is offered. Old age is often a tragic thing, for too often it brings serious physical decadence, as well as material want. And old age or death comes to us all. If advancing years brings no serious disability, we ought to thank God most sincerely, but one way in which to give tangible expression to our gratitude, is to help others who are less fortunate. If we have not reached the point at which we can be called "old," we can do something for "the rainy day" when it does come, for "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." The wise man said, "He that giveth to the poor; lendeth to the Lord," and if we are satisfied with such security as he offers, here is an opportunity to make a good investment. The one outstanding characteristic of the message of the church, is its appeal in behalf of others. It is this that leads to missionary endeavor, whether at home or abroad. It is the outstanding appeal of the college, for those who serve, as well as those who give, serve or give for others. And this is the appeal of The Home, the "others" in this instance being those who are its present beneficiaries, and who knows, but in the years to come, the "others" may be ourselves. And there is yet another side to this appeal,—none will forget what the Master said,—"inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of my brethren, ye did it unto me." Here is a story illustrative of this statement: A soldier standing on picket duty on a bitterly cold night, saw what seemed a beggar, thinly clad, and suffering keenly from the cold. Knowing that he would soon be relieved, he took off his heavy overcoat and gave it to the suffering man, asking him to bring it to his barracks next day, for he himself was warmly clad, and would not suffer during the little time until guard was changed. When relieved, he went to his bunk and was soon soundly asleep. Ere long he had a most vivid dream, in which his Lord stood by the side of his bunk, and there was no mistaking the fact that it was really the Lord upon whom he looked. Presently he noted something familiar about the great coat which draped his person, and he cried out, "Lord, where did you get my overcoat?" His visitor replied, "You gave it to me last night." The astonished man said, "No, Lord, I gave it to a poor shivering beggar." But his Lord said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." I believe, in answering this appeal, we have a real opportunity to serve our Lord, and I am sure we shall avail ourselves of it.

Old Father Time

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

We may not like him but "Dear Old Father Time" is ever in our midst, in the most somber attire, very serious, pensive, almost sad, grey-haired, bent, decrepit and with scythe in hand. A preacher recently reminded us in a timely sermon of what Father Time says to all men.

First, he says "Time flies." And who will deny it? Perhaps youth thinks otherwise but tomorrow youth will know better, for the early years pass quickly by. The child anxious for the holiday or birthday to come thinks that time drags, but soon the man and the woman realize that time does fly and find themselves urging their children to make the best of the days of youth.

Second, Father Time says "Time tests." The jeweler says "This is twenty carat gold." Time will test it. Here is a new found friend. Time will test him. Youth confesses Christ and sings "We will be true to thee till death." Time will test them.

Third, Father Time says "Time tells." Rouge and powder cannot keep away the wrinkles. Nothing can prevent the dark hair from turning to grey and silver, and the firm step from faltering. How soon father says "I can't hear quite as well as I used to, I must get a seat nearer the preacher." And mother says "I must have a Bible with larger print." Time tells. Youth should make hay while the sun shines.

What Father Time does is written upon the lives of many of our aged ministers of the Gospel who have given their lives to the Lord in his service but with little material recompense. Ask them if "Time flies" and they will tell us that three score and ten or four score or more years seem but as yesterday since they are passed.

We need not ask them if "Time tests." That fact is written indelibly upon their lives in terms of Christian character and in marks of love and loyalty and peace and victory and scars and sacrifices. Doubtless scars will count for more than degrees in the final day of accounting.

Look upon our beloved aged ministers and the fact that "Time tells" is very evident, but the marks of age only help to emphasize that these are among God's noblemen, God's chosen priesthood, God's faithful undershepherds, servants of Jehovah, worthy of their hire.

Shall the church of today, richer because of the service rendered by these faithful ones, fail to meet their needs? God forbid! The Golden Rule and "as God hath prospered" demand it. Brotherly love in Christ requires it. May our Christian gratitude be manifest in material gifts sufficient unto the need. And may the church go forward to greater victories lifting high the cross of Christ. Let all the faithful servants of Jehovah rejoice in him forevermore!

Hagerstown, Maryland.

Revival Within the Churches

By A. D. Cashman

(Moderator's address delivered at the Illiokota District Conference at Waterloo, October 3rd, 1928. Published in two parts. Part II).

(Concluded from last week)

It is generally conceded that there is an increasing number in our churches who are not born-again souls. Since it is the work of the local church to add members to the body of Christ, there is no reason why a program should not be launched within the churches to add such of these that might be saved and at the same time greatly strengthen the church for more effective work with those who are unrelated to the local church. I am aware that these are hard to reach, especially where Satan has steeled them against the grace of God with an impenetrable cloak of self-righteousness and self-satisfaction. However, we wish to make a suggestion or two concerning these that might be of help.

Before doing so, let me say that while it is impossible to altogether hinder this group from getting into our membership, there is one way to prevent some of them from so doing. This way is to eliminate the practice of going to certain non-members who are known as "pretty good people" and telling them that the church needs such as they. After patting them on the back and emphasizing their virtues, they get so puffed up that they feel no need of a Savior. The sin question is altogether evaded. In order for these important figures to get into the church where they are so badly needed, they are willing to answer what is to them certain unmeaningful questions in the affirmative and submit to what they accept as a certain initiation rite, called baptism. These unredeemed humans, by exercising their natural talents and exemplifying their morality, get into leadership. While there seems to be an upward trend and a forward movement for awhile, yet as far as progress that the Lord could bless, is concerned, there is none and the hindrance to true spiritual progress is greater. Let us try to eliminate this danger in the future.

In order to encourage these unregenerate ones to realize that they are not members of the real church of Jesus Christ and to win them to such membership, let us preach more on the depravity of man. We should rehearse what a number of outstanding Bible characters whom God blessed, said of themselves upon self-examination. Elijah said, "I am not better than my fathers." Job said, "I abhor myself." Isaiah said, "I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips." Peter said, "I am a sinful man, O Lord." Paul said, "I know that in me, that is in my flesh, there dwelleth no good thing." Let us point out how the whole world is in sin and is guilty before God as Paul did in Romans 3:9-12. Only when God gets a person to the end of himself is he ready to show his beginnings. Not until after a person is born again, does he do anything that attracts anything from God. Even then, that which God recognizes is that which God is permitted to do through that person, rather than what the saved one does by his own energy. To my mind, it is an outstanding sin of the church leaders who encourage men and women to think that they have any suspicion of a chance to be saved just because they have joined a local church, or by doing good works after they are in it.

The next suggestion we wish to make with regard to a revival among the unsaved members is to teach the ordinances of the church in the light of the doctrines of regeneration, redemption, forgiveness, justification, sanctification and glorification by the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness toward us through Jesus Christ. It is contrary to the mind of God to say that the latter is to be the fruit of obedience to the former. Let us get the cart after the horse where it belongs and point out to those who are in error that the practice of the ordinances are the natural fruit of the mercies received (without respect to human merit). By the very testimony of many, there is smug security that all is well now, since the rite of baptism by triune immersion has been administered, the Lord's Supper has been partaken of and feet washing practiced. Let us not deceive the laity and have their blood be upon our heads on the day of his appearing. No sacred ordinance should be engaged in by any who have not been regenerated, redeemed, forgiven, justified, sanctified and ready to be glorified when the Lord comes for his bride. A proper amount of emphasis on these essential doctrines would make such great emphasis on our church doctrines unnecessary, for they would follow as naturally as baptism did with the eunuch after Philip had preached to him Jesus. Of course it is our business to emphasize the doctrines that make us Brethren, but, if it be possible, let us not degrade the sacredness of them by allowing the unsaved to use them as a tool to merit grace. Let us preserve the beauty of them by discouraging, as much as possible, the practice of them by those who are not partakers of the Divine nature.

The third suggestion along this line has to do with the group who declare that they are as much saved as others in the church but who prove by their lives that they are not. For their benefit, let us remind them that according to 2 Corinthians 5:17, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, old things are passed away, behold all things are become new." Let us impress them with the fact that according to Galatians 5:19-21, they that practice the works of the flesh shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Let us warn them with the words of James 4:4 that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God," and that no enemy of God is saved. If they are depending on salvation because they have met the conditions for church membership into the local church, let us prove their mistake by revealing the mind of Jesus on the subject when he says in Matthew 15:8-9 that those who draw nigh unto him with their mouths and honor him with their lips when their hearts are far from him, worship in vain. Let us call attention to Romans 8:29 where we read that "Whom God did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." And if God foreknows that the one confessing Christ as Savior is going to live a life of wilful sin and disobedience, it is reasonable to believe that that one is not predestinated, called, justified nor does he receive any of the blessings of a born again soul.

We are not presumptuous enough to even intimate that it is possible to pick out the unsaved personally, or in groups, in order to make the suggestions practical. However, if the truth is properly presented in the class room and from the pulpit, the teachers and pastors have discharged their duties so that no member of the church need be misled about the plan of God in connection with his own condition.

A general suggestion for a revival within the churches applying to all three groups in them is centered around the following words recorded in 2 Timothy 1:7: "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." According to the stress placed upon the phrase, "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" as is recorded in Philippians 2:12, we either have a Bible which miserably contradicts itself or is woefully misinterpreted. Not that the latter quotation does not say, "work for your own salvation with fear and trembling" but rather "Work it out." It is impossible to work out that which you do not have. Besides, if we go a little farther in the chapter from which the former quotation was taken, we read in the 9th verse, "God hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." This passage is in perfect harmony with Ephesians 2:1-10, Romans 4:4-5, Romans 11:6, Titus 3:5, and all other passages taken in their proper settings. Suffice it to say, Paul in Philippians 2:12 was not referring to works for salvation, but rather that the one who has accepted the free gift by grace through faith might not "stand ashamed in the presence of Christ" according to John 2:28 in that he failed to get a full reward according to 2 John 8 or lost it altogether as expressed in 1 Corinthians 3:14-15.

Instead of preaching to our members the "spirit of fear" by telling them that they might lose their salvation by doing this or by not doing that, let us get them to settle the sin question by way of the cross and accept the free gift, the completed work, from Christ by virtue of his sacrificial death which was accepted by the Father as a satisfactory means of reconciliation between himself and the sinner. With the knowledge of salvation as a present possession (John 5:24) and the knowledge that the believer is sealed by the Spirit unto the day of redemption, (Eph. 2:80) the greatest appeal for service can then be made on the basis of love and done by the power of the Spirit. Philippians 2:13, "For it is the power of God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." It is the work done by this power that the Christian is entitled to rewards in heaven. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. 15:58).

Your Burden

By C. F. Yoder

*Come with your burden and cast it on the Lord.
He will sustain thee, as promised in his Word.
Do not distrust him, for he is ever true,
Come in your crisis and he will help you through.*

*Is your heart heavy with its load of care?
Poverty presses and sickness does not spare?
Weary and weeping you struggle with your grief?
Bring it all to Jesus and you will find relief.*

*Is your heart broken because of hope delayed?
Plans have been shattered, but do not be afraid.
All things together are working for your good,
When you are serving and trusting as you should.*

*Jesus is wiser and stronger far than we.
He is more loving than earthly friend can be.
Come with your burden, however great it seems,
He will give blessing beyond your fondest dreams.*

*Do not be forward, the Lord must have his time.
Wait till tomorrow to finish up your rhyme.
Just do today the work that you should do,
Live just for Jesus and he will live in you.*

NATION WIDE CELEBRATION

There will be a nation-wide celebration of the one hundredth and twenty-fifth anniversary of the birth of General Neal Dow, "the father of prohibition," which will be participated in by all temperance organizations, according to Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism. The anniversary falls on Wednesday, March 20.

General Dow was the author of the prohibition law of Maine, and, according to Dr. Cherrington, was, therefore, the progenitor of national prohibition, and of all efforts now being made toward world prohibition.

Churches of America will be asked, Dr. Cherrington said, to observe Sunday, March 17, in honor of the anniversary, while special public anniversary celebrations are expected to be held on the afternoon and evening of March 20.

Recently Dr. Howard H. Russell, founder of the Anti-Saloon League, accompanied by other temperance workers and by Col. Fred N. Dow of Portland, Maine, son of the temperance pioneer, placed a bouquet of chrysanthemums on the tomb of Neal Dow.

INCREASE IN MILLIONAIRES

According to Mr. Carl Snyder of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, millionaires in the United States have increased from about seven thousand in 1914 to between thirty and forty thousand during 1928. Most of these were created by the debasement of currency since the beginning of the war or by the enormous increase in the values of securities. Mr. Snyder calls attention to the fact that there has been the most gigantic manipulation of securities in recent years, and calls it the greatest gamble in history. He reminds us, too, that years of frenzied speculation and so-called prosperity are invariably followed by depression and unemployment. True prosperity consists not in the making of millionaires, but in the broadest possible diffusion of the comforts of life to the greatest number of individuals; and in order to secure this, we do not need great speculating frenzies and booms, but the calm and steady march of progress; slower, true, but far more certain of enduring reality.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CHIEF JUSTICE FLAYS AMERICAN MATERIALISM

In a recent interview Chief Justice Taft was asked, "What do you consider the most disturbing element in our national life?" His reply was to the point: "It is difficult to describe precisely, but it may be understood when I characterize it as the materialistic philosophy which places wealth and worldly success ahead of every other consideration in life. What can it profit a man to have accumulated millions if he has not at the same time maintained a clear conscience and acquired the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens?"—Christian Century.

FROM 51 TO 2,500 IN EIGHT YEARS

The city of Chicago is probably satisfied with the newspapers issued within its boundaries; people outside this metropolis say it is easy for them to issue a modern daily because the sort of thing most folk like to read about happens abundantly in this Lake Michigan community. The unexpected is also the frequent. Even one of its rivers runs backward.

But judging by an article now before us from a 1928 copy of the Chicago Daily News, something other than gang wars and political chicanery can attract the attention of the city's readers. The remarkable progress made by the North Austin Lutheran congregation, F. W. Otterbein, pastor, first caught the attention of a veteran journalist, William F. McDermott, who knows his profession. He wrote a "feature story" of the church's achievements and his city editor "played it up." Mr. McDermott's first paragraph throws the reportorial spotlight on the matter in an opening paragraph as follows:

"This is the story of a church without a kitchen or gymnasium. Yet it is the fastest growing United Lutheran church in America, and is one of the greatest churches in Chicago. Tonight 4,000 members of the church and its Sunday school and other organizations will celebrate the eighth anniversary of its founding."

No doubt North Austin has the "raw material" for the kind of congregation thus introduced to Chicago's attention; we believe many folk would doubt the existence of so many spiritually minded people among its hurrying throngs. Evidently the "front page" personages whose escapades supply notoriety to the town's observers are not real types of its masses of citizens. They are not naturally hard-boiled, self-centered, get how-you-can-but-get individuals, but just folk: just average raw material for conversion into citizenship in the Kingdom of God. Good seed, widely and boldly sown in their midst, brings forth harvests, sixty, eighty and one hundred fold. Reporter McDermott knows a banner crop of souls is bigger news than a Cicero funeral and so does his journal.—The Lutheran.

AN OBSERVATION ON PROHIBITION

Dr. W. T. Grenfell, the great missionary physician of Labrador, has said: "I saw more intoxication and more of the ill results of intoxication during the short time I was in Winnipeg, Montreal, and Toronto, than I have seen in the United States in six months. In Dallas, Texas, I met something like ten thousand superintendents of public schools, and the large majority of them were for prohibition. I have seen tens of thousands of children in the West who have never seen liquor used as a beverage. A young generation is growing up that will not want it."

The observations of this traveler of many lands do not surprise us. We who have lived through the various stages of temperance in our home communities can testify to the difference between the present and the former conditions. Drunkenness is not in evidence on the streets nor in places of public assembly. It must hide.—(Nashville) Christian Advocate.

POPE WILL CALL ECUMENICAL COUNCIL IN 1930

It is confidently stated that Pope Pius XI has decided to convoke in 1930 an Ecumenical Council, which will be attended by all the cardinals, archbishops and bishops of the Catholic world. In the Catholic church a council is regarded as ecumenical when summoned from the entire church under the presidency of the Pope or his legates, and its decrees, when confirmed by the Pope, are binding on all the church's adherents.

The last Ecumenical Council met in 1870 and proclaimed such important doctrines as the immaculate conception, and the infallibility of the Pope. Upon the latter question, of the 671 members present 451 voted directly in the affirmative, sixty-two signified approval with certain changes of expression and eighty-eight voted "non-placet." A few days later, July 18, 1870, unanimous approval was given.

This year of 1870 also saw the downfall of the Pope's temporal power, the Italian government taking possession of Rome September 29, and proclaiming it the capital of Italy October 9. The proposed calling of the Ecumenical Council for next year is thought to indicate the return of the Pope to temporal power, by agreement with Mussolini and the Italian government. From Frederick Hollowell, newspaper correspondent, we quote the following:

"While neither the Vatican nor the Italian government has been willing to admit that a settlement of the Roman question has been reached or is even imminent, it is known that unofficial, though authorized, conversations have been taking place between representatives of the Holy See and Italy for many months, and that a solution is in prospect.

"According to the latest reports, Italy is willing to concede to the Vatican a certain area of territory immediately surrounding St. Peter's and the Vatican and extending over a few hundred acres to the south and west. The Holy See would thus have some territorial basis for becoming a sovereign power, and the Pope would be able to end the 'imprisonment' which he and his predecessors have imposed on themselves since 1870.

"Moreover, under the proposed agreement the Holy See would accept a sort of indemnity of 1,000,000,000 gold lire (about $52,000,000) for the loss of its temporal power."

The Council of 1930, if held, will be the twenty-first. It has been noted that the Council of 1870 was prorogued instead of being dissolved, so that it is, technically, still in existence.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

"The joy of Heaven means inward joy—the joy of character, the joy of goodness, the joy of likeness to the nature of God. That is the highest joy of all—the only joy worthy of making Heaven for men who are made in the image of God."—Dr. J. Paterson Smyth.

Our Worship Program

OUTLINE OF "THE FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER

ON THE HOME

MONDAY, Feb. 25.—"Children obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right" (Eph. 6:1). Read Luke 2:39-52. It is God's wise and loving arrangement that the inexperience of childhood and youth should be guided and governed by the wisdom and unselfish affection of parents. If it be true that children are losing respect for parents, and that parents are today relaxing authority over their children, it is ominous. To abandon parental discipline is not kind but cruel. It does not even make for the present happiness of the children. And for the future, it consigns to mistakes and miseries incalculable. A spoiled child is a spoiled life.

TUESDAY, Feb. 26.—"Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged" (Col. 3:21). Read Col. 3:14-21. Patience is the first virtue of the parent. How often have we seen children alienated from the love and piety of the home by the austere and exacting severity of parents! These misguided parents love their children, but they expect too much, and they demand it too soon. They forget how they also once thought and spoke as a child. "With a little more patience, and a little less temper, a gentler and wiser method might be found in almost every case."

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 27.—"And the two shall become one flesh: so that they are no more two, but one flesh" (Mark 10:8). Read 1 Peter 3:1-9. A good marriage is the most perfect unity on earth. The greatest blessing that can come to a man is to have a good wife; the greatest blessing that can be bestowed on a woman is to have a good husband. Marriage sanctified by mutual love and godliness is the foundation of society, it creates the home, imparts life and predestines the future of the world. The sweetness and the piety of the home, the joy of little children, the strength and beauty of life are all bound up in this wedded union. "To love and to cherish till death us do part." It is no temporary or trial affair. Neither is there to be any relaxing of loyalty, nor any neglect or forgetfulness.

THURSDAY, Feb. 28.—"And shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house" (Deuteronomy 6:7). Read Deuteronomy 6:6-12. Here if anywhere is to be found the secret of the Jewish people and their remarkable history. Their religion was founded in the home. It was the subject of conversation in the family circle. So it was made familiar to the children from their earliest years, and they never could forget it. By contrast how reticent are we on the subject of religion, and especially in our homes. Our silence gives our children the idea that religion is uninteresting, or is a matter of indifference. This thing which is of the greatest concern ought to enter more vitally into our talk at the table and the fireside.

FRIDAY, March 1.—"Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2). Read Gal. 6:1-10. After all, the final testimony is the life. Whatever my words, my conduct reveals my mind and heart. What does my life say to the other members of my family? For the sake of those I love and in obedience to my Lord I must keep sweet and unflinching in kindness.

SATURDAY, March 2.—"Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God" (1 John 4:7). Read 1 Cor. 13. The home is life's primary school for us all our lives. Love is the supreme law of the home, and also of society and of the world. We must learn the meaning of life in the home and interpret its problems by love.

ON THE CHURCH

SUNDAY, March 3.—"But if we walk, in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another" (1 John 1:7). Read Eph. 4:1-16. I shall go to church today, and I want to go to my own church. Is it then any better than other churches? Yes, for me it is, as my own home is better than any other home on earth. My own church is for me the true church. There may be other more popular churches, having more elaborate ritual, with a larger and more wealthy membership. But my church is for me the very house of God, its members the faithful children of God and its creed the very Word of God. Whatever others may claim for their church, that my church is for me.

Stories Worth Remembering on Christian Stewardship

NOTHING HELD BACK—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). Some one had said wittily enough: "Christianity is a 'personal' religion—'purse and all.'" Certainly when we give ourselves to Christ there is nothing we can hold back from him.—From the British Weekly Sent by S. Edwards, Brantford, Ontario.

HER PERSONAL WORK—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). A little girl, who had been listening to a sermon which urged efforts to bring people to Jesus, said, "I think I'll bring somebody to him." "Who will it be?" asked her father. "I think I'll bring myself first!" was the child's reply. That is one kind of evangelism that is always possible—the winning of one's own heart to Christ. We must ourselves first be saved before we can win others.—From The Christian Union Herald, Sent by Helen Palmer, Brooklyn, New York.

CHRISTIAN AND SOCIALIST GENEROSITY—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). Some one made this remark on the difference between Christianity and present-day Socialism. Socialism says: "You must give me some of yours." Christianity says: "I must give you some of mine." This is a great and striking difference. The first is the spirit of greed and gold, the second is the spirit of grace and godliness.—Sent by John Fleck, Prince Edward Island, Canada.

"I ONLY WANT YOU"—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). A brother going to spend a day in a large city, said to his invalid sister, "Can I buy anything for you dear?" "Nothing, dear; don't bring anything, I only want you. Come home as soon as you can." All that day her words rang in his ears, "I only want you." My friends, have you sometimes wanted to give to the Father prayers, tears, money, and service? His yearning call to you is, "I only want you." Consecrate yourself to him, give him all the love of your heart, and then your glad service, earnest devotion, and fervent prayers will be acceptable as evidence of a loving heart all his.—From S. S. Chronicle. Sent by Mrs. M. Watts, Ewell, Surrey, England.

WHOSE ARE WE?—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). To own and to possess are not the same. There is a difference between the two words. I used to both own and possess a certain umbrella. Now I own it still but somebody else possesses it. So sad to say, though God owns us still, too often the world possesses us.—From The King's Business. Sent by Miss J. B. James, Toronto.

WHAT EVERY ONE CAN GIVE—First they gave their own selves to the Lord (Golden Text). Thomas H. Huxley was a severe critic and a chronic neglecter of religion in his day, but he said one thing that every church member in America ought to remember: "It doesn't take much of a man to be a Christian, but it takes all there is of him."—From Homiletic Review. Sent by J. E. Williamson, Egremont, Cumberland, England.

GARDENING—He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully (9:6). As Uncle Eben expresses it, "Them what gives, gits." While this axiom is laid down in the matter of gifts for the advancement of things that are for the good of the world, yet it so happens that it is one of the principles upon which God has founded the world. When I was first married (and last married, too, for that matter), we had a fine kitchen garden back of El Nidito, from which in summer we got a very substantial part of the living in the new home. Instead of having to patronize the butcher, we thrived on and gloried in fried egg plant and corn fritters and tomatoes with cream gravy. Our asparagus on toast beat fried chicken to a frazzle. While for dessert, what could beat strawberry shortcake with our own big berries! As for peas and beans, new potatoes and sweet corn, oh, you poor city sweller, you've never really tasted vegetables! Now in my gardening operations, I soon discovered that if I wanted good returns I had to "slap in the seed." "Skinny sowin' brings skinny crops," as Uncle Billy says. I have just heard a lecture by Dr. Terry on "Prodigal America." The prodigal son sowed waste and reaped husks. The five and three-talent men sowed talents and reaped talents. The one-talent man reaped censure. The Nazarene who told these parables sowed prodigally and has been reaping all down the centuries. Please note, Jesus gave his own self. Every once in a while you will read of the death of the founder and maker of some great enterprise. The man "worked himself to death," dying long before his time. He sowed his own self. In railroads, it has been Thomas A. Scott, and almost every president of the Pennsylvania Railroad after him. In manufacture, a William Wood and a William Leeds. In utilities, an H. M. Bylesby and a Morris Stroud, Jr. In religion, a D. L. Moody and a Wilbur Chapman, a Sankey, and an Alexander. In temperance, a Frances Willard and an Anna Shaw. And many more will suggest themselves. Those who give little accomplish little and get little. Stewardship is no ten per cent business. A seller of goods gets his ten per cent. Stewardship is first presenting oneself. After that giving takes care of itself (Acts 20:35).

A SCARCE ARTICLE—For God loveth a cheerful giver (v. & o.). In all the world's history there never were such givers as those who give in America at the present time. But among "those who have it," cheerful giving is a rather scarce article, if you can call a grace or habit an article. "What! not another drive so soon!" is the cry that goes up where you live and where we live. However, we go along with the procession, and like as not, we may be on one or another of the teams. We usually "go down" not for what we can afford, not because of our consuming interest in the Boy Scout, the hospital, the church, the Christian Association, but we "go down" in the proportion that others in our social strata give. The only "hilarious" givers that I know are our colored brethren. I have seen four collections taken up at the camp-meeting service, and you could hear the happy "ha-haws" and the loud guffaws" all over the grove as the leaders on the platform enthused things along. Oh, yes, folks give and give liberally, but "it is like drawing teeth to get the money out of them," as I heard one solicitor say. There are cheerful givers, to be sure. Not those who give it when they die, but those who have the fun of their lives in handing it out to bless folks and town and nation. Mr. Carnegie did not wait until he died, but had his fun while he lived. Mr. Rockefeller and his son, as I write, are having the time of their lives hunting down the elusive hookworm, boll weevil, sleeping sickness, cancer, consumption, and all the other "bugs" that prey upon the human race directly or through cattle and crops. There are also similar givers in smaller places giving their means, giving themselves ungrudgingly, gladly, cheerfully—but suppose you count them up where you live! Not so awful many. But these are they who get the fun out of life. In this connection, go to the library and get "Dollars Only" by Edward Bok. (See Prov. 11:24; Luke 6:38.) Coatesville, Pennsylvania.

The Church Defined

Briefly, the church is the organized body of Christian disciples. The Greek word in the New Testament which is translated "church," means "the called out" ones. Hence the church is composed of those who have heard the Gospel call to separate themselves from the evil world to a life of righteousness in Christ Jesus (2 Cor. 6:17). Our English word "church" is derived ultimately from another Greek word which means "belonging to the Lord," which implies that the church is a society of people "belonging to the Lord."

The church is not to be confused with the Kingdom of God, or the Kingdom of heaven, which terms refer to the reign of righteousness which Christ set up, and which is destined to prevail more and more until it shall be completed. The church is not the Kingdom, but is the agency for bringing about its completion.

Its Foundation

The church is built upon faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and he himself is the builder. Peter was called the rockman when he professed faith in the divine Sonship of Christ because his life was established on a rock foundation (Matt. 16:18). And it was on that foundation, namely, faith in his deity, that our Lord declared, "I will build my church." We find Philip demanding of the Ethiopian eunuch just such faith in Christ Jesus as a requisite to baptism (Acts 8:37). And Paul declared, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11). Moreover John emphatically states that he who denies that Jesus is the Christ ("the anointed") is a liar and an antichrist, and he admonishes his readers to let the faith which they had received from the beginning abide in them (1 John 2:22-24).

The Mission of the Church

The mission of the church is three-fold:
(1) To proclaim the Gospel of saving grace to those who know it not. See Matt. 28:19; Mark 16:15.

(2) To culture the spiritual things of its membership. See Matt. 28:20—"Teaching them to observe all things;" John 15:17—"Feed my sheep;" Acts 20:28; 1 Peter 5:2.

(3) To minister to those in distress, i. e., heal the sick, succor the needy, cast out demons, etc. See Matt. 26:34-46; Mark 16:17, 18; Luke 9:6; 10:9, 27—"Love thy neighbor as thyself, 30-37.

Its Creed

The creed of the church is the written word of God, which was given unto us through his Son (See Heb. 1:1), and was written that we might "believe" (See John 20:31). It has been the historic position of the Brethren fraternity that the Bible is the only creed which needs or may rightfully possess. "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God" (See John 10:14, 17), and that word is the sufficient rule and the unfailing source of faith. If we believe the Bible to be the record "holy men of God who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Peter 1:21), and not the "words which man's wisdom teacheth" (1 Cor. 2:13), we have no need of any man written creed, for the inspired word of God is all-sufficient (See 2 Tim. 3:16).—Selected from the author's article, "The Church My Fellowship," in "The Way of Life."

Christ's Conquering Church

Christ's conquering church, the church established on men's allegiance to him as their personal Savior, has proved to be the one enduring earthly institution. It has outlasted the world's mightiest empires. The citizens of Christ's kingdom, though often obscure and ignorant of scholarly lore, have won lasting influence while great poets, painters, architects, orators and rulers are forgotten. Against Christ's conquering church, ceaselessly through the ages, all the bitter onset of Satan's armies has been hurled, and hurled in vain. It is mightier today than ever before, and is conquering and to conquer until it shall win universal domain.

There are some who say the church "is slipping;" some say it is dying; some have actually published statements that the membership is lessening. Even if we grant that regular attendance at the church services is not so common as it was a generation and more ago, there are some facts they ignore which are easily obtainable. One, from actual government statistics, shows that the percentage of growth of church membership during the past period under consideration, is distinctly larger than the percentage of growth of population. Another takes the four greatest religions—Buddhism, Confucianism, Mohammedanism and Christianity—and shows that Christianity numbers more adherents than any other, and at least as many as Buddhism and Confucianism together. And lastly, we see that all progress, the greatest optimism and hope for better to come, the most education, the greatest work for the poor is in the Christian lands. And where they exist in other lands they were founded and still carried on by Christians. The church is conquering.—Selected.

Selected Helps for Junior Committees

A MOTHER-GOOSE PARTY For Social Committees

Give to the Juniors when they arrive cards with the names of Mother-Goose characters on them—one card to each Junior and one name on each card. The Juniors will then try to impersonate in turn the characters whose names are given on their cards, and the others will guess the characters impersonated. The list will include the Woman in the Shoe, Jack and Jill, Boy Blue, Jack Horner, and so on. Arrange the Juniors around tables and let the Woman in the Shoe bring in a lollipop for each. On the tables should be bits of tissue-paper, sticks, string, and pencils. Each Junior will dress his lollipop in any way he chooses. Full particulars and a number of suggested games for this party will be found in the issue of The Christian Endeavor World for October 4, 1928.

THINGS TO DO For the President

To increase interest in the society's work give a prize—for example a subscription to The Junior Christian Endeavor World—to the Junior who writes the best letter of not more than one hundred words on "Things That Our Society Could Do." The society is doubtless doing some excellent things, but there are other things that might be done. Some of these things may be found in the latter part of "Uncle David" in this number and in past numbers, or the Juniors may find for themselves things that the society may do.

POSTERS

For Whatsoever Committees

The use of posters in any Junior society will surely add interest, if the posters are well done. All posters, of course, should be made well in advance of the meeting they are intended to advertise. It will be found that a good many Juniors are quite able to draw interesting posters, and all should be allowed, at least, to try. Give a prize for the best poster prepared in each month. Have a poster display at a social, and let the audience vote on which poster is the best. A small prize may be given, if desired.

READING-A-GOSPEL MONTH

For Quiet Hour Committees

Very few of us read enough of the Bible, and it will do good if we can induce the Juniors to read one of the Gospels through in one month. Take the Gospel by Mark, divide it into four portions, and let the Juniors each week read at home one of these portions. As they read, ask them to give titles to the chapters—the titles indicating the main contents of the chapters. The Juniors will hand these lists of titles to the superintendent, and a small prize may be given to the Junior who makes out the best list.

A WINTER MEET For Prayer Meeting Committees

A winter meet is really one giving a name to one meeting, but certain features may be introduced that will make the meeting different from most others. For instance, you may have hunting for Bible verses. The superintendent will announce the book, chapter, and verse, and the Juniors will try to find the verses quickly. You may have a short period of answers to Bible questions. You may have the Juniors tell why they like winter, or why they dislike it. The meeting may be made practical by sending flowers or fruit to some person shut in because of winter.

THE STILL HUNT For Lookout Committees

In order to make the Junior society successful, it is necessary to keep up its membership. As the old members are graduated into the Intermediate or Senior society, new members must be brought in to take their places. One good way is to have a still hunt. To create interest, draw a poster showing a hunter and a dog. Divide the society into two sides, and have each side draw up a list of names of possible members, and have each side try to bring these possible members to the meeting. The side that brings the largest number in a month wins in the contest. A captain should be appointed to lead each side. Efforts should be made also to get the visitors to join the society. Carrying out the hunt idea, every visitor brought to the society should count one bird shot or captured.

REPORTERS

For Missionary Committees

Let the missionary committee attend the monthly missionary meeting of the Young People's society. A definite task should be assigned to each Junior. One may be asked to note how many take part in the meeting. Another may report on the sentence prayers offered, another on the interest shown. All should try to get at least one thought each from what is said at the meeting. Let each then write out a report not more than sixty words long, and read it at the Junior missionary meeting.

As you look out upon the world you see the field being everywhere cleared for one supreme conflict. It is not between one form of religion and another. It is between spiritual religion in any form and a material civilization claiming to be self-sufficient.—The Archbishop of Canterbury.

Argentina

First General Conference

The first general conference of the Brethren churches in Argentina was held in Rio Cuarto, January 10-14, 1929. There have been pastors' conferences and Bible study conferences, but this time the different churches sent delegates to participate in a conference on methods and plans and all that concerns the advancement of the work.

The first session, led by the writer, was devoted to Christian Endeavor work. The next, led by Juan Iztueta took up the question of propaganda: prayer, preaching, personal work, colportage, Bible Coach work, tracts, open air meetings, etc., etc. Many helpful ideas were presented.

Then a session was devoted to Sunday school work. Domingo Reina led the discussion. C. L. Sickel presented a very helpful and inspiring paper on "Church Music: Its Importance and Methods of Improving It." One of the most important sessions was that devoted to financial problems. The writer (Brother Lense being unable to come) presented the gospel plan of church support. All our churches will now use envelopes and have regular weekly offerings.

One afternoon the men, the women and the girls had separate meetings to consider their societies and special work. On Sunday morning we had reports from all the different missions. In the evening after Sunday school and before the preaching service we celebrated the Lords' supper. It was the largest and most impressive celebration of the supper we have had.

Each morning we had a sunrise praise and prayer meeting and each evening a sermon. Those who preached were Erling Anderson, C. L. Sickel and Adolfo Zeche. Able Bible studies were given by Erydio Romanenghi and P. L. Yett. Although there was an attendance of thirty-five from a distance all were taken care of at the mission. Brother Zeche stayed with his people. Brother Juan Iztueta had charge of the meals and was able to please everybody. He brought five delegates from Laboulaye who with others helped him in his work. In fact everybody helped in the necessary work of the conference so that without hiring help everything was cared for nicely and no one needed to miss more than a small part of the meetings. The humble, democratic, loving Christian spirit was wonderfully manifest throughout the whole conference and everyone returned home with new enthusiasm. The next conference will undoubtedly have a far larger attendance than this one. Our aim is to thoroughly evangelize our district and at the same time develop a native church prepared to take care of itself even though all help from abroad should be withdrawn.

After the dedication of our new hall in Almafuerte and a week of meetings there I hope to make a tour of the churches until time for seminary work to begin in Rio Cuarto. C. F. YODER.

The Land of the Southern Cross

By Robert D. Crees

III. Brethren Missions in Argentina

Four months have rolled by since I started on my journey to the Argentine and now I am home again, much wiser and much richer than before. The trip has been a revelation to me and I want to pass on my experiences to others, hoping that by so doing, you may get a fair and just impression of the "Land of the Southern Cross."

Before I say anything of Brethren Missions, I would like to tell you of Argentina as a whole. Before I left the States a good intentioned friend asked me what kind of a revolver I intended carrying during the trip. When I arrived home, children asked me to tell them of the "savages" and "cannibals" of the Argentine. The prevalent idea seems to be that all missionary countries are unexplored, wild, and very much uncivilized. When I tell people that they have more modern and more beautiful subways in some of the Argentine cities than in New York or Philadelphia, their eyes open wide and they look just a little bit disappointed. It does not seem to them to be a missionary country unless there is something wild about it—something unusual that gives you a thrill. Some missionaries stretch their imagination and paint South America very black, featuring unsanitation, immorality, crime and paganism, thinking that this will arouse in the hearts of their hearers a desire to remedy those conditions by going as missionaries or giving their money. Some things they say are doubtless true but they leave out the bright side of the picture. I could paint the United States pretty black by telling of the murders and gang wars in our large cities, but I would be misrepresenting the entire nation. I am not a missionary and my trip has been made independent of church interests, but I am interested in Argentina and I am going to express my opinion as a visitor.

Argentina is a civilized country. It is a republic with a constitution and laws much the same as in the United States. There are some things that I like in Argentina better than in the United States. When I spoke of better subways in Argentina, I meant it. Our city subways are built with a view to service. Their subways are built with an idea of making them both serviceable and beautiful. Art has its part in the construction of all public buildings and monuments. Crime is proportionally less in Argentina than in the United States. Marriage laws are stricter in Argentina and there is no divorce. Railroad transportation is cheaper. A North American home is not complete without a can-opener but in Argentina they prefer fresh foods. The newspapers do not feature crime in Argentina as they do in the States. They believe that crime is a thing to be ashamed of and not a thing to be advertised. The newspapers of the United States are narrow and provincial compared to those of Argentina. Our newspapers selfishly talk of, and exalt, the United States while their papers are world-wide in their scope and sympathy. How often do you read of Argentina in our press? All the countries of the world have the front page in Argentine papers. Another point where they excel us is in the fact that their conventions are more strict. Too much liberality is allowed the young people of the United States, and this liberality leads to immorality rather than to modesty. The thing that I like most about the Argentine is their treatment of the foreigner. They welcome the foreigner while we shut our doors to him. The Argentine is always ready to welcome a stranger into his home. There is always some food and a place to sleep for the visitor, no matter how poor or humble the home. They certainly outdo the North Americans in hospitality. The schools of Argentina are of a high grade, and soon there will be enough of them to accommodate all the youth. An Argentine boy takes some college rating subjects in High School, and their standards are so high that frequently the graduate of their High School is prepared to enter the Second Year of a North American College. In view of these facts we cannot think of Argentina as an uncivilized country.

Twenty years have passed since the beginning of Brethren missionary work in Argentina. During these twenty years a very commendable progress has been made, which cannot be measured numerically. Our missionaries have won the honor and confidence of the natives while the Catholic church has been losing ground because of the well known wickedness of the priests. I believe that our missions are on the verge of a great period of growth and prosperity during which period they will need very much the prayers and financial backing of the homeland. Our missionaries are not wasting time fighting other Protestant denominations, but are working in cooperation with them. Each denomination has their own territory to work, and they help one another whenever they can. Brother Yoder is editor of a religious periodical that is jointly published by four denominations.

Instead of confining their efforts to just one point, our missionaries have stations established in twelve different places, some of them being over 200 miles from Rio Cuarto, the central station. Besides the American families, there are six native preachers taking charge of the work at the various stations. The ones that I met seemed capable of carrying on the work very well. All of these men are making a sacrifice in carrying on this work, for the pay is very small and some of them have large families. It would be useless for me to give a list of stations and names of workers for that has been done in other reports. I do, however, want to tell you of the method of work. The Bible Coach, with Bibles and tracts, generally opens up new territory. If the people are interested, a Sunday school is usually started for the children and when they are interested, church services are held for the parents and friends. Then there are two or three baptisms and before you know it there is a good nucleus for a church. The church at Tancacha was started two years ago by a tract. Sunday school and church services are much the same as in the United States, the only difference being that they are conducted in Spanish instead of English. The people dress much the same as in the

GARWIN AND DES MOINES, IOWA

Garwin, Iowa

This church is located in the country about six miles from Garwin. I certainly had some time in reaching this point. My first attempt was after a thaw and found the roads a sea of "gumbo mud." If any of you do not know what "gumbo mud" is, take a trip to Southern Iowa in muddy weather! The first syllable of the word is "gum," and it sticks. My second effort was in a snow blizzard 20 degrees below zero and while I reached the church on both occasions only a few people living around the church were able to get out, after shoveling snow drifts for three days and breaking roads I reached most of them.

We have a very good church building and parsonage here and a fine group of people, but like most of the rural communities, the young people are moving to the larger centers, while many of the leaders of the church have been called to their reward.

This is the home of Brother W. E. Thomas and his wife, who have returned and been supplying the pulpit for the past year or more. Brother Thomas has been farming and preaching on Sundays and expects to give his full time to the farm after September.

I see no reason why the work here should not be maintained, as there is need for a church in this community. The church was originally built by Brother Fetter Hall, who sacrificed and labored, and with others built up a good sized congregation. Brother Hall died several years ago, his wife and children still live in this community and are faithful supporters of the work.

I found the people here very friendly and they extended to me every courtesy and made my stay as pleasant as they could under the conditions. Their gift to the Endowment was $455.00.

Des Moines, Iowa

In this capital city, a mission was started a few years ago by Brother George Ronk. A church was purchased on University Avenue, only a few blocks from Drake University. A small group of our people have labored and sacrificed to build up a work here. At the present time it is very discouraging as they have been without the aid of a pastor for nearly a year. Both the National and District Mission Boards stand ready to give financial aid, yet have been unable to find a man who will take the work. There must be something done soon in securing a man if the work here is held.

They have a fine brick church building, located on one of the principal streets in the city and I can see no objections to the location. There will be coming to this city from time to time members from surrounding locations and if we are to preserve them for the Brethren cause we should have a church in this place. This field offers a good opportunity for a man who has the ability, consecration and devotion to the cause, who is willing to work hard and build up the church.

The little group here are giving to the limit to maintain the work and I did not press the endowment on them.

The total gift was $100.00.

AN ELOQUENT SERMON

Recently word came of the "loosing away upward" of Sister Lizize Finn, a life-long member of the Fairview church, near Washington C. H., Ohio. Her life of quiet service has been such an inspiration to many that, as a friend and former pastor, I feel led to bring something of its inspiration to the readers of the "Evangelist."

She was ever willing to undertake any service she felt called to do, large or small, regardless of her personal wishes in the matter. Thus, with a multiplicity of farm and household duties calling for her attention, for years she took care of the church and built the fires—because she lived closest, and nobody else could do it. At another time she graciously consented to continue as Sunday school superintendent—a task from which she had asked to be relieved—when she saw that it was necessary for the good of the school.

Would that every member of the church would take to heart the message she brought to the congregation one year, on Woman's Day! At Fairview—as at many other places—if ALL the Brethren in the community had been loyal, the church would have been much stronger. This condition always grieved Sister Finn; I can see her, as she stood, tall and straight, and told of the part of women in the history of the church. As she spoke, she held something behind her; finally she showed what it was—an old-fashioned bonnet!

Placing the bonnet upon her own head, she continued: "It has been many years since this bonnet came to church here. Some of you will remember its owner, Aunt Phoebe Eyman, mother of the late Jesse Eyman. You will also remember that every Sunday while she lived, her bonnet was in church. In zero weather, rain, snow, or sleet, Aunt Phoebe never failed to drive the ten miles to church—not in a comfortably closed car, but in an old buggy, behind a plodding horse!" Then, briefly referring to the changes that had taken place in the church, she pleaded for the same loyalty to the church, on the part of all those present.

Her face was flushed with the excitement of speaking before so many people, and many declared the bonnet more becoming to her than her own hat!

Sister Finn, I believe, was employed in the household of the late Jesse Eyman (known to the brotherhood through his bequests to Ashland College and other interests of the church), as a young girl. When she married, Brother and Sister Finn became tenants on the Eyman farm, where both resided until called home.

For a number of years prior to his death, Brother Eyman made his home with the Finns, being called to his reward February 17, 1924. Two years later, in February, 1926, Brother Finn was called home, and now Sister Finn has gone to be with her Lord, and her loved ones.

Another Brethren home at Fairview is empty, but, like one of old, she "being dead, yet speaketh." There is no sermon so eloquent as a life of unselfish, unswerving loyalty to Christ and his church: such was the life of Sister Finn, and, as such, I have tried to present it to you.

Her works do follow after.

NAPPANEE, INDIANA

It has been a long time since we have broadcasted any news from station N-A-P, but we have been busy for the Lord. Our church program has been carefully and prayerfully planned, and great benefits have resulted from all organizations of the church because of the boosting of the heads of the different departments and their loyal supporters. The spirit of "Boost, don't roost; work, don't shirk," has been prevalent during 1928 and will continue in 1929.

During the first week of December we had the privilege of having Dr. G. W. Rensch with us. His lectures on the general theme of "The Doctrine of Last Things" were well received, each afternoon and evening. These messages were inspiring and uplifting and have proven a real blessing to us, making our lives better because of having heard them.

On Sunday before Christmas the Sunday school put on their usual interesting program and in connection therewith gave their liberal White Gift offering. The crowds at the evening program surpassed anything in the city. More than a hundred were turned away because of lack of space. Some day we will have a new church large enough to accommodate the crowd. We are working to this end. The Sunday school and the W. M. S. each have a nice nest egg.

Another series of special evangelistic meetings have just closed and was one of the outstanding because of the loyalty of the membership to their pastor. Especially were the young people faithful and night after night comprised about half of the congregation. We were handicapped the first week because of the weather and ice, and all through the meetings because of a measles epidemic, yet our crowds came faithfully. With eleven churches in our city and each church having services on Sunday nights, we wondered where the crowds came from.

We had a delegation from Goshen and one from Warsaw and folks from other churches attended in numbers. Our pastor did the preaching, making the fifth meeting he has held here, and delivered a series of wonderful, spiritual, straight, convincing, and wide awake sermons. Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer were with us again for the third time and had charge of the music. With the aid of Mrs. Cora Stuckman at the piano, Mrs. Arlene Stouder with the cello, and Mrs. Richer with the violin, and the choir, we had great singing. Everybody likes the Richers and they went from our midst with "God-speed" from all. The results of this meeting were fifteen additions. The meeting has closed, but the spirit of it will be felt for months to come. Seed has been sown which will spring up and grow and the campaign to win souls for Christ will continue and on Easter day we expect a great ingathering for the kingdom of God.

The churches of the above district will kindly send their contributions in as soon as possible as our fund for District Mission work is running low. Our conference will be held the first of June at Oak Hill in the new church and we all, I trust, will want to show all mission funds for our congregations paid in full.

The mission work at Winchester, where much of this fund goes, has grown from a very few members to eighty-six at present. To my knowledge no other work has shown such rapid growth in missions in the same time in the district. We have a church property at Winchester with an extra lot that is a valuable asset to the church. There remains an indebtedness of only $700.00 on the property, which I am informed will, or can be paid this year. Ample space is reserved in the rear of the church for the enlargement of the church at some future time. Those who contribute towards the mission cause at this place can be assured that their contributions are wisely invested and fruitful results are obtained.

Winchester is a growing city and the section where our church stands is being rapidly built up about it, and in time the property will be worth many times its original cost.

KEEPING BUSY AT SHIPSHAWANA

We are spending our first winter at the lake and enjoying it far more than we expected we would, and finding so many things to keep us busy. After holding several meetings which took us up to the holidays, we then began working on our plans for the coming year's activities. While recovering from an attack of the "flu," we have just finished improving the bathing beach by putting about three hundred yards of good coarse sand on the ice and sinking it. The money for this work was all furnished by the property owners. Thus leaving all money given by churches and friends to be used for buildings and other improvements.

We have also moved the cottage from in front of the S. M. M. Lodge and graded the hill down, using the dirt to fill many new streets, which makes quite an improvement in the appearance of the whole park. A new ten-inch tile ditch through the low ground will now give an outlet for a flowing well in that section. Many trees have been planted where needed.

Work is to be started again on the hotel as soon as the weather will permit. It will be twenty-six by fifty-four feet, with a porch ten by forty-eight feet, facing the lake and bathing beach. This was made possible by some good local friends who furnished most of the material and labor and are taking lots for their pay.

We are now selling lots in our fourth addition and hope they will all be sold this summer. We are expecting some buyers from Ohio this week. Those interested in lots would do well to see me and make your selection soon for we have some special bargains for cash buyers.

I also might say that all subscriptions made at State Conference for the work at Shippshawana are now due and should be sent at once to Mr. C. G. Wolfe at North Liberty, Indiana.

Our various committees are now busy arranging programs for what we hope will be the biggest year Shippshawana has ever seen. So begin to plan at once to be with us this summer.

A. T. WIRICK,
President Board of Trustees.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

Today the baptismal waters were troubled and three boys received the sacred rite.

Since our last report, we have enjoyed visits from Brother Hathaway, Miss Nielson, and Dr. Bell. They each brought inspiring messages to us.

The exceedingly cold weather, bad roads, and much sickness has cut the attendance at our services.

Our Missionary society is doing good work, and we are pleased to report a Senior Sisterhood organized, that with our Junior Sisterhood make an active group of young people.

This week the Woman's Federated Bible classes with the W. C. T. U are putting on a day of prayer for Missions.

A RECORD YEAR IN BIBLE DISTRIBUTION

By Rev. George William Carter, D.D., General Secretary of the New York Bible Society

The Bible is still popular; it is still the world's best seller. More than thirty million copies are circulated every year throughout the world, and the Book has been translated into more than 800 languages and dialects. At the annual meeting of the New York Bible Society, just held, the announcement was made that during the year 1928, 965,671 copies of the Scriptures in 71 languages were circulated in the City and Harbor of New York, the largest distribution ever made by the Society. No other book has had such a circulation in the metropolitan area.

The New York Bible Society has completed 119 years of Christian and patriotic service. In the year 1809, the year the original Society was organized, 932 Bibles were circulated. That was a day of small beginnings. The territory of the City of New York at that time extended from the Battery to Chambers Street, with a population of 90,000 inhabitants, while the total population of the area now covered by the five Boroughs of Greater New York was less than 120,000. City Hall was then in process of construction. Its front and two sides were built of white marble, while on the north side of the building sandstone was used from motives of economy, it being thought that the material on that side was of little consequence, as few citizens would ever reside north of the spot. The present Canal Street was so low and marshy that often during high tide the waters of the East and Hudson Rivers met in the center of Manhattan Island. An interesting fact is recorded of a Lutheran church which was involved at the time in financial difficulties. Contributions being solicited, one friend offered to donate a tract of six acres of land near the stone bridge at the corner of Broadway and Canal Street. After much deliberation, the trustees refused the gift, declaring the land would not be worth the trouble of putting a fence about it. It is interesting to note that just one week after the New York Bible Society was organized, the building of the first free school in New York was dedicated. This free school, later growing into our public school system. In the year 1809 there was in the city a public library, two free schools, a hospital, a medical college, one Roman Catholic church, one Jewish Synagogue, and forty-nine Protestant churches or places of worship.

After one hundred and nineteen years of service, the New York Bible Society has reached a place of large influence in the religious life of a city and nation. The large distribution of the Scriptures during the past year was made through missionary societies, pastors of churches, accredited volunteer workers, and employed agents who carry the Word of Life to the immigrants, the seamen, and the multitudes of many nationalities. The workers go into the hospitals, the prisons, and other institutions for the helpless and poor. The Society has placed, within a few years, nearly 100,000 Bibles in the guest rooms of New York hotels. Its work for the blind is national in its influence, as the Society publishes Portions of the Bible in the Universal System of Raised Type for the blind, Revised Braille, Grade 1½. Hundreds of volumes in raised type are donated annually to the blind.

The Society has only one work, that of circulating the Holy Scriptures. It handles no literature of any kind excepting the Bible. The Society never goes into debt and never borrows money, the amount of the work being determined by its income. The large number of friends in every state who are interested in the free distribution of the Scriptures make possible the continued activities of this historic Society, which is located at its Bible House at 5 East Forty-eighth Street, New York City.

ON THE FRENCH BATTLE FRONT

Well, I must make up for lost time now and tell you about our recent trips. On Sunday afternoon we visited the famous church of Notre Dame. As you remember it lies on one of the islands in the Seine, the island called the Isle de Cite. Knowing that we were to visit it I bought somewhere in the East, I have forgotten where, a copy of Victor Hugo's The Hunch Back of Notre Dame, and read it while coming on the boat across the Indian Ocean. What memories cluster around that old church. It is not a very beautiful church in my estimation. It does not compare with Milan for example. Yet it has a majesty all its own. Cardinal Richlieu had much to do with it. Napoleon was crowned in it. Its two towers and its doors are worth seeing. It contains some tombs of important persons. But in my mind it stands for no great movements in the history of Christianity, no great reformers came out of it, no important statesmen except Richlieu had any connection with it, and I am rather of the opinion that he has not added anything to the richness of Christian history. He corresponds in my mind with Woolsey of England, both puppets of a despot who would better be forgotten.

Monday and Tuesday were devoted largely to getting passports for John fixed up, and I visited the Madelaine. I am not sure that you and I visited this church when we were here before. It is a very magnificent church built not on the gothic but on the Greek style. It is an oblong building like a Greek temple with fine Corinthian columns around it on the outside. Between the columns and on the outer wall of the church in niches are figures of Catholic saints. It happens that a shell from one of the big Berthas of the Germans fired from a distance of over 40 miles away during the war struck the head off of St. Luke's statue on the back end of the church. It did no further damage. The other shell from one of those guns which fell on Paris struck another church where a large number of people were at mass and killed nine of them.

On the inside of the church of the Madelaine there are numerous statues and altars. It is very plain but made a fine impression on me for that reason. The altar is not very good because it is overloaded with statuary. It has, however, some famous statuary, for example a good one of Joan of Arc by Larche. It is the most fashionable church in Paris, that is, it is attended by the most fashionable people. It is noted for its sacred music and has one of the best organs in Paris, having five banks of keys.

Yesterday represented one of the high lights in our sight-seeing here. We took one of the tours to a sector of the Battle Fields of the Great War. We left Paris at 7:30 A. M. and got back about 9:30 P. M. We traveled about 250 miles. We went out along the road over which the taxicabs of Paris carried the soldiers to stop the first German advance on Paris. In that first push some of the Germans got within 18 miles of Paris. But the soldiers under Joffre carried out there in taxis sent them back in a hurry and turned that advance guard back over the Marne. That was the first battle of the Marne. We followed that Marne River for many miles. As one looks at the steep banks it is clear why the Allies had a hard time in forcing the bridges and taking the heights on the German side. We saw many bridges which had been blown up by one side or the other, now rebuilt.

Then we turned aside in order to visit Belleau Wood. A visit to it makes it clear why it cost so many lives to take it. It is a height and was covered with thick forest at the time of the War. It had been preserved as a game or hunting preserve by some rich noble. It has rather steep sides on all sides but one. In the midst of that forest the Germans stationed big guns and dug trenches in which were installed machine guns making veritable nests. I had no idea what a machine gun nest was until I saw this place. It fairly bristled with these clusters of machine guns covering every approach. You will recall that this was one of the first places attacked in the big salient, which the Germans had driven towards Paris, by the Americans. And the American group who attacked and took this place was made up in large part of the marines, the hard-boiled dough-boys, or leather necks. One just has to wonder that anyone could get up there through those trees and live with those machine guns spitting 500 bullets a minute in all directions. A lot of them did die, but they had that determination which made them come on and after a while and after great sacrifices they cleaned it out. Here was found some of the Germans tied to their machine guns. It was on one of the slopes of this wooded hill that that fighting fool from Kentucky got separated from his fellows and took captive, how many Germans was it? single handed. Well, those boys who died, lie down there at the bottom of the hill in an American cemetery, 2100 of them. The first name on the marble cross I saw was that of a Wisconsin boy. There they lie sacrificed to the God of War because a king and his mad counsellors thought they could whip the world.

J. L. GILLIN.

even they have "minds," although this belief imposes a severe strain upon our credulity at times. The very fact that man is able to argue that he is only an "ape," proves conclusively that he is more than an ape. And the fact that man can argue that he has no "mind" proves that he has a mind, however feeble it may be.

What a commentary upon the stubborn perverseness of fallen human nature! Man endowed by his Creator with all the marvelous reasoning faculties of Mind, uses them to prove that he has no Mind.

But we should not be surprised. If man could, as they did "change the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like . . . to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things", is it strange that he does not hesitate to degrade himself to the same level?

THE LAND OF THE SOUTHERN CROSS

States and the pictures I have of the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor groups are just like those of North American organizations. The work of Brother Yoder, the Superintendent of the work, is to visit the old stations and to start new ones. I was privileged to help him in a town called Almafuerte. There we had a Daily Vacation Bible School, followed with a Sunday school, and now I am confident that a church will soon be organized there. Most of the children heard the Gospel for the first time, and they were intensely interested. If you could only have seen their faces as they listened to the Bible stories, you would realize that our South American mission is meeting a great need.

There is one need of our Argentine mission that has been on my heart for some time and upon which the future of the work there depends. For many years the people of Argentina have been oppressed by foreign priests. The priests are now well known for their immorality and are hated and despised by many of the people. In order to get rid of the priests a bill has been introduced into the Argentine Senate to expell all foreign clergy from the country. This bill has no chance of passing for several years yet, but when it does, it means that our missionaries will have to leave with the rest. All the Protestant denominations are now carrying on a broad program of education in Argentina, training the young people to take up the work that may have to be left by the missionaries. I was told that we had a seminary in Rio Cuarto but was surprised to find out that we had no students. When I inquired the reason I found out that there are seven young people who want to take training but cannot because they do not have the money. Living conditions are different in Argentina and a student cannot work his way through school, for in order to earn enough money for room and board and books they would have to work the whole day, thus leaving no time for school. The only way these earnest young people can get a Christian education in our seminary is through the use of scholarship funds, furnished by folks in the homeland. Some of these young people are active workers in the missions now, and only need a little more training to fit them for real service. I will give you the names and ages of these five young men and two young women, so that you may become acquainted with them. They are: Frederico Sotola, Jr.—17; Edward Brunt—20; Juan Pisani—23; Belinda Machado—23; Luis Siccardi—23; Manuela Orellana—20; and Angela Siccardi—21. Three of these young people are from Rio Cuarto, two from Cabrera, and two from Deheza. They are willing to work and learn and it is upon these and other young people that the burden of our mission will fall in the future. Will you help them to prepare for this task?

In closing, I want to remind you that our missions need your prayers. Argentina is a wonderful country but it is not a Christian country. The people of Argentina are wonderful people and I love them, but they do not know Christ. North America has brought civilization and riches to her southern neighbor, but has neglected to bring her Christ. Will you help finish the work?

THE MISSING APPLE

If there was one thing that Andrew liked, it was apples! Perhaps that was what made him so strong and rosy-cheeked and happy. So when he received an invitation to an apple party, although he had never heard of such a thing before, he was sure that he would have a very, very good time.

The party was to be at Beth's house, and Beth's uncle had an orchard of the finest kind of apples. Andrew could hardly wait for the day of the party. On the afternoon before he took a long walk to pass the time.

While he was out walking, he saw a girl with a big basket. The basket was so big that it seemed as if she should be carried in it, instead of carrying it all by herself. Andrew ran forward.

"Let me help you carry your basket," he said.

"All right! It is full of apples, and very heavy. We are going to have lots of company, and these are for apple turnovers. I must hurry, but the basket is so big I can not walk very fast."

Andrew hurried as fast as he could, and they would have made very good time indeed, but a big collie dog came bounding down the street and bumped into them. That upset the girl, and the girl upset Andrew, and of course, they upset the basket of apples. Before you could wink, they were all on the ground, the dog and the girl and the apples and Andrew.

The collie barked as if he had done something very cute. The girl laughed and Andrew laughed, as he picked up the basket and put apples in it. Then Andrew picked up the very biggest and reddest apple he had ever seen.

"Why-why!" he exclaimed. "Here is my name on this apple! Look and see!"

The apple-girl seemed surprised. "I never heard of an apple with a name on it," she said. "It must be a magic apple, put there because you have been so good to me. You keep it and eat it."

On the way home Andrew was going to eat the apple, but he thought of the party. It would be fun to take the apple with his name on it to the apple party. So he put it away.

The next day, when he went to the party, Beth came to the door. Andrew saw right away that something had happened. She led him into a room where there were a lot of girls and boys. There was a long table, too, with plates on it. At every place there seemed to be a big, red apple.

"Oh, Andrew," cried Beth, "there isn't any apple for you! Uncle put paper letters on them before they commenced to turn, so that each of us would have a special apple. But the other day he picked some apples to sell, and he made a mistake and picked some of the apples off this tree. Yours must have been among them. Oh, I feel so bad, for the party was really for you! I know you like apples so well. There are apple salad and apple sandwiches and apple-pie and apple-cake and apple surprises, and there isn't an apple for you!"

Then Andrew took the apple out of his pocket. "Yes, there is," he said. "I have it right here. A girl gave it to me yesterday."

When Beth saw this, she clapped her hands and was happy. Andrew put the apple at his place at the long, gay table, and the party started.

And you may believe, although he wouldn't tell about it, that Andrew was glad he had helped that girl with her big basket of apples.—Selected.

IN THE SHADOW

O'NEILL—Harry F. E. O'Neill in his 49th year, of 703 Tenth Street, New Brighton, Pennsylvania, a staunch member and a deacon of the First Brethren church of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, died in the Presbyterian Hospital, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on Tuesday afternoon, February 5, 1929, after a brief illness. Brother O'Neill was a member of the Pittsburgh Brethren church for twenty years, having been received into membership by relation on February 14, 1899, coming to Pittsburgh from Johnstown, where he lived for many years. Brother O'Neill was engaged in the work of the Yorkville Christian Association, having served as General Secretary at the 43rd Street Railroad Y. M. C. A. in Pittsburgh for thirteen years. During the war he served with the American Expeditionary Force in camp in his chosen line of work, where he was the friend of all the boys with whom he came in contact, and never considering it too much of a hardship to go out of his way to make life easy and relieve the sufferings of those boys who had gone to serve their country, even at a very great sacrifice to himself. Brother O'Neill's life was constantly dedicated to the consideration of the welfare of others, and he was a shining, outstanding example of Christian manhood.

About eight years ago, Brother O'Neill removed from Pittsburgh to New Brighton to still engage in Y. M. C. A. work, and, although removed from Pittsburgh, Brother O'Neill retained his membership in the Pittsburgh Brethren church, and attended his church as often as it was possible for him to do so.

Brother O'Neill was well known throughout our brotherhood for his work in advancing the work and cause of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Laura B. O'Neill, and one daughter, Ruth, 14 years of age.

Services were conducted in the United Presbyterian church at New Brighton, Pennsylvania, Friday afternoon, February 8th, after which the remains were brought to Pittsburgh, where a brief service was held in the Chapel in Allegheny Cemetery, followed by interment in the Receiving Vault in that cemetery, where the remains were placed temporarily until definite decision is reached as to a final resting place.

HITES—Mrs. Lydia Snoddy Hites, daughter of Christopher and Nancy Worst Martin, was born April 3, 1850 and departed this life January 15, 1929, aged 78 years, 9 months and 12 days. She was united in marriage to George Snoddy, September 24, 1871, and he died in 1885. She later married Cyrus Hites, November 5, 1918. She leaves to mourn their loss, her husband, six children, two sons, Clyde Snoddy and Charles Snoddy, four daughters—Mrs. Alameda Crawford, Mrs. Mary Ann Crawford, Mrs. Weaver, and Mrs. Miss Williams, and a host of friends and neighbors. Although a long sufferer, she put her trust in the Lord and patiently awaited his coming to take her home. Her death is not her loss, for she is now at home.

Angels have taken her out of our care. Dark is her room and empty her chair. She has gone to the home so peaceful and fair, To the home prepared for her.

Funeral services were conducted by Dr. J. Allen Miller, assisted by the pastor. Burial was made in the Fairhaven cemetery. GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

MYERS—Mary Jane Maxwell Myers was born September 5, 1858, and departed this life December 15, 1928, aged 70 years, 3 months and 10 days. She was united in marriage January 24, 1878 to David Sean Myers. To this union were born four children—Ben, Cora, Stanley and Clara Stanley dying in infancy. She has been a life long member of the Fairhaven Brethren church, always faithful when health permitted. She had fallen in bed for the past year, but her last sickness lasted but two weeks, during which time she was given every care that the love and devotion of her daughter Clara could render. But God willed that she should go and she leaves the sweet memory of a loving mother, a devoted friend, a faithful friend and a Christian character. She was a member of the Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War, her father having given his life when Mary Maxwell was but a small child. Her passing leaves a vacancy which never can be filled. Services by the writer and burial in the Fairhaven Cemetery. GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

LANOE—Emma Hoestand, second child of Andrew and Elizabeth Hoestand was born in Spencer township, December 1st, 1858, and departed this life January 15, 1929, at the age of 61 years, 1 month and 14 days. She became a member of the Brethren church at an early age. At the age of twenty-seven years she was united in marriage to William Lanoe. To this union were born four children. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, one son, one daughter, two grandsons, one sister and a host of other relatives and friends. One son, Elmer, preceded her in death in infancy and one daughter, Effie, April, 1923. She was a devoted wife and mother and was loved by those who knew her.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

VI. THE BRETHREN CHURCH AND HER MESSAGE

By Dr. W. S. Bell

Never has there been a time in the Christian dispensation that demanded a people set for the defense of the Gospel more than today.

The age is materialistic in its thinking and living. The spiritual streams of the nominal church are murky and frozen. It is a time when birth control is given greater emphasis than the new birth and the Kellogg peace treaty is given precedent over the Prince of Peace.

The great curse of our nominal Christianity is a liberalism willing to sacrifice the Virgin Born, make the cross of atonement null, the opened tomb mystic, a coming judgment void and the personal return of our Lord in glory a mockery.

This is not a time to compromise the great truths of the Gospel, or to shy at the cry of "toleration" from the intolerants.

Let us not be misled with the idea that the success of God's work depends on large numbers, but rather on the message of him who said, "All power is given unto me, in heaven and in earth." The supreme business of the church is not in the political arena, or socialistic field, but in bringing men in touch with the spiritual forces emanating from the fountain source of life.

The Brethren Church has a message for the world's needs. The ministry of the church has set forth the great outstanding fundamentals of that message in a way, that it cannot be covered with the smoke screen of unbelief and modernistic intrigue which is sapping the life and power of the nominal church.

A greater trust God never gave to any people. Our future and success depend upon our faithfulness in giving and living the message entrusted to us. This message needs to be made more prominent in our printed pages, from our pulpits and the pew.

Our opportunities were never larger. We were never better equipped for our task. The beginning of better things is before us. All the forces of hell and darkness cannot prevail against us if we are faithful to our trust.

Signs of the Times

A Pathetic Admission

It Makes a Difference

Roman Catholic "Salvation"

Courage and Advertising

by

Alva J. McClain

THOMAS ALVA EDISON, questioned about his formula for a happy life, answers, "I am not acquainted with anyone who is happy."

There is unspeakable pathos in these words. They mean, of course, that Mr. Edison, with all his great discoveries, has not found happiness for himself. Many people will think this strange, imagining that if they could have only a small part of what Edison has they would be perfectly happy. Many years of useful life, wealth, fame, noted friends, the gratitude of millions for the physical comforts he has given them—what more could one ask of life?

But to a man of eighty-two years what, after all, are a few millions of money more or less? What is fame? What is anything else the world has to offer? Only a few more very brief days and that marvelously fertile and busy brain will go down to the dust and be no more, according to Mr. Edison's philosophy. When that last summons comes, he will meet it with courage. But there will be no joy, unless—

The Christian will hope, and pray, that the great inventor will make one more discovery before he goes—the discovery of the "Light of the Knowledge of the Glory of God in the Face of Jesus Christ." In his presence there is "fullness of joy." At his right hand there are "pleasures forevermore."

WHAT difference does it make, the "Liberals" ask, what we think about Jesus, just as long as we follow his teachings? The answer is that it makes a world of difference.

In the first place, it makes a difference to us. Surely, men will follow the teachings of Jesus Christ better if they believe that God, not merely a man, is speaking to them. Once men are convinced, as some are today, that he is only a Jewish Rabbi, they will treat his commands as they would treat the commands of a Jewish Rabbi; interesting perhaps, but not imperative.

But more important, it makes a difference to Jesus Christ himself, what we think about him. He was always deeply interested in what men thought about him. "Whom do men say that I ... am," he demands of his disciples. And he is not satisfied until the right answer comes, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God."

The disciples called him "LORD," that august Name which in their own Scriptures was used to designate the infinite God, Jehovah. And what was his response to this great Name? He says, "Ye call me Lord ... and ye say well for so I am." It makes a difference to him what we think of him, and how we speak of him.

The confession of Jesus as LORD is no question for mere academic discussion, something we may treat indifferently as a debatable opinion. It is the very heart of Christianity. Failure to confess him as Lord, whether out of indifference or antagonism, reveals moral blindness. "The pure in heart shall see God." And those whose hearts have been cleansed from sin have always seen God in the Face of Jesus Christ.

ACROSS the front page of a Roman Catholic paper, left in the writer's mail box, in great newspaper headlines were these words, "Except you do penance, you shall all likewise perish, says Christ." Now, of course, careful Bible students know that Christ never said anything of the kind. But this is the priestly version of our Lord's words in Luke 13:5.

Inside the paper was an article instructing men how to be saved. The writer said, "The great remedy for evil is Jesus Christ's atonement on the Cross and the Grace of God which comes therefrom, especially in the Mass and the Sacraments."

What a mixture of truth and error! And yet not much worse than the mixture offered by some Protestants. For those who say that salvation is to be had through the Atonement plus the sacraments are really following the Roman scheme, although they may not realize this.

No one who tries to be saved by works, however good in themselves, can ever find assurance and peace of soul. Roman Catholics have never found it. Those who would be saved by keeping the commandments must keep them all, not merely one or two. And that is an endless road. Ask the Apostle Paul. He can tell you in his epistle to the Romans. Lasting peace comes only as we trust Christ and his finished work. We should withstand "to his face" anyone who may try to lead us back to the Roman system.

Works are the result of salvation, not the procuring cause of it. Until we have learned this, we know nothing about Christianity.

CONGRESS, very appropriately, has passed a special act expressing the nation's appreciation to Captain George Fried and his crew for their courageous rescue of thirty-two men from the wrecked Florida.

Captain Fried has also been "honored" by name, that will I do."—John 14:13-14. Compare with this that other great teaching of Jesus in Matthew 6:6.

More directly in answer to the question read this word from Matt. 6:8,—"For your Father knoweth what things you have need of, before ye ask him." If this is so then why pray? Because it is God's way of giving; because it is his appointed method by which we are to receive what he has to give. Matt. 7:7-11 and Luke 11:13.

13. How do you reconcile the verse in Matthew 21:22, where it says, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive," with the fact that God often does not give people what they ask for? Are we to conclude that so much of our praying lacks faith?

When we say that God is almighty and therefore can do anything we deceive ourselves if we mean "by anything," anything that we can think. When we say that God answers prayer it does not mean that he answers any sort of prayer, offered in any sort of spirit and for anything we can think of. In the first place the normal, and by that I mean the manner, form and address of a scriptural prayer, should be addressed to the Father, in the name of the Son, and should be offered in the Holy Spirit. John 14:13; 17:16 and Jude 18. But there is another aspect to effectual prayer, and one that is often overlooked. It is found so clearly stated in 1 John 5:14 that I quote it, "And this is the boldness which we have toward him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us ..." Another hindrance to answered prayer is stated in James 4:3. "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures." Here then are three essential conditions to answered prayer. First then it must be prayer offered "in the Holy Spirit." If this means anything at all it means that one must be right with God and his fellows. Even then when we pray our petitions must be "according to his will." Not according to ours but according to his. And further the prayer must be free from all selfish motives. It goes without saying that it must be offered in faith. Failure in any one of these four essential points means, in my judgment, failure to receive an answer.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by

J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

12. What is the use of prayer if God knows all our needs before we pray?

This is an interesting and suggestive question. The opportunity is afforded to give more than a mere answer. Let us think hard on this doctrine of prayer. 1. The most casual reading of the Bible will show what a large place prayer holds in the life of the child of God. God's people are a praying people. 2. To pray is a positive command of God. See Col. 4:2 and 1 Thess. 5:17. 3. Our Lord himself made answer to prayer one of his most precious promises to us. I must quote it: "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my

Time to Challenge Cigarette Propagandists

One of the most conspicuous public nuisances and at the same time one of the most glaring vicious influences is ubiquitous cigarette advertisement. It takes every shape and form that will gain public attention and makes use of every medium of communication and influence that money can buy. In secular magazines that come to our desk, in daily and weekly newspapers, in store windows and in street cars, on posters and billboards it shows its deceptive face. No money or skill is spared in the intensive campaign to make the cigarette and cigarette smoking more popular. The immense fortunes accumulated by the tobacco manufacturers are being used to promote the most extensive propaganda in behalf of the "coffin nails" that this country has ever seen. And to a very large extent this campaign is succeeding in building up in every phase of our national life an attitude favorable to cigarette smoking; it is developing what we may call a cigarette complex, so that almost any place under the sun except in the church and in buildings where insurance policies forbid, smoking seems so much to be expected and so perfectly proper that to object marks one as unreasonable and fanatic. The pulpit has become all but silent about the dangers of cigarette smoking and the use of tobacco in general; Sunday schools in many cases are neutral, if not apologetic; and we noticed one church paper recently ridiculed the idea of interfering with a man's private affairs to the extent of denouncing smoking; and many others are keeping significantly silent on the subject. It is time to challenge such propagandists and to call for an awakening.

But, thank God, not all voices have been silenced. There are still the proverbial "seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal," and some of them are among the outstanding voices of the country. A number of splendid church papers that come to our desk are speaking out courageously against the cigarette and against cigarette propaganda, and some of the most influential religious publications of a general nature are taking the cigarette manufacturers to task. Most significant of these is the Christian Herald of which Dr. Daniel A. Poling is Editor-in-Chief. Dr. Poling has issued an open letter to the cigarette magnates that challenges their propaganda methods in a way that makes him not merely a crusader, but a prophet of a better day. His statement that these mighty tobacco trusts are exploiting womanhood and encouraging the stunting of the bodies and the dwarfing of the minds of boys and girls for the sake of gain is true as it is lamentable.

We are helping to extend the influence of this mighty voice by republishing Dr. Poling's open letter, which is as follows:

An Open Letter to

The American Cigarette Companies:

This letter is addressed to you on the basis of two facts specifically: first, present day cigarette propaganda to capture women and more women for the cigarette habit; second, recent advertising—which grows steadily in volume—to persuade the smoker that he cannot smoke too many.

You will understand that I speak not merely my own convictions. I speak, first of all, as an American father who, with an American father's concern for his own children, and for all children, challenges current cigarette advertising. I speak, in the second place, as the President of the World's Society of Christian Endeavor; as the representative, therefore, of more than four million young people who share with me the deep hostility against this advertising; and as Editor-in-Chief of the Christian Herald, which goes to more than a quarter of a million homes.

Gentlemen, you face here the deep-seated resentment of a vast number of smokers and non-smokers; a resentment that is bound to have expression—a resentment that receives its final authority from all who would have American youth and American life physically fit and morally sound.

Within the week one of the most successful cigarette advertising salesmen said with downright passion, "We are fools. We are killing our own game." I am reminded of the words of an Ancient: "When an evil becomes intolerable it touches the point of cure," and of that other classical quotation, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

You may feel that you do not need to fear the extremist, the "fanatic." But when some of your number enter thus ruthlessly the precincts of the American home and of American health, they cause smokers and non-smokers of every creed and class to make common cause.

"Reach for a ——— instead of a sweet," I read on the inside of a popular magazine's back cover. The advertisement carries the face and facsimile signature of a distinguished general. "Reach for a ——— instead of a sweet," but ten thousand other institutions reach for axes!

"Those who would require steady nerves are turning to ———: We smoke all we want and keep fit." This is the caption of an advertising page from a Detroit newspaper, a page that the executive leader of a great Youth Movement has forwarded to me with the demand that as International President of that organization I "take action." On this same page a novelist, a nurse, a steamship officer, a newspaper writer, and a deep-sea diver are pictured as smoking all they want," and keeping fit for any and everything.

In a recent editorial of the Journal of the American Medical Association, I read the following:

"Who would have thought ten years ago that cigarettes would be sold to the American public not only by billboard displays of handsome damsels revealing unusual quantities of hosiery and epidermis as they nonchalantly exhale streams of smoke from adenoidal nostrils, but actually by insistence on the healthful qualities of certain brands? Ah! brothers, we have come a long way in the passing decade. . . . !"

Manufacturers of ——— cigarettes having secured, they claim, statements from 20,679 physicians that ——— were less irritating than other cigarettes, are promulgating a campaign in which they assert that these cigarettes do not cut the wind or impair the physical condition, and that ——— satisfies the longing for things that make you fat without interfering with a normal appetite for healthful foods.' To which the simple reply is made: "Hooley!"

Many people eat too much sugar and gorge on pastry! But the human appetite is a delicate mechanism, and the attempt to urge that it be aborted or destroyed by the regular use of tobacco is essentially vicious.

Gentlemen, these advertisers and others of their kind are heading for disaster. When they go, they will not travel alone.

This letter is not written to represent my personal conviction with regard to the cigarette. I write now to voice a common and rapidly rising judgment against specific advertising practices. I write in advocacy of those values, those fine things of body and mind that business in general highly regards and that, as a sacred trust, belong to us all.

Womanhood is being exploited for trade. Excess is being encouraged as efficiency. Boys and girls in the crucial years of adolescence and pre-adolescence are being led by the uniform and advertised commendation of a commander of America's expeditionary forces to stunt their bodies and dwarf their minds, and to do this, gentlemen, with the implied sanction of patriotism. What are you going to do about it?

Your action should be prompt and decisive.

Very sincerely,

DANIEL A. POLING.

"All One Body We"

The church is strong when it is united, when there is a feeling on the part of the individual members that they belong not to one section, or class, or group, but together and to God. When men are inclined to boast that one is a "progressive" and another a "conservative"; that one represents a superior type of loyalty and another a still better type of loyalty; that one is from one section and another from another section; that one represents an important city church and another a small rural church, then men stand apart from one another and are not strong. When they boast and beguile themselves with claims of individual superiority, they separate themselves and weaken their cause.

It is natural for men to be proud of the country of their birth. The last man of us who was born in the United States would be ready to say where occasion was proper, "I am proud to be American-born." We find Paul on occasion declaring proudly that he was a free-born Roman. So also might one very naturally speak with pride and deep thankfulness of the church in which he was born into the kingdom of God; or of the manner of his conversion, if it was significant; or the outstanding man under whose preaching he received the Gospel. This is all perfectly natural, but the thing that is natural is not always the most Christian, and to emphasize one's individual claims to distinction does not make for unity.

At the beginning of the struggle for independence, when the fifty-five delegates from the eleven colonies met at Smith's Tavern in Philadelphia, on September 5, 1774, the question was raised as to their numerical claims for representation. The jealousies that had formerly separated the colonies were forgotten in the common cause for justice and they refused to emphasize their respective claims. Patrick Henry stood up and said, "I am not a Virginian; I am an American." That was the feeling of them all, and that was what gave them power to cope with their common enemy. That is the key to the church's strength today. As we stand faced with the church's great task, let us each say, "I am not from this state or that, nor from this group or that; I am a Christian." Loyalty to Christ alone and to his Word, will give unity and strength. That is the hope of our future.

"We are not divided, All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine, One in charity."

Pastors who would like some splendid suggestions on teaching the church to tithe may get them free by writing to Layman Company of Chicago. For further information turn to the "Announce-ment" department.

The editor has received several copies of a neat little church bulletin which Brother Louis P. Clapper, printer and publisher of Louisville, Ohio, is supplying gratis to the Louisville church each week. Brother A. E. Whitted is the pastor.

Brother and Sister J. L. Gingrich, of the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, were recently made to pass through the "valley of the shadow" because of the death of their little daughter of nineteen months. We extend to them the sympathies of the Evangelist family.

Evangelistic campaigns began at Rittman, Ohio, February 24th with Brother B. F. Owen as evangelist and at Masontown, Pennsylvania, the day following with Dr. Charles A. Bame as evangelist. Brother Floyd Sibert is pastor at Rittman and Brother Herman Koontz at Masontown. Remember these meetings in your prayers.

A correspondent from the Brethren church at Roanoke, Virginia, expresses his approval of the recently published article by Brother Ashman on "The Unity of the Brethren," about which we made favorable comment in our editorial last week. He also informs us that the Roanoke church is taking on new hope since they now have a pastor in the person of Brother H. E. Eppley.

Brother Leo Polman, who writes the first of a series of articles on church music this week and whose home church is the Second church of Los Angeles, is on an evangelistic mission in the Northwest, working now in the Yakima Valley, with Rev. Britton Ross, evangelist. It will be remembered that they closed a meeting some weeks ago at Harrah, Washington, with eighty-seven confessions.

President Jacobs gives us an installment of College News this week. One item reveals the fact that the college basketball team has given a very good account of itself this year, and they are a clean bunch of players, too. A school that combines skill and manliness in its sports is the kind that will attract the better class of students. It will be noticed that the professors are being frequently used as speakers for special occasions in and about Ashland.

Several of our pastors are making use of the tabloid folders offered by The Layman Company of Chicago, in making their church calendars, thus accomplishing a two-fold purpose,—namely, bringing the Gospel principles of tithing to their people and economizing on the matter of calendar making. Some are economizing further by using a rotoscope in making their church calendars. We have seen some very attractive calendars made in this way

The Brethren Christian Endeavor Union, of Cambria county, Pennsylvania, recently held their quarterly mass meeting in the second church of Johnstown, of which Brother Dyoll Belote is pastor. And this church's society succeeded in capturing the banner for the largest per cent of their number in attendance. This union effort seems to be working well for the cause of Christian Endeavor in that section. There ought to be other groups of Brethren churches where similar plans would be feasible.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland church, reports a very much enjoyed meeting recently held in the Ashland church with Dr. F. F. Holsopple, of Roanoke, Virginia, one of the able preachers of the Church of the Brethren, as the evangelist. It was a time of splendid fellowship as well of good gospel preaching and the Church of the Brethren people of the community displayed a commendable spirit of cooperation. Five are reported baptized and others await baptism.

Our fellow editor, Brother Quinter M. Lyon, tells our readers something they need to know about the six-year cycle of the Uniform Lessons for the Sunday school. You will be interested in getting at least a little understanding of how our lesson programs are arranged. Then, don't forget that the best lesson helps for any Brethren Sunday school are to be found at the Brethren Publishing House at Ashland, Ohio. If you are not now using all you can of the Sunday school material that your own House publishes, write to the Business Manager and find out how thoroughly we can meet the needs of your school.

The work at Hamlin, Kansas, under the pastoral leadership of Brother W. H. Schaffer, is aggressive in all its departments, and its interest in Bible study has been sustained since Brother Beal's meeting there. These good people are loyal to all the interests of the brotherhood, being conscientious in observing all special offering days. We are glad to note that the pastor has been blessed with a little "assistant in the person of Herbert Paul Schaffer," as our correspondent informs us, and we extend the hearty congratulations of the Evangelist family to Brother and Sister Schaffer.

Last week our "In the Shadow" column carried the obituary of Brother H. F. E. O'Neill, one of our widely known laymen, and until a few years ago chairman of our National Board of Benevolences. The Pittsburgh Brethren church was proud to own him as a member and a deacon of their congregation. During the week we received some newspaper clippings from New Brighton, his home at the time of his death, and where he was engaged in Y. M. C. A. work, and we were impressed with the way in which the people of the community and all the pastors of the city cooperated to show respect to his memory. The papers spoke of him as "one of the best known and highly respected citizens of New Brighton." He spent twenty-five years in the Y. M. C. A. work and he was unusually well fitted for that calling. We extend to his wife and daughters the sympathies of the Evangelist family.

It was indeed a "Victory Revival" that was recently held at the Third Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where Brother J. L. Gingrich is the pastor. The evangelist was Brother Charles A. Ashman of the First church of that city. The meeting was held in the midst of adverse circumstances and yet in the face of all hindrances great success crowned their efforts. A total of seventy-four have been added to the church, sixty-four during the meeting and ten since. And the pastor adds that the evangelistic spirit continues. We are not surprised that it does. A pastor who will not allow even so heavy a burden as the sorrow for the loss of a little child to dampen his ardor for soul winning, will find his people being gripped by the contagion of his own evangelistic zeal. Both pastor and evangelist say only tried, sane methods of evangelism were employed, and among these, we feel safe in saying, from reading the reports, were faithful preaching of the Word, intensive personal work, intercessory prayer, and wise preparation for the campaign. Those factors ought to be in every such meeting.

The Bible: The Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

(PUBLISHED IN TWO PARTS—PART I)

Harriet Beecher Stowe, a remarkable little woman and greater than many other Americans among her kind, once exclaimed majestically: "I am certain that the constant contact of the Bible with my childish mind was a great mental stimulant as it certainly was the cause of a singular and vague pleasure. The wild poetic parts of the prophecies, with their bold figures, vivid exclamations, and strange Oriental names and images, filled me with a quaint and solemn delight." These "phrases" and "pathetic stories"—"fixed an indelible mark in my imagination."

Mark the words please—"an indelible mark!" Yes, a fixed mark in her own vivid and picturesque imagination. Little wonder that such a statement should come forth from so lively a soul. We naturally expected it.

On other days and in other connections, Mrs. Stowe gave utterance to other statements which "moderns" ought to ponder. When asked by an honest inquirer relative to the origin of her matchless story, she usually replied: "I the author of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'? No, indeed, the Lord himself wrote it and I was but the humblest of instruments in his hand. To him alone should be given all the praise." Here, then, my fellow mortals, is the divine origin of a book which shook America from center to circumference. Avers Livingstone rightly, in writing to his daughter Agnes, "the death knell of slavery was rung by a woman's hand."

But her immortal classic has also a strictly human origin. An indulgence in further quoting will illustrate this point. After the passage of the Fugitive Slave Act, Mrs. Stowe received countless letters depicting the horrors of the Slave traffic. One friend wrote to her: "Now, Hattie, if I could use a pen as you can, I would write something that would make this whole nation feel what an accursed thing slavery is."

Well, she did and this is how she came to do it. I quote again from her classic biographer: "A member of Mrs. Stowe's family well remembers the scene in the little parlor in Brunswick when the letter alluded to was received. Mrs. Stowe herself read it aloud to the assembled family, and when she came to the passage, 'I would write something that would make this whole nation feel what an accursed thing Slavery is,' Mrs. Stowe rose up from her chair, crushing the letter in her hand, and, with an expression on her face that stamped itself on the mind of her child, (her son and biographer) said: 'I will write something, I will if I live.'"

Thank God she did live and did write.

The Bible "fixed an indelible mark in my imagination." "The Lord himself wrote it, and I was but the humblest of instruments in his hand."

"I will write something, I will if I live."

Seemingly, there is apparent contradiction in the latter three statements. In reality there is not, especially when one remembers the ancient dictum "In the beginning God" and in his "image (or likeness) . . . made he them." If the Creator could create a human personality with all but divine attributes it can readily be understood how he could influence Mrs. Stowe, and others of Biblical fame.

However, there is a strange difference between the incidents in Harriet Beecher Stowe's life and those occurring in the careers of the writers of the Scriptures. Such are observed in the fact that God spoke more directly to his own than he did in the case of the writer of the fifties. Numerous are the passages indicating "God spoke" thus and so to men. The authorship of the Bible, more varied, genius-like, and accurate than that of any other book or books compiled by different authors, is in the main divine. Human men were used as his instruments to set forth his words to the world. And they did their work as Mrs. Stowe did hers, amazingly conscious of the fact of the overwhelming nature of the words and scenes they were handling.

Jehovah also spoke in divers ways and manners to the prophets and others of the divine economy in dreams, through angels, et cetera, and finally through his own Son, Jesus Christ. The revelation of God to man was a continuous process extending over countless generations and it has been adequately set forth in the Bible.

That the Bible is more than a book no one will doubt. It is in reality a library of books—of classics, but more than classics. It is not, for instance, a mere compilation like Dr. Eliot's "Harvard Classics" of fifty-one volumes of the earth's wisdom and lore. It is a Divine Library of the highest order, of the heavenlies heavenly, and not of the earth earthly. It is the oracle of heaven and God.

To the task of pointing out some striking and interesting characteristics relative to our Bible, I now wish to address myself. They are legion, but a few of them will be set forth for our consideration.

The Bible is the universal book. It is universally conceived, printed, circulated, and loved. Its truths fit the needs of philosophers as well as African Bushmen; its message finds men where they are—in poverty or wealth; in disease or health; in light or darkness; at work or play; in ignorance or learning; in dejection or hope; in love or hate; in bliss or misery.

Why men and women do not read the Book that has made history in every age, in our twentieth century, is not wholly beyond the comprehension of thinking men. For one thing, modern readers are not reading much—if anything. The libraries are not frequented as are the movies, vaudeville and burlesque shows. Bathing beaches, beauty shows, dance halls, athletic contests, and county fairs still continue to do amazing business. The natural consequence is that nobody simply ever finds any time in which to do their well-intentioned reading. Mother has club or civic aspiration; proverbial "dad" is absorbed in his business with its intricate ramifications; sister Susan at fifteen threatens to capture and dissolve her "man," and Authur has a "sugar baby." The hired cook and general housekeeper, Annie, collects, revolutionizes, and literally radiates the neighborhood scandal, which may or may not have reached the itching ears of some wild-eyed newspaper reporter. In finis, the family reading is confined to the "funnies" and the photogravure sections of the Sunday newspaper.

Those who actually do read a little now and then confine themselves to the following most popular and up-to-date materials listed in The Bookman of last November and the Reader's Digest of January, 1929 respectively:

General

Mother India, Katherine Mayo, Harcourt; Strange Interlude, Eugene O'Neill, Liveright; Disraeli, Andre' Maurois, Appleton; Napoleon, Emil Ludwig, Liveright; Trader Horn, Alfred Aloysius Horn and Ethelreda Lewis, Simon; Safari, Martin Johnson, Putnam; The Royal Road to Romance, Richard Halliburton, Bobbs; My Life, Isadora Duncan, Liveright; The Intelligent Woman's Guide

Fiction

The Bridge of San Luis Rey, Thornton Wilder, A. & C. Boni; Swan Song, John Galsworthy, Scribner; The Greene Murder Case, S. S. Van Dine, Scribner; Wintersmoon, Hugh Walpole, Doubleday; Beau Ideal, P. C. Wren, Stokes; The Island Within, Ludwig Lewisohn, Harper; Two Flights Up, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Doubleday; The Age of Reason, Philip Gibbs, Doubleday; Bad Girl, Vina Delmar, Harcourt; Brook Evans, Susan Glaspell, Strokes; Death Comes for the Archbishop, Willa Cather, Knop; Kitty, Warwick Deeping, Knop.

Some of the books referred to are quite good while others are only transitory and fleeting.

Also did you note the Bible is excluded from this list compiled by Mr. Stockbridge, life member of the American Library Association in cooperation with the Public Libraries of America?

The plain unvarnished truth about our reading is this: we read, if at all, spasmodically, haphazardly, and oftentimes indiscriminately. We quote from the Bible's pages with reservations and generally the best truth is reserved for more intelligent and serious students to propound. In truth, we read the Scriptures like we sneak in occasional cat-naps, with the emphasis on the sneak, and usually when nobody is around. We skip over the external surface of the most fetid material and reap the usual "nubbin crop."

Another reason why more men and women do not read the Bible is because of the materialistic and naturalistic bent of our day. That spirit—mainly the hookum of the so-called intelligentsia—boohoo's the Christian religion year in and year out. The grist ground out of the mechanistic mill during 1927, 1928, and now in 1929, makes our religion a thing suitable for women, kids, and cows. And this is done in spite of the fact that history proves that the Christian faith has accompanied enlightenment and freedom. Of course, the regenerated soul can forgive such blatant and dogmatic naturalism and I will pass the matter by suggesting that the Christian is the strongest and richest man in the earth, and withal the most meek and lovable.

The Divine Library contains the greatest literature in the world. The Hebrews excelled all others in their day, and ours, in the art of literary expression. That we owe more to the Semites than to the Greeks is a fact not generally recognized. Morally and intellectually, Moses, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Paul and Jesus have aided us far more than have Homer, Euclid, Plato, Aristotle and Socrates. The Romans and Germans and English speaking peoples might also be included along with the Greeks.

Types of literature represented in the Sacred Writings are Narrative, Poetry, Reflection, Essay, Prophecy, Gospel, Oratory, and Letters. The preceding key words of Dr. Mullenburg's arrangement suggest mighty breadths, depths and heights. Think, for instance, of the majesty wrapped up in such a phrase as "And the sower went forth to sow;" of the beauty proclaimed in that well-loved sentiment: "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want;" of the courage manifested in the youth David when he met Goliath; of passionate, thrilling exultations of Israel in victory over her enemies and of her woe and despondency in defeat. The shouting Gideonites and the weeping Jeremiah depict both.

Think also of the other characteristic types of literature set forth in the annals of Israel's past. Here are some pertinent samples. Love Lyrics, History, Parables, Investives, Dramas, Satires, Lamentations, Prayers, Biographical Sketches, Orations, Speeches and Stories. Seemingly, there is no end and that is especially true of stories. Wherein all the books of the world can you find such a list as these:

Joseph, Gen. 37:48; Samson, Judges 14:16; Ruth, The Whole Production; David and Goliath, 1 Sam. 19; David and Jonathan, 1 Sam. 18:20; Esther, The Entire Work; The Good Samaritan, Luke 10:25-37; The Prodigal Son, Luke 15:11-32; The Ship Wreck of Saint Paul, Acts 27.

The Old and New Testament stories always portray human nature as it is. Goodness and badness in character are stressed proportionately to fit the character under consideration. For instance Jacob, who inherited his trait of lying through Abraham, Rebeckah, Laban and others, and possessed a record as spotted as the backs of his uncle's cattle, is presented as a wily, shrewd fellow. Well, he was. Heredity and environment always tell. In his old age Jacob had to atone for his youthful and rather wretched behavior by seeing his beloved son, Joseph, apparently blotted out of existence.

On the other hand, Jacob's true love for Rachel is commendable. In the meeting of these two Hebrews there is a drama of worth which someone with dramatic ability should compose. It should be entitled "Love at First Sight" for the Scripture plainly asserts: "And Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept." There are three acts in the story each separated by a comma. Further dilation upon the sacred narrative would spoil its happy sequence.

But, poor Leah, Rachel's sister, who was pawned off on Jacob in a forced manner, was not so fortunate as to enjoy his love. Uncle Laban's mind was stronger than his heart in this transaction which must have made Leah miserable and unhappy. She is to be pitied because she had weak eyes. Her sister Rachel was beautiful and desirable.

However, Jacobs's goodness is evinced by his consecration to Jehovah after failure, and the reward of a life practically well-lived is closed with the discovery that his son, Joseph, whom he had given up as dead, was Prime Minister in Egypt. Out of sympathy and magnanimity Joseph ministered to his father's needs. The conflicting emotions of the Joseph story are colossal and worthy of endless repetition.

Essentials for a Successful Song Service

By Leo Polman, Song Leader

I.—The Accompanist

The purpose of these few paragraphs regarding the Essentials for a Successful Song Service, are for no other purpose than to help some one who is interested in the music department of the church. It is hoped that some suggestions will at least be of help to each of those interested parties about whom we are to write, namely: The Accompanist, The Song Leader, The Audience, The Choir. This by no means will be an exhaustive study, but rather dealing with the outstanding essentials. Many others could be added and perhaps some would not agree with these given. Your queries are invited.

One of the first essentials for a successful Song Service is to secure the best pianist or organist that is possible. This does not mean that it is one who is an accomplished, highly polished musician. For oftentimes these highly polished players of classical music cannot adapt themselves to Gospel music. Surely the church should have the best. This department of the church should be in training as well as the teachers should be in training and other workers for the church.

The qualities desired in this one should be, first: One who is a Christian. This needs no emphasis. But I have known churches to use accompanists who were not Christian.

Second: he should be one who has a good sense of time. This is very essential. For too many times the congregation is taken well on its way to the land of nod, by too slow playing, and the natural result, slow singing. There is the other extreme also. Some are disposed to make "jazz" out of Gospel music. Oh, what a pity for one to drag sacred music in the realm of the world. This will sooner or later bring the song service to anything but a service of praise and worship, and will cause it to be cheapened, if not detested in the eyes of the majority. Such players are a hindrance and not a help to any service.

Third: One who can fill in full chords, maintain strong emphasis in the bass section, and still support the audience without attracting attention to the accompaniment, is desirable.

An important feature to accompaniment is, that the pianist's introduction to a hymn or gospel song, should not be weak. But to the contrary, firm and up to the tempo in which the song is to be sung. A weak accompanist will wreck, and I use this word in its proper meaning, the best of song leaders, as well as the song services.

There is a great need of pianists who play in a prayerful spirit, with their talent wholly given to the Lord, and a consciousness that their work is to support the singers and bring out the best in them, and not simply to make a big noise on the piano or the organ.

The next article will have to do with the "Essential Qualities of a Successful Song Service—The Leader."

The Minister's Commission

By Claud Studebaker

All power is given unto me . . . , Go ye therefore and teach, . . . baptizing them . . . teaching them to observe . . . Matthew 28:18, 19, 20.

These are the final words of our Lord to his disciples, just prior to his ascension to the right hand of God. Accomplishing the Father's plan of redemption for sinful man, he now departs to appear in the presence of God for us. "For by his own blood he entered into the holy place once, having obtained eternal redemption for us." "For Christ is not entered into the holy place made with hands but into heaven itself." Now fully conscious of his own infinite power and wisdom, also of the great need of the world of mankind, he gives unto his followers the program and the authority to put it in operation, that will accomplish the eternal plan to save from sin every man in all the world for all time who will believe it.

The commissioned officer, of course, must receive his commission from a sovereign. It cannot be changed by a subordinate, or by his own disposition or temper. Our commission is from our Lord, our Master, the pre-eminent one, who is before all things and by whom all things consist, the head of the body the church, who is and was and is to come. There is no questioning his authority, for he upholds all things by the word of his power, and inherits all things; so he shall call us to account for the carrying out of his great program, given in his commission to us. It is not reasonable to think that one in supreme authority, with all knowledge, fully cognizant of the importance of the work to be done, and the means by which it shall be done, should brook any interference with his program by the wise men of this enlightened day. We know some things, but all the new ideas of men who tell us the church has failed, are absolutely impotent to accomplish even in any small degree the work of saving the world to righteousness.

It does not require a pessimist, nor even a very close observer, to discover that there is a letting down all along the line in the preaching and teaching of vital Christian doctrine and consequent lowering of the gospel standards of self-denial in Christian conduct. New ideas are not always improved ones and new social relations do not make for purity of life and conduct. The church is not performing according to her commission. There is the greatest babel of voices contending for authority, the writing of books without number, the conceited assumption of authority by leaders telling what should be done and how to do it, ignoring the authority of our Lord, when he said, "All power is given unto me both in heaven and in earth, therefore—go—preach the gospel—baptizing them . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded . . . I am with you to the end." Many ministers make the commission as a joke, disregard the sacred word, cast doubt on the wisdom and efficiency of the Gospel, and, boasting of their own wisdom, they become fools, seemingly ignorant of their folly. How foolish, indeed, for some mere man to present a plan for the salvation of the world from sin. God has commissioned us to put his plan in operation. Preach the gospel. If the sovereign Lord said to preach the Gospel, what right has the minister so commissioned to do otherwise?

Our work is positive—an offensive drive, if you please, we were never commissioned to defend the Gospel and reform the world. True, we were told to contend for the faith, but the faith is only vindicated and made living by the preaching of the gospel. It occurs to me, if the energy of the ministers was given to a plain setting forth of the Gospel as God's plan of salvation for lost men, we would have more conviction of sin, more calling on the name of the Lord for salvation, more stability of faith, reflected in godly living. That man who rejects the Lordship of Jesus Christ leaves his soul without a sovereign and of course will incline to the lust of his own heart, and will be encouraged in it by his Satanic majesty. The man who spends his time and talent in apologetics and defense may meet a certain need for the strengthening of faith, but the Gospel fearlessly proclaimed makes its own defense and carries with it a message of hope and life to a world in death. It may be that "the preaching of the cross is, to them that perish, foolishness, but to us which are saved, it is the power of God." Hence Paul's declaration, "But we preach Christ crucified. We are becoming debaters over the details with a nose for heresy when our time should be spent in a positive and definite preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We are calling many things Gospel nowadays, but there is but one, that is centered around the Immanuel. Redeemer.

We need not so much of the scientific, literary, and philosophic quotations from men of eminence, to fill up space and give our sermons a flavor of intellectualism, but a message from God shot through with the fire of the Holy Ghost, that calls sin by the correct name and is not too refined and intellectual to stand beside the cross of Calvary and there endure the scorn of haughty pride and identify oneself with the sacrifice. God knows we have nothing in our own right to be proud of, notwithstanding our family tree, education, culture, etc.

I have no criticism for education. God purposed that we should train mind and body and have dominion of the earth, and to do his sovereign will. When we assume authority and concoct some new panacea for salvation, we invalidate our credentials, are no longer an ambassador for Christ, but are become anarchists, bigots, and should leave the church of Jesus Christ and no longer pretend to be working under the commission to "Preach the Gospel. "Faith comes by hearing," and I am sure that much of the doubt in the world is caused by not hearing the great truths of the Gospel preached. Many fail to attend church and many who do hear the trenchant truth so diluted as to take off the edge, so there is no conviction, or begetting of faith.

Taking seriously our commission to preach the Gospel, I consider the great need of the day. If you do not believe it, do not try to preach it; take your place in the congregation and hear some true minister preach till God gives you faith. Of all the men who need our help, I consider the intelligent man without faith the most needy. The great facts of the Gospel are still vital, the sovereignty of God, the reality of sin, the need of redemption, resurrection and eternal judgment.

Not only shall the true minister preach the Gospel but he must baptize. Now some will say that is not essential. By what authority can you omit the baptism? If Christ commands you to baptize, who shall repudiate it? I insist on the baptism without an apology or an explanation. Only God knew the need and has so commissioned me, therefore, I preach the Gospel, baptize those who will believe it and teach them to observe the commands of our Lord. This is God's way; what men may say I am careful not to take too seriously. Man has always sought out many inventions, he has persisted in going in his own way, and rejecting the way of the Lord, to his own destruction. He resents authority and follows his own lust to his own destruction. I pray God that the Brethren church in her ministry to the world, may not become wise in her own conceit, but may retain her faith in the word of her Lord and go forth with the insignia of his commission graven upon her heart, preaching the Gospel, baptizing believers and teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded. Then shall we have the presence of our Lord in our midst.

DEPAUW DROPS COMPULSORY TRAINING

President G. Bromley Oxnam has announced that compulsory military training at DePauw University would be dropped, and the military studies made optional in that institution. President Oxnam gave the following reasons for his action in the matter:

1. Since the 1928 General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church declared its opposition to compulsory military training in colleges and universities, the abolition of compulsory training at DePauw is necessary "To bring an agency of the church into harmony with the official position of the church.

2. The faculty at DePauw has already voted in favor of elective training.

3. There is nothing so essential in the course material itself that a candidate for a Bachelor's degree in Arts should be required to take the basic courses in military science.

4. Compulsory military training is not justified for preparedness, for "true preparedness is preparedness for peace."

5. Compulsory military training is not really patriotic, for "patriotism should be identified with those activities which lead toward the enrichment of the lives of all the people."

6. Under the National Defense Act the decision whether military training shall be compulsory or elective rests with the educational institution itself.

PROTEST GOVERNMENT SALOONS

Russia is having its own troubles with vodka. The government owns and runs the business from top to bottom, and gets the profits. Such an arrangement seems to be the sure thing in the Canadian plans, carried to its highest point of perfection. But in the city of Sverdlov, 1500 children marched to the local factory where their fathers are employed and presented this protest: "We protest against the $600 you spend every month for vodka while we are badly dressed and have no shoes." They urged their fathers to close the beer shops and prohibit the sale of vodka by the local cooperative.—The Baptist.

PROJECT PLAN IN MISSIONS BEFORE THE CIVIL WAR

It has been frequently said that there is "nothing new under the sun." The Project Plan, which is being so cordially accepted by the churches and is helping so much to visualize the work of our missionaries in the home and foreign fields, was suggested as far back as 1860 at the fourteenth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association, by the adoption of a resolution "that the officers of the Association be requested during the coming year to bring to the churches the desirableness of their adopting missionaries in the home and foreign field, communicating directly with them, and pledging to give them support through the agency of this Association."—The Congregationalist.

THE VATICAN GAINS POLITICAL SOVEREIGNTY

If any one has had doubts that the Vatican still was ambitious for temporal power and restless under the necessity of recognizing the laws of any state as having power over it, those doubts must have been dispelled by the events that have transpired between the Vatican and the Italian government in recent weeks. The fact is, Roman Catholicism is not merely a church, but is now a sovereign state, as much independent of the dictates of any other government as is our own United States. This has been brought about by the pact recently signed by the Italian government and the Roman Catholic authorities on February 11th, in the Lateran Palace. The pope's new territory is not large, only the Vatican grounds and a small parcel of land adjacent to it, but it is enough to give the pope freedom from his self-imposed imprisonment. Since 1870 when a nobler Italy took away the Vatican's land holdings, the successors of Pope Pius IX have followed his example of sulking.

State that the contracting parties recognize the advisability of eliminating every reason for enmity between them.

Reaffirm the principle in the Italian constitution by which the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion is the only state religion in Italy.

Recognize the property, exclusive dominion and sovereign jurisdiction of the holy see over the Vatican.

Create the "City of the Vatican."

Provide that Vatican vehicles and aircraft shall have the right to circulate over Italian territory.

Provide territorial immunities for certain edifices outside the Vatican City.

Recognize the Vatican's right to send diplomats to foreign countries and to receive diplomats from those countries.

Establish normal diplomatic relations between Italy and the holy see.

Agree that artistic and scientific treasures within the Vatican City shall continue to remain visible to students and visitors.

Provide that Italy will punish in its territory, at the request of the Vatican, persons who committed crimes in the Vatican City.

Provide that the holy see will deliver to Italy persons who take refuge in the Vatican City and who are accused of acts considered criminal by both states.

Express the wish of the Vatican to remain extraneous to temporal competitions between states and from international congresses unless parties in conflict appeal to its mission of peace.

Territory is Neutral

Declare the Vatican territory neutral and inviolable.

Declare the Roman question definitely and irrevocably settled.

Declare the holy see recognizes the kingdom of Italy and Italy recognizes the Vatican City.

Declare Italy recognizes matrimony as a sacrament regulated by canon law and specifies the procedure.

Reserves to ecclesiastical courts cases concerning the nullity of marriages.

Give Italian civil authorities the consent of the holy see to judge cases of separation.

Religious Teaching Compulsory

Make compulsory the teaching of religion in elementary and secondary schools. Declares Italy recognizes Catholic organizations which keep their activity outside of political parties.

Provide for the solution of any future difficulty in the interpretation of the concordat by mutual friendly understanding.

Provide that the holy see accepts in settlement of its financial relations with Italy in consequence of the fall of temporal power, 750,000,000 lire cash and 1,000,000,000 lire in Italian state consuls.

Provide that the agreement, concordat and financial convention must be ratified by the pope and the king of Italy within four months from day of signature and that they will be in effect from the moment of ratification.

A NEW DAY IN TURKEY

It is now claimed that the Turk is no longer terrible, but has definitely turned from the allurements of war to the pursuits of peace. As proof of this change one may submit the radically changed status of Turkish women. "At present the Turkish government is not only allowing the attendance of women at the Constantinople Woman's College, the only institution of learning in the country open to women, but is encouraging them to attend. Positions are available for practically every graduate, of whom 60 per cent go into the teaching field." With Turkey's women turning to education and teaching, it will be but a matter of a few years until the work of transforming the people of this land from the inside out will be complete.—The Gospel Messenger.

INDIAN SENTIMENT

The "India Witness" is authority for the following item which indicates that prohibition is gaining ground:

A surprising thing has happened in the Punjab. Citizens of the town of Taran Taran asked for and secured from the Government of the Province the right to hold a local option election on whether the liquor shops in the town should remain open or be closed. Over fifteen hundred voters went to the polls and every one of them voted "dry." This is probably the most decisive result yet recorded in a local option election in any country. The nearest approach to it we have known of occurred in Kentucky, more than twenty years ago, when about the same number of votes were cast and all were dry except seventeen, all of which were recorded by the two liquor dalers, their relatives and employees.—Free Methodist.

RELIGION AND A WORLD'S FAIR

Chicago is setting things in order for a World's Fair scheduled for 1933. Of the interests to be stressed one of the city's well known ministers recently spoke as follows: "The last World's Fair here did more than anything else to interpret religion to the world, and now we must outdo that interpretation in a new relationship to the world in 1933."—The Gospel Messenger.

Our Worship Program

OUTLINE OF "THE FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER ON THE CHURCH"

MONDAY, March 4—"I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, be made for all that are in authority" (1 Tim. 2:1,2). Read Rom. 13:1-7. Today a new president of our country is inaugurated. Whether you voted for him or not, he is your president, and the same is true for me. As such he is entitled to your loyal support and to mine, and to the humble but earnest prayers of every Christian that divine guidance and strength may be given him. This is part of the duty of every Christian citizen.

Almighty God, Ruler of nations, Judge of all men, we humbly beseech thy blessing upon him who has been called by the voice of the people to be the chief magistrate of our beloved country. Endue him with wisdom, and with the fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom. Let the spirit which was in Christ Jesus reign in his heart, that in righteousness and in charity he may rule over us. Guide him in the way of justice, that we and all nations may have peace. In the name of him who is King of kings and Lord of Lords. Amen.

TUESDAY, March 5—"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you" (John 15:14). Read 1 John 4:11-21. The social life of many of us is largely confined to those of our own church. This is a gracious thing. It is friendship sanctified by a common faith. Such people share each other's joys and sorrows in a peculiar way, and they confirm and support one another in faith. We owe a great deal to our friends in the church and we ought to be careful for each other's welfare in the Lord.

WEDNESDAY, March 6—"So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another (Rom. 12:5). Read Rom. 12:1-16. A church united and harmonious is a wholesome support to the religious life. It incorporates us in itself, interweaving our several lives in its own fabric. These brethren in my church are a part of myself, so each one of us should realize, and that I share in their faults as in their virtues.

THURSDAY, March 7—"Those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary" (1 Cor. 12:22). Read 1 Cor. 12:1-11. Our church shows us respect by asking us to do something for it. It does not offer to carry us as weaklings, but honors us with tasks. It lets us know that we are each of consequence and that our service, however humble, is important and even necessary. And when we do something for the church we love it the more and, moreover, we discover and possess a new value in the Christian life.

FRIDAY, March 8—"A friend of publicans and sinners" (Matt. 11:19). Read Luke 15:11-32. We find pleasure in the society of those who are likened with ourselves, and for that reason we love our church and its fellowship, but we must not be pharisaic in attitude and love only those who are of our group. There are those outside the church, lost in sin, steeped in iniquity; they need our help and friendship. Our coldness and indifference may shut the gate of hope against them. Or my officious and condescending effort to help them may repel them. No one was beneath Jesus; no one was outside the pale of his friendship.

SATURDAY, March 9—"But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin" (James 2:9). Read James 2:1-9. The Lord Jesus had access to the society of the rich and educated people of his time, but he chose his intimates among the lowly. Not many of social distinction found their way into the church in Paul's day. It is unfortunate when a church becomes exclusive, or fails to have sympathy for those who labor and are heavily laden.

SUNDAY, March 10—"Until I went into the sanctuary of God" (Psalm 73:17). Read Psalm 84. The ancient singer was perplexed and troubled over certain problems of life. But when he went into the sanctuary all was made clear. There he got a right point of view. It is wonderful how a church service will lift us out of our perplexities. There is nowhere else that troubles fall away, temptations lose their power and grief is assuaged like as the house of God. It gathers me irresistibly into its purpose and its peace. This is something I must not neglect, for I need it sorely.

Solving Problems that Face Every Superintendent

A Sunday School for Motor Campers
By Alice Crowell Hoffman

Big Pine Sunday school is unique in many ways. Its members never need raise funds for fixing the roof. God himself attends to that. And such a roof! Forget-me-not blue skies inviting fleecy, lambkin cloudlets to roam across at will! No hammers resounded in the building of Big Pine Sunday school. Silently through the years the Father of the Carpenter of Nazareth built the towering walls of pine that enclose it. No Ladies' Aid ever need attend to this. Year after year they drop their needles, adding body to the fragrant rug.

Big Pine Sunday school, located at Caledonia Park, near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, in the heart of the beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains, seems to be the only tourist camp ground Sunday school in the Keystone State. The writer, in camping across the continent and over a large part of Canada, has never found another tourist camp Sunday school anywhere. Are there such?

This unique out-door Sunday school had its beginning eleven years ago when the present superintendent, Mrs. L. C. Manges of Harrisburg, and her camping neighbor, Mrs. C. D. Moyer, felt the need of such an organization. The mothers who were spending the summer in the mountains felt that their children, as well as they themselves, should attend such a service. The nearest Sunday school was several miles away. It was hard to get the children ready and started in time.

"Why don't we start a Sunday school of our own?" suggested one of them. That happy thought crystallized into action and resulted in Big Pine Sunday School.

Under the capable leadership of Mrs. Manges, the wife of the pastor of one of the largest Lutheran churches in the East, the school has grown from a family affair of fifteen members to a big family school, often having an attendance of over two hundred in the tourist season. During the ten Sundays that the school was open in the summer of 1928 nearly fifteen hundred people gathered under the pines to praise God and study his Word.

3. The expenses of the Sunday school are small. They are more than taken care of by the offering. After buying song books and benches this year Big Pine found that it had over a hundred dollars left to divide between home and foreign missions.

To get an average attendance of one hundred and fifty requires well directed effort. At first the Sunday school depended on a sign announcing the session. This was placed where tourists passed and directed them to the Sunday school under the pines in the pleasant woodland adjoining the camp. But people did not respond very well. Then the personal invitation method was started. Every Sunday morning Mrs. Ellen Nixon Shumaker goes through the tourist camp giving her pleasant invitation to everybody. The friendly tactful way in which the invitation is given makes one want to go.

"Come right along in your camping clothes," I heard Mrs. Shumaker say to a group. "This is no dress-up affair."

"This looks like Rebecca at the well," was her spirited way of approaching a young girl who was getting water at the edge of the old stone fountain. "Of course, it isn't, but just the same I want to invite you to our Sunday school under the pines from ten to eleven o'clock this morning."

This direct personal method has brought results. People who may have had no thought of attending Sunday school on their vacation do so with pleasure. Attendance cards are given to all desiring them. It was interesting at the close of the session to see the large number, especially of children, who went up to the superintendent's desk for the cards that would show they had been in Sunday school.

The equipment of this pine-tree walled Sunday school consists of plain, backless benches, chairs from the homes of cottagers, a rough box serving as a table for the superintendent's or speaker's use, and an old-fashioned portable organ—simple in the extreme, yet effective after the manner of simple things in general. The boys attend to the arrangement of the outdoor room.

In case of rain the Sunday school is held on the broad porch of the Manges' cottage. This is not often necessary. As a speaker said at the closing session held recently, "God has smiled upon our work here in every way this summer. There was not one Sunday that the shelter of the porch had to be sought. Sometimes there was rain before Sunday school, sometimes after, but God always seemed to attend to sending his smiling sunshine between ten and eleven."

The services have the effective simplicity of the surroundings. To the accompaniment of the old-fashioned organ the triumphant old songs as the heart of man and the heart of nature give praise and thanksgiving to God, their Maker.

After a short prayer the lesson is read by the whole group and the discussion led by the superintendent, a Christian layman, or minister. The surrounding cottagers, neighboring and visiting ministers and laymen, have responded so well to the invitations to take charge of the lesson that Mrs. Manges has seldom been required to do this part of the work herself. Dr. H. W. A. Hanson, president of Gettysburg College, and many other busy churchmen and laymen find joy in the service they so kindly give here.

The attendance personnel varies, naturally, with each Sunday. Many of the attendants on one Sunday are hundreds of miles away from Big Pine on the next, but they carry with them the spirit of the woodland Sunday school, which the forest ranger so fittingly termed as "different." Tourists from distant States have made many inquiries about the work, and have expressed their intention to start similar schools in their communities. One cannot tell how far this little candle may cast its gleam!

A Beginners' Rest Exercise

By Flora E. Breck

This is the way the bell ringer stands,
Pulling the rope with both his hands;
This is what the good people say:
"We shall get ready for church today."

Sunday the church bells go ding-dong-ding;
Clap, clap your hands and sing, sing, sing;
People are coming—the short and tall;
There's room in the church for one and all.

This exercise is to be used in the Beginners' Department when the children get restless. They stand and recite in unison. In the first verse the children reach up high with both hands as though pulling a rope—down and up. In the second verse the children clap their hands to the rhythm of the words "clap, clap" and "sing, sing, sing." In the next to the last line, the children reach high while saying "tall," and reach low for the word "short." In the last line, they stretch both hands out, in an attitude of welcome.

In point of fact we are all trying to put first things first, but there are endless differences in what we regard as first things.

The Present Six-Year Cycle of Uniform Lessons

It is the aim of the International Improved Uniform Lessons to give a course of study that is properly balanced between the Old and New Testaments.

The Uniform Lessons run in six-year cycles, during which time the whole Bible is "covered" from various angles. If we were to take you ponderously through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, throughout the six-year period, we should be forced to stay out of the New Testament for too long a time.

Hence it is the policy of the makers of these lessons to break up its study of the Old and New Testaments into smaller units, dividing our time favorably with the New Testament.

Our study of the Old Testament during the present cycle has been as follows: First we had "Messages from Genesis" for three months in 1926. We spent six months in the same year studying "Early Leaders of Israel: from Moses to Samuel." This was continued in 1927 by a six months' study of "Early Kings and Prophets of Israel: from Samuel to Isaiah." At this point we take up the study in April of this year for another six months' period in "Prophetic Teaching and Leadership of Judah: from Isaiah to the Restoration." With this unit we shall have made a complete survey of the Old Testament, consuming less than three years of our six-year cycle.

Some topical studies during this cycle deal with both Old and New Testaments. But during 1930 and 1931 our studies will be predominantly in the New Testament, ending with a survey of the book of Revelation. This will complete our survey of the entire Bible in six years. The next cycle promises a still more interesting survey of the Bible and Christianity.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for March 10)

X. Baptism and the Lord's Supper

Scripture Lesson—Matthew 3:13-17; 28:19, 20; Acts 2:38, 41; Romans 6:1-14; 1 Corinthians 11:23-29.

Printed Text—Matt. 28:19, 29; 1 Cor. 11:23-29.

Devotional Reading—Rev. 7:9-17.

Golden Text—This do in remembrance of me. 1 Cor. 11:24.

Introductory Note

If these subjects had been arranged for a distinctly Brethren constituency, this one subject would have been divided into at least four topics for study. The subject of Baptism itself is too involving and too significant to be adequately dealt with in an hour. And the Lord's Supper is for us a three-fold service, each part of which should have an entire lesson period for consideration. Moreover, another important Scripture text should be added to the list above and that is John 13:1-17, which significantly has been omitted by those who do not practice Feet-washing as a part of the service of the Holy Communion. But leaving our Bible-founded practices out of consideration, it seems an unwise arrangement to have crowded Baptism and the Lord's Supper into one short thirty-minute period of study. But let us make the most of the time we have at our command, and seek to build up a deeper love for and loyalty to these vital ordinances.

Bible Baptism

Baptism is for the remission of sins. See Acts 2:38; 22:16; 1 Peter 3:21. It is a symbol of that spiritual renewal that makes possible the new life in Christ Jesus. See Romans 6:4; Colossians 2:12. It pictures the new birth which the Holy Spirit accomplishes and which alone qualifies one for entrance into the kingdom of heaven. See John 3:5. Baptism is a testimony of one's faith in the saving power of Christ and an evidence of obedience to the word of Christ. In Mark 16:16 Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." And in John 3:15 and 16 he tells Nicodemus that "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life." So, it is not the mere immersion in water that avails, but the faith that is exercised in the act of obedience.

Now, given the faith, and the willingness to obey, we are interested in knowing how baptism is to be performed, that is, what the mode shall be. This may seem to some to be insignificant, and unimportant. But we cannot think that the Son of God would have commanded baptism and left the mode without significance. Nor can we agree that a rite that has to do with the soul's eternal welfare has little importance attached to the manner in which it is performed. The significance is vast, and we can only hint at it here. It signifies the death of the old man of sin and the rising to walk in newness of life in Christ Jesus. See Rom. 6:3, 4, 11. If we are to be true to that symbol, we must practice immersion as baptism. Further, the mode is significant in that the whole doctrine of the Trinity is bound up in it. In the commission as set forth in Matthew 28, 19, Jesus commands to baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Here are three names, representing three Persons, and to honor each of the three requires a three-fold act. Therefore Bible immersion must be trine immersion. A third significance of the mode of baptism is to be found in the statement of Paul (Rom. 6:5) that we are "planted together in the likeness of his death." Then if we turn over to John 19:30 we find that Gospel writer saying definitely that Jesus "bowed his head and gave up the ghost." From that we conclude that Bible baptism requires the forward action. Moreover such forward action is necessary to be in keeping with the willing, voluntary character of the act of surrendering to God. The backward action suggests a forced or unwilling surrender.

Feet-Washing

This ordinance is not being dragged into this lesson; it is inextricably a part of the Communion service. It was a part of that service which Jesus conducted with his disciples on the last night before his agony. And if we are to perpetuate the observance of any part of that significant service we should perpetuate the whole of it. There is no warrant to leave out any portion, and least of all this portion. Jesus definitely says to the disciples while engaging in the Feet-washing service, that he is giving them "an example" and that "ye should do as I have done unto you," namely, "wash one another's feet." In addition, he attaches a penalty for refusal and a blessing for obedience. Let us turn to John 13:1-17 and read it all again carefully and be reassured in our own minds of the importance and significance of the service.

The Love-Feast

The Love-feast is the meal of fellowship which is eaten following the service of Feet-washing and preceding the Eucharist and is inseparably bound up with the other two. In John 13:1-3 we find the authority of Christ insisted upon as he was about to institute the ordinances, and the supper is mentioned as a part of the program of the evening. In Luke 22:20, the writer referring to this same occasion, says, "Likewise also the cup after supper." The Love-feast is connected with the other parts of the service in meaning also, for after the Christian has his sins washed away, as symbolized by the washing of the saints' feet, there must also be a fellowshiping together in love. As the eucharistic emblems re-enforce our love for God, which is the first and greatest commandment, so the Love-feast presses home to our hearts the urgency of loving one another, which is the second greatest commandment.

The Eucharist

This portion of the Lord's Supper is almost universally observed, though with somewhat varied interpretation. There is a wealth of Scripture and other material on this subject, and we will offer only a suggestion or two. It is first of all a memorial of the atoning work of Christ on the cross. Jesus said in Luke 22:19, "This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me." And Paul reminds us in 1 Corinthians 11:26, "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come." It is also a symbol of the impartation of the divine life to men. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10). And again, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever" (John 6:51). This is a great mystery, but multitudes of devout souls have proven it also a great fact.

Cambria County Brethren C. E. Union

The Second Brethren church, Moxham, was the scene of the sixth quarterly mass meeting of the Cambria County Brethren C. E. Union. It was held Tuesday evening, February 5, 1929. The meeting was opened with C. E. Pep Songs similar to those used at National Conference last year. George MacDonald offered the invocation prayer. The Moxham chorus assisted by several singers from the First church and directed by J. H. Finnell rendered two beautiful anthems during the course of the evening.

Rev. C. H. Ashman brought the main theme of the meeting, using as his subject, "The Challenge of this Hour to Youth." A strong speaker any time, Rev. Ashman seems to be much in his element in speaking to young people. He gave a very interesting and helpful message.

The Moxham society, Gerald Finnell president, was the winner of the new award of the union having 76% of its members present, Third church, Conemaugh, First, church Pike and Vinco following in the order named.

Attendance at weekly society meetings was stressed and it was decided that in the future the basis of the award will be partially on the average percentage at individual society meetings. It was also decided to give no permanent possession of the banner but to keep it in circulation.

The Union is looking forward with anticipation to the coming of Dr. E. J. Pace, nationally known lecturer and cartoonist, to the First church the week following Easter. His series of Bible Lectures is being sponsored by the Union.

The next mass meeting will be held in the First church, May 7.

A social hour followed the regular meeting, Thelma Custer being in charge.

This organization is very fortunate in having, within its realm, pastors who are in hearty accord with its work and who lend their most welcomed support.

FLOYD BENSHOFF, President.

Jesus' World-Wide Program

By Rev. S. L. Morris, D.D., Atlanta, Georgia

Executive Secretary of the Committee of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U. S.)

Though an oriental, a native of one of the smallest countries of the world, a member of the narrowest of races, Jesus rose far above his people, his times, his training, traditions and environments, and was the first whose sympathies and purposes embraced the whole world of mankind. His love and mission of service were irrespective of race-prejudices and national ambitions. They embraced the whole wide world.

A man's conception of the "world" reveals his conception of the mission of Christ and the task of the church. Indirectly it indicates his attitude as to his responsibility for promoting Christ's ideals and carrying out his program:

1. The "world" is one of the eight planets revolving around the sun, and not even a first-class planet. Jupiter is twelve hundred times the size of the earth.

2. The "world" comprises the vast populations of the globe, "composed of all nations and kindred and peoples and tongues," ever increasing, and estimated at this time as over 1,750,000,000. This is only a fraction of the peoples, past and future, whom we are told that "God so loved." In looking at the two hemispheres that make a world we cannot eliminate either hemisphere in our program of Christian service without discrediting the larger conception of Christ's ideal as to the scope of the Church's paramount task.

The Great Commission of Christ to his Church is the basis of all missionary operations. He said to his disciples when on earth: (1) The limited commission, "Go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel;" (2) the enlarged commission, "Go ye into all the world;" (3) the all-inclusive commission, "And ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The unfortunate and unwarranted distinction between "Home" and "Foreign" Missions has greatly retarded the progress of the Kingdom.

1. One pernicious error that has resulted comes from undue emphasis on "beginning at Jerusalem." It has crystallized into the half-truth, "Charity begins at home," with its attendant, inexcusable excuse—"enough work to be done at home." If the Church should remain at "Jerusalem" until every individual is converted, it would never advance beyond "Jerusalem" while the world stands.

2. An equally mischievous error is to limit the commission to the heathen world. This also reduces the task of the Church to a part rather than the whole.

Jesus never said, "Go ye into all the civilized world or into all the 'heathen world,'" but into all the world. Is not time propitious for discarding all narrow conceptions of the task of the Church, and for so enlarging the thought of men that they will take into calculation a real world program, and into their sympathies every phase of missionary effort essential to the fulfilment of the Great Commission?

Christ, in his parables, forecasts the two opposite resultant developments, the one material and outward, the other spiritual and unseen:

1. The grain of mustard seed may represent Christendom, the human resultant of the Gospel, nominal Christianity, promoted by false methods, emphasis on numbers, and worldly consideration.

2. The heaven may represent the divine purpose, spiritual Christianity, the kingdom that "cometh not with observation." The two parables illustrate the vast difference between Christendom and Christianity.

These two objectives may be expressed as evangelizing the world, and Christianizing Christendom. The evangelist who casts the gospel "net unto the sea" of humanity "gathers of every kind;" the pastor who applies the principles of the Kingdom, "gathers the good" for useful service. Missions are first an evangelizing program and second a Christianizing process. Each is equally important and the one is the complement of the other. Neither objective should overshadow or overbalance the other. They go hand in hand.

The effect of the Emperor Constantine's program for indiscriminate world-conquest—converting the chief of a tribe and then proclaiming the nation Christian and baptizing them en masse—led to nominal Christianity and resulted in the Dark Ages. On the other hand, the neglect of Foreign Missions in the early centuries after the Protestant Reformation resulted in the stagnation of the spiritual life of the Church which was overcome only by the rise of Puritanism, the Methodist Revival and the missionary awakening under Carey, Morrison and others.

Church history has impressed the fact that it is easier to evangelize a nation than to maintain the Christian standard. It is easier to conquer a country for Christ than to hold it for Christ. Where is Jerusalem, the Mother Church? Where is Antioch that sent out Paul and Barnabas, the first distinctive foreign missionaries? Where are the Churches of Asia Minor? Where are the North African churches of Alexandria, Hippo, and others that in the early days of Christianity counted a thousand bishops? Mohammedanism has uprooted Christianity in these scenes of the early Christian triumphs, and from hundreds of minarets and towers 200,000,000 followers of the "false Prophet" hear the call: "God is God and there is no God but God and Mohammed is his prophet."

Will this history repeat itself in the United States? In our "Christian country," with its splendid civilization, material development and great religious organizations, is there no danger of degeneration? When machinery is substituted for spirituality; when the Church is overorganized and cumbered with machinery, it is in danger of breaking beneath its own weight. Today culture is often more in evidence than piety. The Church is becoming "rich, and increased with goods" and is in danger of becoming self-satisfied. Commercialism and worldliness, in many places, sap the life of the Church.

The two greatest enterprises confronting the American Church of the Twentieth Century are still the Evangelization of the World and the Christianization of America. The first is the aim of the department of Church operations known as Foreign Missions; the second is the task of the coordinate department designated Home Missions. To enlarge the circumference is to increase the area included in the circle. The successes of Foreign Missions necessarily enlarge the sphere of Home Missions. They are as mutually dependent for the advance of the Kingdom of Christ as the two oars of a boat, or the two departments of an army—the forces advancing on the firing line and the forces at the base of supplies. The one advances into new territory, establishing outposts; the other assimilates it and makes the new land and peoples an integral part of the Kingdom.

A great practical problem that confronts the Church in America today is financing the vast world-program. No haphazard, sentimental, emotional, one-sided appeal for an individual cause will suffice. We must recognize the wholeness and oneness of the task; we must adopt a well-balanced budget, uniting all the forces of the Church in faithful teamwork to support the whole work of the Church at home and abroad.

The need of the great non-Christian world is so appalling that it taxes the sympathy and resources of the Church beyond all calculation. At the same time, paganism at home is challenging America to a trial of strength. If the Church should lose the battle in America, the spiritual conquest of the world would be postponed for generations. Win America for Christ and his Kingdom now and the triumph of the Cross will spread its spiritual influence "to the uttermost part of the earth."—Missionary Review of the World.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF SUCH PREACHING?

What has become of the old-fashioned temperance sermon? Not the sermon which included a recitation of that classic beginning, "Father, dear father, come home with me now," nor the one that wound up with the peroration depicting the drunkard's demise with full delirium tremens. But what has become of the old-fashioned temperance sermon that was built on the proposition that drinking is wrong, that liquor is an enemy of society, that the liquor dispenser is out to debauch and defeat the government, and that morally, physically, and economically society must for its own good get rid of the traffic in intoxicants? There are thousands of churches in which such sermons used to be preached at annual or semi-annual intervals, or even oftener than that, and that have not heard an uncensored temperance sermon since the Eighteenth Amendment went into effect. There are Methodist and Baptist and Disciple preachers who think that they have done their full duty by the dry cause if they encourage their parishioners to vote for dry candidates. It might help to put backbone into the whole prohibition movement if the country could hear again passionately earnest temperance preaching such as it heard during the days when the movement was first being made to move.—Editorial in the Christian Century.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Things are moving off here as usual. There is no sickness at this writing and everybody is busy. The basketball season will close March 2nd. We have lost only three games out of more than fifteen.

The County tournament was held here this past Friday and Saturday. The Gymnasium was full and the event brought to the grounds many hundred young people. The final winner was Polk, a team which is coached by Mr. Wade Stoffer, one of our own men. The Y. M. C. A. girls served refreshments and cleared quite a tidy sum which will be added to their Chapel fund. If people knew the faithfulness of these girls and our anxiety for a new Chapel building where we could conduct religious services under ideal conditions, I am sure there would be a further response to this fund from other friends.

The writer spoke before the Bucyrus Rotary Club one day last week.

The Annual meeting of the College Board will likely be held in early April. There will be important matters to be discussed. All Board members ought to take notice.

Dr. Bame, pastor of the local church, left Monday for a series of meetings in our Masontown church. Meanwhile, the local men will fill his pulpit.

Professor Anschap is planning on spending the month of March in residence in the University of Michigan.

We have had the privilege recently of having some very able talent at the Chapel hour. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Dibble. Mr. Dibble is joining Mr. Sunday in his next revival campaign, so I hear. At all events, Mr. Dibble is a talented singer.

Professor Anschap addressed the Elementary teachers of the city recently.

HAMLIN, KANSAS

It has been some time since a report of the work at Hamlin has appeared in the "Evangelist," the last being given by the pastor, Rev. W. H. Schaffer, at the close of a series of meetings held in October by Dr. J. C. Beal. The Bible lectures and Bible studies as given at this time created quite an interest in the study of the Scriptures and this work has been kept up by the pastor in the mid-week services and also by individuals studying from the out-lines as presented by Dr. Beal.

The first event of importance since the last report was the Union Thanksgiving services held at the Brethren church Thanksgiving evening. Owing to the absence of the one who was to speak a testimonial meeting was held at which time members of the various churches represented, gave inspirational talks. The following Sunday the pastor preached a "Thanksgiving" sermon and the Home Mission offering was taken.

The Superintendent, N. P. Eglin, who is spending the winter in Florida, is greatly missed in the Sunday school, but the work is moving along nicely in charge of the Assistant Superintendent, J. F. Hornbeck. The attendance and interest is splendid considering that there has been a great deal of sickness among the members and an unusual amount of cold weather and bad roads.

A Children's meeting is held each Sunday afternoon at 2:30 in charge of Rev. Schaffer, who is ably assisted by Miss Irene Barber, Instructor in Hamlin High School. He also has the assistance of other young people of the town.

The other church of the town is without a pastor at present and plans for organizing a Union Christian Endeavor are being considered, which would be of great benefit to all of our young people.

The W. M. S. is doing very commendable work. The programs under the direction of the program committee are very interesting and helpful. We had the pleasure of having Miss Neilsen with us at one of our meetings. She gave us a splendid talk on her work in South America. The attendance is not as large as might be desired but the interest and spirit is fine. The Mission Study on "Friends of Africa" as conducted is appreciated by all.

The Girls of the S. M. M. are loyal to their society and each one is doing her part in the study of the Mission Study Book.

In speaking of the church activities we failed to say that Christmas was observed in sermon and song, and a liberal White Gift Offering was taken. At this "Gift Giving" season, Rev. and Mrs. Schaffer were given a "miscellaneous shower" by the members of the congregation as an expression of their appreciation of their faithfulness to the work here. Since the beginning of the new year Mr. Schaffer has devoted the morning services to a series of sermons from the "Book of Genesis." These have proven to be interesting and instructive. He was asked to review these topics for the benefit of the Science class in Hamlin High School. All special day offerings have been taken and plans are being made for a special Easter service.

With the return of pleasant weather, with properly improved roads and in consideration of the fact that the pastor has an assistant in the person of Herbert Paul Schaffer, who established a permanent residence with Rev. and Mrs. Schaffer January 7, 1929, we predict great things in the future.

MRS. G. W. DOWELL,
Secretary.

A COMMENT

In a recent issue of the Evangelist, Dr. Ashman had an article entitled "Unity of the Brethren." Personally, I liked the tone of it, and as there is such a little difference in the actual practice of the Brethren church and Church of the Brethren, I would be glad to see the day when they were reunited. A representative committee of ministers and laymen from both churches could undoubtedly work out a plan of unification which could be adopted by both churches, thus uniting our efforts and make for more progress. I think it would be fine if many members from different parts of the brotherhood would give their opinions on this matter.

While I am not the official church correspondent from Roanoke, yet while I am "in print," I would like to impose on the Editor for a short paragraph, to say that I believe we were wise in calling Rev. H. E. Eppley and family to our pastorate. He is doing a real constructive work and uniting our scattering and rather vague "hopes" that some day something would happen which would enable us to construct a new building. We now have a definite goal to be reached till a certain date; so there is now something to work towards. A new building is still a long ways off, but if we keep following a wise leadership step by step, we will finally be successful in our efforts. May the Lord bless the work here, and in the entire brotherhood, is our fervent hope.

Ashland, Ohio

Dear friends, if this begins stationary, in the report of a revival, it will end all right, nevertheless. Our church here has just finished an unusual meeting. I am a firm believer in surprises and "different things." How often is it said in the life of our Lord, "they were all amazed;" "they were astonished." Well, if we astonish, let it be so.

It is not so easy to get things done right here; we have so many cross-currents trying to harmonize a college church with the varied interests and appeals. Not so easy to find the right time to avoid conflicting dates and programs; not easy to get exactly the right preacher.

Besides we had a sort of commission from Dr. S. Z. Sharp at Conference time, that, inasmuch as the division started here in 1880, the union ought to start here now. Accordingly, we were fortunate as it seems, to secure a good preacher, a fine scholar and a sympathetic helper in Dr. Frank F. Holsopple, an old friend of the pastor, a son-in-law of the late James Quinter, President of the Pastor's Association of our sister church, Ex-teacher of Juniata College, Ex-president of Blue Ridge College, now pastor of their fine church in Roanoke, Virginia, builded by the late, George Flory. It was with the idea of an exchange that we got it across. For ten days, he preached in our church and for several days, lectured to the students in Chapel. He gave our folks many surprises, among them was his strict orthodoxy, his fine command of the English language, his splendid interpretation of the Scripture in the light of scholarship, making no apology for anything that is commanded in the Book—just the kind of preaching that any evangelist ought to do. The time was of course, too short. The crowds grew from first to last and the most criticism that was made of his work was the chiding I gave him for writing to me that he would not preach more than 25 minutes when he went far over several times. No one else said a word, I guess. We had a fine time. We had good results. But let me tell you in his words. In a letter just received he says: "But putting all such things aside" (other pleasures and experiences and offering), "my stay at Ashland was to me a distinct uplift and blessing. To tell the 'Old, old Story,' however poorly done is an uplift in itself. Then, to extend the hand of fraternal greeting across whatever chasm separates us, was to me the forerunner of a better day for us all. From the pulpit I could tell but little difference between the Ashland members and the Church of the Brethren folks who attended the meeting. We are all the ever needy children of a Divine Father and have a hope of salvation only through our common Redeemer." Five have been baptized; others await; many reconsecrations; the best fraternal feeling that has existed between us and our other Brethren; their wholehearted cooperation and attendance are all so valuable and along with enumerated blessings, we are happy for the unusual meeting. May there be many more, many places, many times, until the ununited Brethren "may be one," with the Lord and with each other.

VICTORY REVIVAL AT THIRD BRETHREN CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Seldom in our ministry of evangelism have we begun a revival under less promising conditions than those that prevailed in the Third Brethren church this year. The "flu" was raging. Many were sick and more were afraid. On account of this and the critical illness of Brother Gingrich's baby, the meeting was postponed one week after the advertising had been distributed. Just prior to the opening of this postponed revival, the baby died. This cast a cloud of sorrow over the entire congregation. The pastor was compelled to be absent on the opening Sunday and for the major part of the first week, in caring for the burial of the babe in Ohio. A spell of inclement, wintry, terrible weather set in, making the streets a solid sheet of ice. No marvel that some wondered if it was wise to attempt a revival under such adverse conditions. Now, we enumerate these, not as an alibi, but to be able to give our God greater praise for the victory. Thank God, no alibi is needed. The victory came!

The loyal Brethren rallied to the revival call. They paid the price of prayer, personal work, and Christian living needed to win souls. This was our second revival effort with them. They lined up with the few tested methods we employed. At the close of the first week, the pastor returned. In a most commendable manner, he threw himself into the work. He did not permit his personal sorrow to interfere in the least with the great work at hand. He proved himself to be a most tactful and successful personal soul winner. The Lord used him mightily. He had the availables well located, knew the line of contact, and most intelligently led them to a public confession. It was a real soul delight to work with him and his people in this Victory Revival. The attendance was not large at any time, but the results were most gratifying. The exact number will be reported by Brother Gingrich. This victory came in a city among the most difficult in which to do evangelism of which we know and at a time when there has settled over the city an appalling apathy in religion. We believe this is the aftermath of the Kernahan type of evangelism employed last year that cursed the churches with unsaved members. But, in the face of all these odds, God gave the victory. To him be the praise!

Evangelist CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

PASTOR'S REPORT OF THE REVIVAL OF THIRD BRETHREN CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN

Late in the fall of 1928 the Ministerial Association of the city agreed to put on a city wide evangelism program. Now the Third Brethren church takes second place to none in the work of evangelism, therefore we decided to hold our own revival in our own way. Rev. C. H. Ashman of the First church was chosen as the evangelist. The meetings were to begin on January 6. Just when the stage was all set for the final preparation and the actual launching of the campaign several discouraging features arose: viz, "flu" epidemic, whooping cough everywhere, folks were afraid to bring their children, weather conditions were extremely bad. On top of all this the pastor's baby took seriously sick and died. The people, however, were of the opinion that they should go on with the meeting after postponing it for one week. At no service was the house crowded because of special delegations and spectacular "stuff" featuring the meetings. The evangelist and pastor are agreed that only fair, sane and tried plans should be used in any revival. We did, however, get into homes and reason with folks.

The results of the revival are quite commendable and gratifying. Brother Ashman is a positive teacher, fearless preacher—only fearing his God. He is a recognized Bible scholar, which fact stood him in good stead for the many questions that came as the result of the question box. Any pastor who will follow Ashman need not fear an aftermath as a result of the preaching of the "Whole Gospel Evangelist." As a result of Brother Ashman's characteristic preaching, personal soul workers, personal praying, 64 came forward expressing their desire to unite with the Third Brethren church. Eight more came since the close of the meeting, making a total of 72. 48 have already been baptized. Four await the rite of baptism, the others came by letter or relation.

A reception was given for the new members at which time they were introduced and welcomed into the church. Over 200 were present for this occasion. The revival officially came to a close January 27, but the evangelistic spirit continues. We close this report by reminding the readers that we always share with you in your successes in his Work.

JOS. L. GINGRICH,
Pastor.

ON THE FRENCH BATTLE FRONT

Then we drove on to the city of Chateau Thierry. That also saw heavy fighting by the United States troops. There is a fine new monument in the center of the rebuilt city to three divisions of the Americans who took part in that engagement. Here were some more Wisconsin boys.

Here the bridges had been blown up and now are rebuilt. Hundreds of the houses have been rebuilt.

From this point we went on to Rheims. Here we had dinner, and then went to see the Cathedral, which was ruined by the shell fire of the Germans. Practically every house in Rheims had been destroyed. All but a few have been rebuilt. The whole roof of the Cathedral was blown in by gun fire, and the splendid towers were badly damaged. John D. Rockefeller has given much money to assist in rebuilding this fine church. The reconstruction is not yet complete, but the towers have been partially repaired, the roof has been rebuilt, and work is still going on in the nave and the apse. Not a whole window of the fine old stained glass was left intact. Pieces were rescued from the ruins here, and there and have been put back in the windows here and there, and some new stained glass windows entire have been installed. Badly as Rheims was damaged, it was not as bad as Soissons which we visited later in the day.

From here we went on up to the Hindenberg Line. You will recall that time and again during the four long years of the war after things settled down to trench fighting the Allies attacked that line and tried to break through, but always failed until the final retirement of the Germans just before the Armistice. I often wondered why it was so difficult. Well, if you could have seen the way in which it was fortified, you would not wonder at the difficulty. In the first place the Germans took advantage of every elevation in the country. Then their trenches were strengthened by concrete block houses in which large guns and machine guns were placed. Again, it was not simply one line of trenches, but a series of one after the other stretching back in many cases for miles, so that if the front trench or trenches were forced, they just fell back to another as strong or stronger than the first. And again, in many places these block houses were connected with underground passageways which we were told stretched for 20 miles under the ground. The strongest part of this line from the natural advantages of the ground was that known as the Chemin des Dames. This is a road along the backbone of a ridge. The ground drops off a hundred feet on the side towards the Allies into a great valley. The Germans had not only dug trenches on the surface of this naturally strong position, but they had underground living quarters for officers, and connecting tunnels through which could be brought men and supplies to the trenches. We went down into one of these chambers about 20 feet below the surface. It was dug out of the solid rock of the hill, and walled up so that there was a room about 40 feet long by 20 broad and ten feet high in which the men lived. Out of it led a tunnel which we were informed reached back to Laon the headquarters of the Kaiser. This was only one of many rooms like this. In fact the hillside was honeycombed with this kind of work. Out in the trenches in front were large guns and machine guns which could sweep with a besom of destruction all the ground lying below and in front. In many of these trenches and block houses the construction was of reinforced concrete of the very best possible construction. No wonder the Allies could not break that line. All along that Chemin des Dames there is evidence that the Allies tried with their biggest guns to blow the Germans out of their trenches. The fields even yet are pitted with what were former shell holes, although now for ten years the farmers have been levelling off their fields. Moreover, as you look across the yellow clay fields you see white spots here and there. That is where one of the big shells of the Allies sank into the ground and exploded and threw up a lot of crushed limestone. From the looks of the ground along this Hindenberg Line I should say that the Allies threw millions of shells upon the ground around there. But while they doubtless killed many of the Germans in the trenches, they could not well get at those down in the subterranean chambers. Nature prepared the battle field, and the Germans improved on Nature. As we went over this ground and saw the nature of the terrain, the whole thing became as clear as the reason why Pickett's charge at Gettysburg failed as one looks at the location of the Union troops on Cemetery Ridge.

And yet the horrible tragedy of the thing cannot be seen so clearly as when we go past these vast cemeteries in which lie buried French, German and British boys who fell in the terrible fighting about this line. We passed cemetery after cemetery filled with thousands of crosses, white for the French and British and black for the Germans. There is the awful tragedy of the thing made visible. Monuments are beginning to arise all over this region commemorating the fall of some brave fellow in the fighting, or marking some peculiarly difficult action. But the glory of it palls when I look at those crosses, "row on row" with the flowers blooming above the dust of the brave fellows who perished in that titanic struggle brought on by the madness of men.

Safely back of these front trenches clearly seen miles away was the city of Laon, the Great Headquarters of the Kaiser and his staff. If in all future wars it were the rule that the kings, chief officers, and members of parliaments and the presidents and members of congress who will these wars should be placed in the front ranks, we might not have any more wars. I suspect that these leaders of the nations would find ways to prevent them. Besides these dead which rot below the soil of France all over this land one sees the mutilated. Here they are carrying on without the glamour of war. We saw one poor fellow selling post cards on the ground where the armistice was signed, whose face had been shot to pieces. The doctors had done their best at plastic surgery, but he had no nose, he had to wear a black patch over one eye which was gone, and his jaws were all out of shape. It was not a face any more.

From that terrible scene of death along the Chemin des Dames we went down into the Valley of the Aisne to Soissons. Here between the two lines this city was entirely wrecked. Not a house was left standing untouched. All over this territory we saw the shacks in which people lived while their new houses were being built under the reconstruction department of the government. Many people in Soissons still live in these shacks. The cathedral of Soissons was much worse damaged than that of Reims. One of the towers was entirely knocked down. Nothing but the outside wall remained and they only in part. It is now being rebuilt by the French government. The streets only now are being finally cleared of their debris. Devastation must have hung over all this territory as if an earthquake had swept it, or a hurricane had swept over it with elemental savagery. But it was the savagery of man.

Down along the Aisne through the beautiful forest of Compiègne we drove and came at last to a place in the midst of that forest where the Armistice was signed on November 11, 1918. Two side tracks were run in there from the main railway. A German train brought the representatives of that nation, and in another train were the representatives of the Allied and Associated Powers. In a sleeping car of the International Sleeping Car Company they got together and signed that famous instrument. The car is now preserved in a building given by a gentleman from Pasadena, California. Out in the grounds the resting places of those two trains are marked by monuments, and another monument marks the place where the car stood in which the signing took place. Here in the quiet of this great forest with the autumn leaves falling about them, that awful struggle came to an end.

As I went over that battle field and then stood in that forest where it all ended, when I thought of what those four years of awful carnage cost; when I thought of the hae unchained in all lands concerned; when I reflected on the youth moved down to an untimely death, with the terrible heartaches, and broken homes, the dependent children, the starving widows and the old people deprived of their savings and thrown on charity in their old age because their funds had melted away in the lost credit of the nation to which they belonged, I could not escape the terrible responsibility of him who takes up the sword in these modern days. More truly than ever before, "He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword." It is generally supposed that the Allies won the War, but from all I can see France lost it. True, she has her territory intact, and has recovered her lost provinces, Alsace and Lorraine, but what about her franc which has dropped from 20 cents in value to less than 4? What about her thousands and millions who lost practically all their savings by the depreciation of their investments? What about the territory ravaged and which she has had to reconstruct? What about her million and a half of men who lie in their graves? What shall we say of her people who go in rags and sleep in hovels because of their poverty and inability to make a living? And what shall we say about the staggering burden of debt which not only this generation but those to follow must bear?

I have not been to Germany. I do not wish to stir up the feelings of hate which the War aroused either in my own or in other breasts. But I do know that from India to Italy and even here in France I see more German tourists than of any other nation. They outnumber even the Americans. The French are not traveling in any numbers, neither are the English or the Italians, but the Germans are everywhere. Right in this hotel there have been for the last few days a whole party of Germans who have been down here doing Paris. And yet you talk to any of them about conditions in Germany, and they "bellyache" and tell you how hard it is to get along in Germany. Well, "I hate me doots." That is all I can say. It begins to look to me as if Germany won the war. And yet she would be very glad to have her debts forgiven. Maybe they should be forgiven; perhaps all the debts should be forgiven, and everyone start with a clean slate, but it ought not to be done on the basis of the argument that Germany did not start the war. Well, I'll stop for you see I'm getting "het up."

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH ON THE MOUNT OF OLIVES

The Roman and Greek Catholic churches have been very devoted custodians of the Garden of Gethsemane, which lies just across the Brook Kidron, while above extends the ancient Mount of Olives, on which Christ's sacred feet so often stood and from which he made his final ascension after his eventful forty days. It is surprising that while Catholic custodians declare that many more Protestants visit the sacred places than Catholics, up till a recent date there has not been a single acre in possession of Protestant Christians.

A wealthy American lady traveling under the auspices of the Travel Institute of Bible Research, helped in the selection of a site of two and a half acres on the slopes of Olivet, which she purchased for them and which the Travel Institute plans to convert into a place of Bible study, with a suitable building and garden, both sufficiently Oriental to help interpret the Book and its unique background. The entire project is most appealing. More and more, with Great Britain holding a mandate for Palestine, the long procession of Bible lovers will continue to increase in numbers, and it seems almost imperative that there should be an evangelical center where the sane, conservative interpretation of the Bible may be given under the transforming light which the Land itself provides, with Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives as the natural as well as the supernatural center.—The Presbyterian.

However we may differ on other matters, we all agree—Protestant, Catholic, and Jew alike—that Sunday school education is absolutely necessary to secure moral uplift and religious spirit.—William H. Taft.

ARGENTINA'S MACEDONIAN CALL

By Louis S. Bauman, Treasurer of The Foreign Missionary Society

SOUTH AMERICA.

If the Brethren Church could only be made to realize the fearful blackness of the darkness that covers the fair land of Argentina in our sister continent of South America,—if she could only be made to understand that if Jesus shall tarry yet a few years, no other mission field in the world offers richer returns for the investment made, how rusting dollars would flow into our mission treasury next Easter Sunday!

May we get the vision! Lift up your eyes and look upon a fair land equal in extent to the eastern half of the United States stretching from the breaking waves of the Atlantic to a line drawn north and south through Kansas City from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. Scatter over this territory 9,000,000 human beings that God so loved that he gave his only begotten Son to die for them. Dot about over this immense territory 74 places where one or more evangelical pastors reside, and then 47 more places where none reside, but where evangelical work and worship is maintained at least to some extent.

Mark the 322 towns and cities exceeding 2,000 inhabitants each, and then mark 201 of them totaling a population of 3,000,000 as being utterly destitute of any soul-saving effort. Think of 100 towns ranging in population from 5,000 to 20,000, and 20% of them without the message of redeeming love.

Consider 4,000,000 human beings, soon to pass into the Great Beyond without having really heard the message of life eternal, who live all over Argentina in small settlements of less than 2,000 people,—utterly unreached save for a rare visit from some traveling colporteur and rarer visit of a Bible Coach.

Look upon this scene; and, if there is no feeling of condemnation because of neglected duty, then, well may we wonder whether we, the members of The Brethren Church, really are in possession of the Spirit of him, who, when he "went about all the cities and villages, and . . . saw the multitudes, was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd."

And, remember that The Brethren Church alone is being held responsible by the evangelical missionary interests of the world for the evangelization of one entire province, that of Cordoba, about the size of the State of Indiana. Dare we die and go up to meet the Savior who died for these millions, without having done our best to get the message of eternal life to them? Not a single member of The Brethren Church can wash his hands of this task! "Woe is me if I preach not this Gospel!"

VII. A PLEA FOR TOLERANCE

By Martin Shively, D.D.

It is all but impossible to find any two persons who are in perfect accord in their thinking, on any question, to say nothing about being in perfect accord on all questions. Even in a group so highly favored as were the first disciples of our Lord, there were honest differences of opinion, which persisted even after the wonderful experience of Pentecost. One has only to read the account of the first great conference of the church, as recorded in Acts 15, to be convinced of this fact. All were intensely loyal to their Lord, but they differed as to the implications of that loyalty. But in spite of what their differences might have been, they exercised such charity for each other, that the apparently impossible was achieved, in the marvelous spread of the gospel, and the consequent growth of the church.

I believe, most sincerely, that the closer we approach to our Lord, the more charity we shall have for each other, and the need for such expression stands not far from the head of the list of all our needs. Not less conviction, but rather more, but with it such a degree of loving tolerance as will bring to realization the condition for which the Master prayed as he approached the cross—"That they might be one, even as we are one." No earthly home can endure without it, and no church, either as a denomination or as a local organization, can thrive except as it is present. Jesus himself was and is the outstanding exponent of this very desirable quality of the soul, and to Saint Paul it was the occasion for saying, "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God."

Why is it?

Mohammed's Opinion of Human Nature

Segregating the Incurrigibles

Getting the Habit

by

Alva J. McClain

HUNDREDS of men and women, many of them church members, will travel thousands of miles to see Mr. Hoover inaugurated. The same people will stand in line for hours for an opportunity to shake his hand or see him pass in parade. Church leaders will do almost anything to get a President to appear for a few minutes and speak a few sentences at a church conference or convention.

Yet some of these same church leaders are stoutly opposed to the personal return of Jesus Christ to this earth, on the ground that such an expectation is "grossly materialistic." They accuse us of "materialism" because we long to have his literal bodily presence once more among men ruling them in power and solving the problems of humanity. And they regard us as "unspiritual" because we would rather see Christ upon the throne of his glory than to see all the human rulers that ever lived passing in parade. Why is it?

These same men will expend fortunes and travel around the world to hold a Conference in the city where our Lord once lived and suffered. And we find no fault with them for this; for we too would find joy in beholding the land where he once walked. But some of us would find a far greater fascination in Jerusalem if he were there once more. Yet we are told that this desire of ours is crass and materialistic.

If one can be "spiritual while desiring to see the hill on which he died, why should we be thought materialistic when we long to see him? Why is it?

A WRITER, with imagination, predicts that the time is coming when we shall be able to communicate and travel between the other planets and stars. And he suggests that perhaps in that day we shall select some far-away unoccupied planet and deport our incurrigible criminals to that place. What an awful place it would be!

Of course all this is human fancy, but the writer nevertheless has hit upon an idea that is not so far wrong. The "incurrigibles" will be deported and segregated some day. But God will do the segregating, not man. Some place in the "outer darkness" a place will be "prepared," and there the incurrigibles will be sent.

"Then the king said to the servants, 'Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into the outer darkness; there shall be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth.'" (Matt. 22:13). It is not pleasant to contemplate, but neither are human prisons. Yet they are necessary in a world of rebellious sinners.

But don't forget that no soul will ever be sent out into that awful prison-house of the lost who did not deliberately choose to reject the mercy of God.

MOHAMMED, prophet of Islam, didn't think much of the ability of human nature, and he formulated his religious requirements accordingly. "Human nature is weak," he says; therefore, the religious standards must not be set too high. Man can do two things at least, Mohammed thought; he can perform religious rites and fight. In these two matters the "prophet" is very severe. But in other things, such as the moral law, his followers were left to follow the fatal bent of "human nature."

How different are the demands of Jesus Christ. He knew all about the weakness of human nature, more than Mohammed ever knew; yet he never relaxes a single requirement of the moral law. "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48).

We are saved by grace, and not by keeping the moral law, thank God. But grace in Christ never lowers the high demands of the moral law in deference to the weakness of human nature.

DR. McAFEE, in his book on Changing Foreign Missions, quotes a Korean to the effect that in Korea the habit of "personal giving" to support a church, with no thought of personal material gain, has to be acquired just as truly as the habit of singing in a seven-toned scale instead of a five-toned scale.

The doctor might have replied that the same thing is true in America. Our churches have thousands of members who have never "acquired the habit" of giving to God with no thought of personal material gain.

And the worst of it is that, like learning

14. "I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto them, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part from the tree of life, and out of the holy city, which are written in this book." Rev. 22:18-19. Question: Does the word "book" relate to the whole New Testament or only to the book of Revelation?—A. O. H.

Without any doubt at all the reference is only to the Book of Revelation. There are several reasons. But the deciding one is the fact that twice in the quotation the descriptive and defining words "the prophecy of this book" and "the book of this prophecy" are used. The same phrase occurs in verse 7. The last book of the New Testament is called the "Revelation," Greek, an Apocalypse. The Apocalypse is a form of prophecy portraying "last things." The title would not be correct if applied to the entire New Testament.

I have a second reason which to me is decisive. I believe the book of Revelation was written by the Apostle John during the sixties of the first century. At the time of its composition there was no New Testament as such and therefore the reference could not have been to the entire New Testament.

15. The 11th chapter 19th verse of Revelation speaks of the "Ark of the Covenant." Does this Ark refer to the one that contained Aaron's rod, the tables of stone, etc.?—A. O. H.

I do not think so. The Ark of the Covenant is one of the most familiar symbols of the Old Testament. It held an important place in the Tabernacle and in the Temple after the Tabernacle. A description of the Ark is given in Exodus 25:10-22. It was a rectangular chest made of acacia wood and overlaid with gold. It was 3 feet 9 inches long and 2 feet 3 inches wide and high. The lid of this sacred chest was called the Mercy-seat and was made of pure gold. For its contents see Exodus 25:21; 40:20. Here the "testimony" means the two tables of the Law. Heb. 9:4 and Exodus 16:33 mention the manna laid up before the Lord. Numbers 17:10 and Hebrews 9:4 name Aaron's rod that budded.

The Ark of the Covenant in its simplest significance is a most fitting symbol of the Presence of God. Exodus 25:22 says, "And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubim, which are upon the Ark of the Testimony . . . "Here God met his appointed servant and communicated his will to the people. It was the center of the whole symbolic service and every act of worship was more or less directly related to it. One can not here enter further into the symbolism of the Mercy-Seat and the position of the Ark in the Tabernacle and Temple. Suffice it to say that it was the only object found in the Holy of Holies.

What then does the Ark of the Covenant as referred to in Revelations 11:10 mean? A reference to Hebrews 8:4-5 clearly shows that the earthly tabernacle, and the Temple later, was an exact replica of heaven itself. Compare also Hebrews 9:23-24. The Revelation passage follows immediately upon the sounding of the seventh angel and marks the consummation of the Kingdom. So verse 15 declares. Verses 17-18 are a hymn of praise. So it is altogether fitting and most cheering to be shown in the "opened temple of God in heaven" the Ark of the Covenant. It is the symbolic disclosure of God's faithfulness in fulfilling his covenant.

Superficial Worshipers

There is a universal tendency on the part of worshipers of Almighty God to fall into the rut of superficiality. By the very regularity and frequency of our worship we are more inclined to this weakness. We are not to be less faithful and habitual in our attendance on divine worship because of the tendency to become formal and to lose in sincerity, rather must we give ourselves more earnestly to our worshiping and school ourselves to be ever conscious of our need of fellowship with the Father. The more elaborate the ritual the greater is the danger that we shall grow careless and thoughtless and go through the forms without troubling our minds with the meaning of laying its truths upon our hearts. The remedy is not necessarily to eliminate the details of our worship programs (though we do not favor too elaborate a ritual), but rather to cultivate the habit of searching our hearts and of coming before God with a feeling of our utter unworthiness and an appreciation of his infinite grace. We need to be constantly on our guard lest the frequency of repetition and the detail of ritual shall lull our hearts into indifference and lack of sincerity. This warning is needed by preachers and laymen alike.

On the part of ministers there is the danger of becoming professional in the conduct of public worship, of growing into the spirit of one who goes through certain forms merely because they are prescribed and because they are expected of him, and failing to identify himself with the needs of the congregation for spiritual refreshment and empowerment. Whatever the religious forms in which one engages, they ought to be regarded as means of grace, needed equally as much by the pulpit, as by the pew, and ought to be engaged in with the utmost reverence and in a truly worshipful attitude. If a leader of public worship becomes mechanical, he is sure to reveal the fact in some manner or other to those whom he leads, and they, instead of being led to the throne of grace, are likely to be led into the frame of mind that he himself suggests. For example, a minister, conducting a congregation through an elaborate church ritual, led them so rapidly through the various readings that many found it impossible to keep up with him. He kept them going with a speed that suggested a race, and one of the worshippers reported that when they had finished the ritual, he felt like saying to the rector, "You beat."

But even when the leadership of the pulpit is most spiritually inspiring, it very often happens that church attendants are very superficial in their worship. By frequent thoughtless repetition, or through pre-occupation of mind with other things, or because of the absence of a worshipful spirit, or because of an inconsistent life, the worship program becomes for many a mere form of words, or a religious exercise and nothing more. They take upon their lips the most devout expressions, or listen to the most earnest prayers, but they are very lightly impressed by it all, their hearts do not reach out after God. Very often do the words which Jesus quoted to the insincere worshipers of his own day deserve to be brought to the attention of hosts of superficial worshipers in the church today. "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me" (Matt. 15:8).

It is possible to engage in the church's most solemn service, and yet fail truly to worship God, because we do not "worship him in spirit and in truth." Paul recognized that it was possible to participate in the Holy Communion service unworthily, and so admonished, "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body" (1 Cor. 11:28, 29). Notwithstanding that warning there are those who, not only without personal introspection, but lacking in reverence and genuine piety, bring judgment upon their own souls and profane the Lord's tables by approaching them through idle curiosity or some other superficial motive.

It is said that in Old Trinity Church, New York, they have a good deal of trouble with relic hunters and curiosity seekers. "These people inquire of the sexton when the 'communion service' is to be held and ask if, on that particular day they will use in communion the rare old silver plate presented to the church by Queen Anne or King George. If they learn that the souvenir plate is to be used they remain so that they may be able to tell their absent friends that they took the bread from the old plate. To such people it is not a sacrament, but a sacrilege. To such people the communion can have no holy significance." They honor God with their lips, but their heart is far from him. And such superficiality in worship, even in the most sacred service in the year's calendar, is not confined to Old Trinity Church, but is to be found to some extent in all our churches. May God save us from superficiality and give us greater sincerity in worship.

The Church and Enforcement

The church has been much criticized for her lack of interest in the enforcement of Prohibition and there have been some instances where such criticism was justified. On the other hand she has been severely criticized for taking too great a part in the Prohibition situation and in the promotion of Christian citizenship. And there doubtless have been cases of indiscretion and improprieties on the part of over-zealous representatives of the church in behalf of civic righteousness.

Here are two extremes suggested which the church must needs seek to avoid. She dare not be indifferent to the social and civic evils that curse our land, nor dare she seek to take the reins of government in her own hands and attempt to do the work of detective and enforcement officer. The church's supreme business in relation to Prohibition and kindred reforms is to build up a civic conscience that will revolt against evil and support and defend the right. If her influence does not go out and leaven the social and civic forces at work in the world she is not the vital and active factor that she ought to be. If her light is being hid under a bushel measure of indifference at this point, she is not true to the whole of her mission. If the church does not build up in the hearts of men a conviction of the rightness and wrongness of things, there will be no such conviction and our social life will have no means of salvation or improvement. But at the same time, the church's moral and spiritual influence depends on her keeping within her proper functions and avoiding the role of a detective or enforcement agency. The New York Christian Advocate declares against the church giving itself to detecting violations of the Prohibition law, in the following words:

"There is one argument—to us a convincing argument—against such a course. The main business of the Church lies in a totally different field. It exists in the community to meet the religious needs of the people. It exalts Christ, inculcates his teachings, and tries to win men to accept his leadership, with all the spiritual and moral consequences which flow from such fellowship. When the Church has done its perfect work, there will be no speak-easies, no bootlegging, because the will to do these things will have been changed by spiritual process. Until then it is the clear duty of the Church and those who are guided by it to give vigorous support to every agency which makes for the suppression of evil doing.

"The officers of the law should be assured that they have the backing of the church members in prosecuting offenders. But the Church goes beyond its sphere when it takes upon itself the role of detective, and makes itself a voluntary part of the enforcement machinery. It could not perform such a function without detracting from its influence in the community, degrading it from its proper place, and digressing from its legitimate function.

"Exceptional instances doubtless may be cited, in which a pastor

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor of the church at Fort Scott, Kansas, reports that the work there is encouraging, notwithstanding the brief retarding due to the severe winter. The mission point at Godfrey adds interest and strength to the work in the city. They are now in a revival with Brother H. H. Rowsey of Falls City, Nebraska, as the evangelist.

Brother C. C. Grisso writes that the mission church at Harrah, Washington, is still without a pastor and that that is their great need. The field is big and needy and promising, and the people are loyal and sacrificing. He is giving them help, making weekly trips from his field at Sunnyside, forty miles away. He has recently "baptized five, confirmed two, and anointed one."

Brother H. C. Funderburg reports that the church at Miamisburg, Ohio, of which he is pastor, is not dead, but is alive and making some progress. He has had charge of this work for nearly three years. Recently six splendid young people were added to the membership by baptism. This is the home congregation of Dr. W. H. Beachler, who was with them some time ago in a Homecoming service.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the splendid prospects for the new work at Almafuerite, concerning which mention has been made in previous issues. Aside from the promising nature of the work at that place, it is said to offer possibilities for a summer resort and an excellent meeting place for their general conference, similar to Winona Lake or Shipshewana in the homeland. It appears that the mission has a fine chance of becoming a strong work.

Brother E. J. Rohart, pastor of the growing mission church at Winchester, Virginia, has been successful not only in building a church, but in establishing a home also. Truly the Lord has blessed him in the past year and we congratulate him and wish for him the continued favor of God. The church work is going forward in splendid manner. Eight souls were added to the membership during the year. The young people of his church are receiving excellent attention, which seems to be one of the strong points in his work.

Brother G. E. Drushal writes that the attendance at church and Sunday school at the Lost Creek church (Kentucky) is keeping up to a good mark notwithstanding the deep snow they have had. He comments on the value of the school to the young people of that district, and doubtless he has a point of view that is worth considering. The lifting of the Mountain people out of their ignorance and superstition is going to be a matter of years of schooling. But once they have discovered their powers they will be of great value to the people who have brought them religion and liberty.

The church at Elkhart, Indiana, of which Brother W. I. Duker is the enterprising pastor, has recently experienced a splendid revival under the evangelistic leadership of Brother S. M. Whetstone, assisted by Brother Glen Wagner as song leader. Twenty accessions are reported and the meetings were characterized, as the pastor informs us in a personal note, by "a wonderful spirit and big crowds." Sister Nicholas, our good correspondent informs us that fifty-five have been added to the church during the last fifteen months. Thus our splendid group of Brethren at Elkhart go on from victory to victory.

In a personal communication from Brother C. R. Sensenbaugh, pastor of the church at Ardmore, Indiana, he writes that "All activities connected with the church are progressing." He is encouraged by the life of the three new activities: Junior Endeavor, Sisterhood of Mary and Martha and prayer meetings. He says "unity reigns" and "almost every one is backing and pushing the wheel of progress." They "had 152 present at Sunday school last Sunday." They are looking forward with anticipation to the soul-winning effort scheduled for March 17 to 31, with the pastor doing the preaching and Brother Harley Zumbaugh serving as song leader.

PRAYERS ARE REQUESTED this week for the revival at Fort Scott, Kansas. Brother C. C. Grisso requests prayer for the work at Harrah, Washington and for our Home Mission points in general. We would also make request of our Ohio constituency in particular that they pray for the Home Mission work of the brotherhood, and especially for the progress of the mission points in Ohio, at some points of which remarkable progress is being made. Brother G. E. Drushal requests prayer for the work and the workers at Lost Creek, Kentucky. Brother Yoder requests prayer for the new work at Almafuerite, Argentina. Brother Ankrum asks an interest in our prayers that his section of the field should produce results.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Oak Hill, West Virginia, reports that the people of his section have been sorely afflicted with an epidemic of influenza which retarded the work somewhat. Also, he has been conducting what he calls a "back door revival," that is, subtracting from the church membership roll those who show no signs of life or loyalty. He is also working out and introducing a more efficient system of local church financing. Here is a point where many of our congregations might well make improvements. Notwithstanding the marked advances that have been made along this line, there are still many places where the most haphazard and unChristian methods of giving prevail, with the result that the Kingdom interests are greatly crippled. With all our boasting of a "Whole Gospel" program for our church, we have been strangely lacking in measuring up to Gospel standards in matters of giving and of handling the financial problems of the church.

Miss Gladys Spice, general secretary of the Brethren C. E. Union and a valued member of the society at Canton, Ohio, tells us that one society recently discussed the doctrines of the Brethren church, and she is emphasizing a most vital fact when she says young people ought to be able to give a reason for the faith that is in them. If young people are not taught to love the church of which they are members and are not persuaded that it is the one church of all churches worthy of commanding their loyalty, and that it represents to them the truest and most spiritual interpretation of the word of God, then there is something wrong with their instruction, or with their heart-response to the truth, or with both. There is absolutely no reason in encouraging the common fallacy that "one church is as good as another." It is not true for one who has convictions. That is not to say that we ought to cultivate denominational contentions and aloofness. It is an evidence of the larger realization of the true spirit of Christianity that interdenominational goodwill and cooperation is coming to prevail. But that does not argue against denominational convictions and loyalty any more than international friendship and cooperation works against national love and loyalty on the part of the individual. Brethren young people ought to be taught that for them there is no other church that offers them quite as noble a challenge to faith and obedience as the Brethren church, and they ought to be ready to bear intelligent witness to their devotion.

One of the saddest pieces of news that it has been our duty to publish in a long time has just come from Long Beach, California, where Brother E. L. Kilhefner, with his wife, had recently gone for his health. Last week he underwent an operation in Long Beach, after which it was reported that the prospect of his recovery was hopeful. The next day a different and saddening report reached Ashland, that he had passed away on Saturday morning at eleven o'clock, March 2nd. The passing of Brother Kilhefner is a great shock to the Ashland church and city and to the brotherhood. He has been prominent for years in the manufacturing circles of Ashland, and in the Ashland Brethren church he has been to tower of strength by his financial support and his quiet but valued counsel. The College has had no warmer friend and no more loyal supporter than was E. L. Kilhefner, who was the president of the Board of Trustees at the time of his death. He was also a valued member of the Foreign Mission Board of the Brethren church, and occupied other positions of trust and responsibility in the brotherhood and in the Ohio District Conference. He has been one of the most prominent, useful and self-sacrificing laymen of the church, and yet one of the most unpretentious and unseeking. His going has left a big place vacant in our ranks. We bespeak the brotherhood's deep sympathy to Sister Kilhefner and her daughter, Mrs. Earl McKean.

A Sublime Scripture.---I

By G. W. Rench, D.D.

During these cold and stormy days I have been thrilled in a fresh study of the Hebrew letter. I have been thinking of some readers of the Evangelist, and concluded that some of the results of my study should be passed on to them with a view of doing for them what they have not time to do for themselves.

The Epistle does not declare who the author is, or where the people live to whom it was written. Like many a book of the Bible, the author is anonymous. But God's truth seems to be cast in such a die that it can be identified without the attachment of a human signature. The Christian world has generally held that the book is from the pen of the mighty apostle to the Gentiles. Many scholars hold that the reference in 2 Peter 3:15 is to the Hebrew letter.

The people to whom he writes evidently face the deadly peril of disloyalty to Jesus—a danger so glaring today as to cause the note of alarm to be sounded far and wide. Hence the practical value of this Epistle and its much needed study. Then, as now, compromise was in the air. The disastrous appeal which they faced constantly was to compromise with Judaism. The author is fearful lest, after throwing off the claims of the Pharisees and Sadducees as the gospel requires, they will “shrink back to perdition.” The use of this strong expression is proof of the danger; and what is the use of talking about “shrinking back to perdition,” if those who have accepted Christ are free to believe and practice anything they please? The neighbors and friends of their former life—even their kinspeople—have disowned and opposed them until they had become discouraged, faltering and doubtful. But for all of their distress the author offers this magnificent message of the overpowering Jesus as Lord and Savior. “Better,” is the key-word. At every fresh outburst of persecution and discouragement, they are met by the argument from the Epistle, “this is better.” He argues the outstanding supremacy of Jesus to the Old Testament, to the law and temple-service, to angels, to Moses, to Joshua, to sin and death. He builds a wonderful structure in his argument, disclosing a substantial and mighty foundation “which can not be shaken.” The whole structure is lighted with brilliant exhortations to the Hebrews like, “Seeing then that we have a great high priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession” (Heb. 4:14).

I have among my notes this: Westcott in his Commentary on Hebrews, declares that the Epistle, above all other books of the Bible, has the message for our day, offering a very pointed warning against the very dangers which confront us. He urges that we, too, “listen to the voice which speaks to us today from its pages and bring to the doubts, the controversies and the very losses which apparently distress us, the spirit of absolute self-surrender to our King-Priest, the living and glorified Christ.” Yes; and this verse I am trying to appropriate: “THEREFORE we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip” (Heb. 1:2); or, as Moffatt says it, “in case we drift away.”

This letter seems to have been written a short time before the siege of Jerusalem by the Roman army. Probably most of the people addressed lived in and around the doomed city. With their ostracism already resting like a pall upon them, they probably could very well see “a storm gathering round the Holy City which to calm eyes boded utter desolation without any prospect of relief.” And even now, how can Christ's truth faithfully preached and lived in a world mad with sin, do other than stir up strife, and enmity, and hatred? The Master himself had so stirred up such enmity that it only was three years running its course. “Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword,” are his own words. In that same connection (Matt. 10:34) strife caused by living the Christ-life will even invade the family. But we read in this letter of “an anchor of the soul, a hope both sure and steadfast and entering into that which is within the veil.” That's the believer's hope.

In the briefest possible way, we have led up to our study of the opening sentence of this mighty Epistle. The sentence is quite lengthy; but oh, the strength and beauty of this sublime passage. Let us get it before us as the first step. “God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high”—Vss. 1, 2, 3. For comparison, let us place beside this the Revised Version. “God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom also he made the worlds; who being the effulgence of his glory, and the very image of his substance, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had made purification of sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.” By the side of both, let us place the translation by Moffatt. “Many were the forms and fashions in which God spoke of old to our fathers by the prophets, but in these days at the end he has spoken to us by a Son—a Son whom he appointed heir of the universe, as it was by him that he created the world. He, reflecting God's bright glory and stamped with God's own character, sustains the universe with his word of power; when he had secured our purification from sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high.”

In our next, we shall try to point out some things God is revealing through his chosen author.

America's Need

By Rev. M. A. Matthews, M.A., D.D.

(Selected by W. S. Bell)

America's greatest need at the present time is Evangelistic Fire!

The churches show the lowest drop of the scale of evangelistic work and results that they have shown at any time in the past one hundred years. As a consequence every department of life is suffering. The morale of the whole country is lower. Crime has increased. Disregard for law is almost universal. Divorce is on the increase. Immorality abounds. The fences of propriety and modesty are down. These are a few of the results of the waning spirit of evangelism.

The church is suffering most. She is cursed with unbelief and spiritual inertia. Many of her members have a name to live but are spiritually dead. They have a form of Godliness but are like whited sepulchers, filled with dead men's bones.

There is a great dearth of red-blooded laymen who believe and are willing to fight and die for their belief. Expediency is the daily rule of action in the state and in the church. Men buy and sell positions. They do not fight and die for principles.

Churches are empty, and would-be saints are on the fields of pleasure and idleness breaking God's Holy day, wrecking the home and blasting the religious future of their children.

Many ministers know more about the rules of golf than they do about the experience of the prayer closet.

Many of the denominations lost last year, and, thousands and thousands of churches did not receive even one person on profession of faith. Thousands of ministers turned from the Gospel to preach the froth of books, the filth of the screen, the fumes of politics, the fatalism of philosophy, and the fallacy of social service as a remedy for the sin and sorrow of the world. In fact, the preachers of America are to blame for the horrible condition in the Church and in the country.

The rationalistic preachers of the nation are the country's greatest menace. It was the infamous rationalism of Nietzsche-ism that plunged the world into the awful war. It is the same rationalism that is today responsible for the low state of our morality and the high state of our crime efficiency.

The infamous heresy that is today preached by rationalistic preachers is directly responsible for our social condition. When preachers abandon the Blood of Jesus Christ as the only Gospel for the salvation of men, they become Judas Iscariots, and deserve his fate.

There is but one way to be saved and that is by regeneration through the Blood of Jesus Christ. God can not save one who denies the Deity of Christ and rejects his Blood-bought, vicarious Atonement. Therefore, there is but one Gospel that can produce a revival and that is the Bloodbathed Gospel of Christ's death and resurrection.

When ministers become traitors and abandon that Gospel the evangelistic fires go out, family altars crumble, church chancels are covered with the world's icicles, pulpits become the stalls of asses, and Ichabod appears over the doors of the churches.

Church pews can not be filled and ke kept filled by the trash from rationalistic sewers. The Water of Life does not flow from such sources, and, no one ever saw the Bread of Life on such a table. If the preachers would return to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which includes his Incarnation, his Virgin Birth, his Crucifixion, his Resurrection, his Ascension, his Mediatorial Work and his Coming Again for his saints, the evangelistic fires would again burn, and men would be saved and be added to the church daily.

If ministers would again preach the revival-producing doctrine of justification by faith only, you would see another Reformation producing even greater results than the last one.

America's greatest need is evangelism! You will not get it until you fill the pulpits with men who can preach, and who can preach the only Gospel. If we had such men we would then find the pews filled with red-blooded laymen who believe something instead of the flabby, time-serving, expediency-governed, masculine jelly fish who are today seeking the fields of pleasure rather than the avenues of Christian duty and service in the church.

Let the church be called to prayer, and let her pray daily for Gospel preachers. She should drive from her pulpits the rationalistic traitors and install instead preachers who know how to preach the Blood-bought Gospel of Jesus Christ. Then, the revival will begin.—The Wonderful Word.

Essentials for a Successful Song Service

By Leo Polman

II.—The Leader

The song leader is in a position to either make or break the spirit of worship and praise. He or she should treat a song service as a serious act. Some leaders desecrate the service by trying to be too funny, telling stale jokes or being boisterous. A leader who is not himself spiritual, has no place in a service of spiritual song. His presence will be like a wet blanket upon the audience, regardless of his natural abilities. He has nothing to contribute to the service of God, and instead of preparing the general atmosphere for the message which is to follow, he has deadened it.

The leader must have the attention of the audience. If he cannot command this at the beginning, the song service cannot succeed.

Get your audience together as much as possible. But you say you cannot get them together. And here is where the song leader may impart some of his enthusiasm and cheerfulness. No matter what goes wrong he must not scold the people. Admonishing is sometimes necessary, but it must be done in a spirit that will not antagonize. The people will be reasonable for the most part and if presented without antagonism, they will see that the fire will not burn when the embers are scattered all about the hearth.

The first song should always be familiar.

To attempt a new song at the beginning, will usually create a feeling of defeat and failure, and surely will have its effects upon all the other songs that are to follow.

To get the people in the spirit of the song, it may be well to read the first stanza, or give a few well chosen remarks, or the story of the song briefly told often will create an interest and will do a great deal to help the service.

A song leader should know how to beat time. That is, not to just paw the air. He should know how to beat the different methods of time. This is very essential. For success in leading a song service is something more than beating time. The leader must be able to bring out the rhythm and accent and must also impart through this leading enthusiasm to the audience. If an audience is large, the movements of the arms and body must be more pronounced. In the case of a small audience, it usually will have an adverse effect for the leader to be too acrobatic. A baton should not be used in the leading of an audience. This should be reserved for the leading of the choir only.

He should familiarize himself with the songs to be used, so that he can interpret them to the audience. Care should be taken not to destroy the beauty of a hymn or song by one's interpretation. The writers for the most part have given interpretation for loud or soft, or medium coloring of tone, as well as the tempo they should be sung in. Do not omit stanzas, that will destroy the message of the song.

To keep up the pitch of interest in a song service, it is often well to introduce variety. This can only be done when the leader is familiar with the song measure. It will help also to call on the men to sing in unison, or the women, the boys and girls. Do not overlook the boys and girls, for they are your best asset in the community for interesting the older ones to attend services. Make friends with them. Give them a special night. Tave a boys' and girls' choir. This will bring fathers and mothers to hear their young perform. Repeating a chorus one or more times will often bring up the volume of song. Run from one song to another, being careful to select pieces in the same key. This will have a great deal to do with the kind of accompanist you have. Some will have to prepare for such work before hand.

A good leader will always have in mind the end toward which he is working. If the service is one of devotional nature, he will work the song service with the thought of calming the people and producing an atmosphere of devotion and of reverence. If the nature of the service is a rally, he will lead up to a climax of enthusiasm. However, be careful not to spoil the message which is to follow by the song service. Work in harmony with the speaker. Prepare the people for the message. Be modest, not seeking to attract attention to self by spectacular stunts. Keep the minds of the people upon the message they are singing.

The next article will have to do with the "Essentials for a Successful Song Service, THE AUDIENCE."

The Bible: The Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

(PUBLISHED IN TWO PARTS—PART II)

The Scriptures reveal the perfect God and his arch enemy, Satan, to man. "God" writes the author of the Hebrews, "who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son," et cetera. Since then men have discovered that Jesus Christ was, is, and shall be the only perfect God and perfect man.

God is revealed as the eternal spirit in an eternal trinity of three persons. He is a person and possesses all the attributes of personality. He is conceived of in anthropomorphic terms. He thinks, feels, wills, and acts intelligently, freely, and without external restraint. He is righteous, good and holy. In his own image he makes man and in his own way he fashions the worlds. And the product of his hands indicates that no man ever had a part in it. It is too beautiful, orderly, intricate, and yet simple to bear the marks of man's hands.

Modern believers love to conceive of God as a loving, patient, serene, and kind father. Others say the idea of a grandfather God sitting in the heavens and ruling with a tyrannical hand is inadequate. Well, it is most assuredly inadequate. God is neither a grandfather nor a tyrant. Neither is he always sympathetic and soft as some fathers are. His is the heart of a righteous father's and mother's love, yet he possesses all of the severity and indignation of a good earthly judge. He is tolerant and intolerant, but always just. The Scriptures never portray a grandfather God to any save those creatures who have lopsided views of real fatherhood on the earth. Mr. H. G. Wells' universal fatherhood-of-God-idea is not Scriptural because it includes men and women of the natural fleshly creation, while the Bible supports the view that only those who can pray "Our Father who art in heaven" and are of the supernatural or new creation can legitimately be called sons of the kingdom brotherhood.

Jesus not only revealed God to man, but he also revealed Satan. Deny the latter as a person heading up the hierarchy of evil in the world and you leave unsolved the problem of evil behavior. Man himself will not assume the responsibility for evil conduct, and God is beyond any wicked schematizations. Jesus told men that Satan was "a liar from the beginning" and put him behind the actions of the traitor, Judas, when he averred "And the Devil having already put it into the heart of Judas, Simon's son, to betray him," etc. If it is natural for us to believe that a good God is the author of all the good which is in the world, then is it quite reasonable, on a purely intellectual basis, to believe that Satan is the author of all the evil which is among us. And if God does not exist, how shall we explain the worlds and men, their origin and continuance? And if Satan simply doesn't exist, how explain the wickedness which infests our life? Who conducts the roaring business which was once the Devil's and still continues to go on?

The Word of God offers eternal life now and forever to men. That is to men who embrace the cross and the Saviour "who hung and suffered there."

"There is a green hill far away,
Without a city wall,
Where the dear Lord was crucified,
Who died to save us all.

"There was no other good enough
To pay the price of sin;
He only could unlock the gate
Of heaven, and let us in."

The act enacted on Calvary's hill sealed forever what Jesus said concerning his mission. He came "to seek and to save that which was lost" and to give life "more abundantly." This completed his mission in the large, and a man's eternal life begins at the moment when the Father receives him, the Son redeems him, and the Spirit regenerates him. The eternal security thus offered to me is a final transaction. No one shall ever be strong enough to pluck them out of his hand.

The heavens of which Jesus spoke is not like that which Mohammed set up in the Koran. In Islam's garden of delight shall dwell all obedient Moslems. From "The Chapter of the Inevitable" we learn of the lucky fellows, as opposed to the unlucky ones,

"who are brought nigh,
In gardens of pleasure!
A crowd of those of yore,
And a few of those of the latter day!
And gold-waft couches, reclining on them face to face.
Around them shall go eternal youths, with goblets and ewers and a cup of flowing wine; no headache shall they feel therefrom, nor shall their wits be dimmed!
And fruits such as they deem the best;
And flesh of fowl as they desire;
And bright and large-eyed maids like hidden pearls
A reward for which they have done!
They shall hear no folly there and no sin
Only the speech, Peace, Peace!"

Brethren, this is not heaven. Rather is it a sensuous oriental description of a scalawag's private palace parlors. You will note that it is a masculine resort where properly selected girls of spicy variety flirt and play and serve. No, no, Mohammed, heaven is not a Turkish harem.

On the contrary listen to Jesus! In John's Gospel we hear him say: "In my Father's House are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

"And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

"And whither I go ye know and the way ye know."

And in the Revelation, John, in describing the heavenly Jerusalem, writes: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

No comment is necessary, so I conclude this effort with a wise observation of John Greenleaf Whittier's:

"We search the world for truth,
We cull the good, the pure, the beautiful,
From graven stone and written scroll;
From all old flower fields of the soul;
And, weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest
To find, that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read."

"An old foggy is one so obsessed with the past that he can see nothing in the present, and less in the future. That is an old foggy. But what is a new foggy? He is short-sighted in the other direction, so overwrought with today that he is blind to all the merits and virtues of the past. Let us not be fogies, either old fogies or new fogies."—Roger W. Babson.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN ITALY

In Italy under the fascist regime religious education is compulsory. Every elementary school displays the crucifix. The program includes prayers, religious hymns, religious talks, comments on the prayers, episodes from the Old and New Testaments, lessons on the life of Jesus and the Ten Commandments, lessons on the history of the Catholic religion, lives of great Italian saints, principles of religious life and worship, the study of the seven sacraments and religious poems. Teachers must be approved by the Catholic church. All education must be directed to the support of the fascist state. Within those limits it is free.—The Baptist.

THE PROPOSED NEW CALENDAR

Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, writing in the "Christian Herald," says of the proposed new calendar: "Men are threatening to tinker with our calendar. They argue that a thirteen-month year, each month having exactly twenty-eight days, with New Year's day thrown in unattached, would act as a great stabilizer of modern industry and commerce. But the final conclusive test will be the bearing of the amended calendar upon the religious beliefs and practices of the people. It will need to be demonstrated that the great religious anniversaries, ranging from the Lord's Day and the Sabbath to Christmas and Easter, will suffer no loss of prestige and will be involved in no subtle or direct disintegration of influence. "This is a generation of change, and it is not surprising that men should even want a new calendar. The Scriptures speak of one who shall "think to change times and laws." (Dan. 7:25).—C. E. Elderdice in Methodist Protestant.

SHALL THE CITIZENS MAKE THE WARS?

War of aggression would be waged under no circumstances by the United States until its declaration had been ratified by a majority of the voters, under a bill submitted to Congress last week by Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., of New York. "If the proposed amendment were adopted," Mr. Fish asserted, "it would constitute another obstacle or check on war, and the responsibility for the final decision would be placed squarely on those who have to carry the rifle and bear the burdens." True, but why confine the rifle-bearers' opportunity to aggressive war only? This type of war has already been outlawed by the Kellogg-Briand treaty, which has been ratified by the Senate after the usual amount of speech-making had taken place. If Mr. Fish expects to accomplish any actual results through this legislation, why not extend it to include all war and make its effectiveness contingent upon the passage of a similar bill by other powers? Or if he intends it only as a pacific gesture, why not make it a magnificent gesture rather than a mere wave of the hand?—Zion's Herald.

DEAN INGE'S VIEW REPUDIATED

Dean Inge's jingoistic views have stirred the ire of many of his fellow-Englishmen. Not a few have undertaken to counteract the effect of his ravings and a number of prominent English preachers have denied that he represents any very considerable English opinion. Doubtless there are many in England as well as in continental Europe who cannot understand America's aloofness and attitude toward war debts, and some anti-American spirit has been generated as a result. But Inge probably represents the extreme of bitterness rather than the average. At least 13 bishops and several other clergymen of the Church of England insist that such is the case. In a signed statement they repudiate the passage in Dean Inge's book, "England," to which Senator Robinson referred in the debate on the pact at Washington. The statement quoted by Senator Robinson is as follows:

"If the British flag were hauled down in the North American continent it is more than possible that the nations of Europe, enraged by the bloated prosperity and airs of superiority of the man who won the war, would combine to draw Shylock's teeth, and Great Britain, after losing Canada, would no longer have any motive to help the nation which in circumstances supposed, would have finally forfeited its friendship." The bishops say in their statement: "Senator Robinson is reported as asserting that the dean's remarks correctly interpreted the feelings of the great mass of English people. We wish to state that the passage quoted does not represent our views and in our opinion does not represent the views of any considerable number of Englishmen."

TREAT THEM LIKE THE REST

There is much ado about congressmen who vote dry and drink wet. How much of it is merely ado we do not know. But on the strength of an allegation that many congressmen practise such inconsistency, the case is thrust in the faces of prohibitionists as an argument against prohibition, and they are challenged to say what they are going to do with regard to the matter. The answer is not difficult. For purposes of legislation what we want in congress is a solid voting majority. For the vote of a congressman he is responsible to his constituents. If they will see to it that he votes right on prohibition, they may deal with his personal habits as they will.

But of course that is not all. From the points of view of religion, morals, hygiene and social welfare, "The Baptist" stands for abstinence—for teetotalism, if you please to be so specific. A congressman who votes dry for political purposes, but who thinks and drinks wet, will not last many years. Further, if any congressman actually violates the law, treat him like any other person guilty of a felony or a misdemeanor. And finally, within a few years, the educational propaganda of total abstinence and law observance, now opening up, will remove from the tippler the cloak of respectability, whether in congress or elsewhere. Join the ranks and help to make it so.—The Baptist.

The Church and Enforcement

has rendered a marked service to his community by doing a striking piece of detective work, and thus awakening public opinion and forcing the sluggish officers of the law into action. But the exception is very rare. It would be better to have no exception at all than it would be to have every minister, every member, every Epworth League, every Ladies' Aid Society focusing attention on possible violations of law, acting as spies upon their neighbors and injecting gossip and suspicion into every rank of society. If any one is seeking a method of weakening the influence of the Church, and of the forces supporting Prohibition, there would scarcely be a more effective way to accomplish these ends than by turning every church into a detective agency, and every minister into an "Old Sleuth."

This is not to say however that the church is to keep quiet when law is flagrantly violated. She is within her proper function when she speaks out against the evils of the day and seeks to turn public opinion into such mold as will be intolerant of evil. And she is also within her rights when she urges Christian men and women to shoulder their civic responsibilities and challenges every man and woman of conscience to the support of our enforcement agencies.

Our Worship Program

OUTLINE OF "THE FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER"

MY CHURCH

MONDAY, March 11—"The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:18). Read 2 Peter 3:1-9. Let us use the first personal pronoun that the truth may more readily strike our own hearts, and also that we may make it a personal testimony. So I say, I love my church because it has stood the test of time and links me with a mighty and sacred past. In the singing of its hymns I am "tuning in" with the sainted dead of many generations. These Scriptures have been the strength and comfort of God's children through many ages past. The prayers that I hear in my church are echoes of the yearnings of the heart in all history and which the church in every age has taught men to voice. Light has dawned and opinions have changed in many lines, but the church remains the custodian of truth, the bearer of "good news," the preacher of righteousness and the inspirer of men's hearts to devotion and service.

TUESDAY, March 12—"Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages" (Eph. 3:21). Read Eph. 3. I love my church because, though it is old, it is ever young. In visions and ideals it is always renewing its youth. It teaches lessons from history, but it is also prophetic. It has a program and a goal. It makes promises for the future. It causes us to look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. So it keeps me hopeful and cheerful.

WEDNESDAY, March 13—"That they all may be one" (John 17:21). Read John 17. I love my church because it is comprehensive, and not exclusive. If it were exclusive it would be little. Being comprehensive it is truly world-wide in its scope, its love and its fellowship. It includes all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, who have been renewed by the power of his Spirit. More and more the walls of prejudice and bitterness that separate the followers of the Lord Jesus are breaking down and men are learning how to love one another and to fellowship one another in the midst of their differences.

THURSDAY, March 14—"The field is the world" (Matt. 13:38). Read Mark 9:33-42. I love my church because in every way it is big and challenging. It brings to me the loftiest and most sublime themes for my contemplation. It opens to me a wide outlook upon life. Nothing human is alien to its interest. No race or people is outside the pale of its sympathies. It brings the teeming millions of India, China, Africa and South America within the range of my neighborhood and challenges me with their needs. It is big and it enlarges my life.

MY GOD AND FATHER

FRIDAY, March 15—"He is my God . . . my father's God" (Ex. 15:2). Read Psalm 63:1-8 and Acts 17:22-28. God is mine, as he was my father's. He is part of my inheritance. But he is also mine because I have made definite choice of him. And he is becoming more and more my rich possession as I come to know him better. Though my knowledge of him here is only in part, I shall ultimately know him and see him as he is.

SATURDAY, March 16—"The heavens declare the glory of God" (Psalm 19:1). Read Psalm 19:1-6 and Rom. 1:19, 20. Surely it is the fool who hath said in his heart there is no God. The witness of him is everywhere about us. Nor does it grow faint with the progress of knowledge. The more we know the more intelligently can we hear "earth with her thousand voices praising God."

SUNDAY, March 17—"Lord show us the Father, and it sufficeth us" (John 14:8). Read 1 Cor. 2:9-16. After all the chief thing for which we go to church is to find God. And we do find him there as nowhere else. Elsewhere the earth is so much with us, and its distractions are so obtrusive that his presence is dim and the still small voice is drowned in the confusions of life. But here, with our thoughts united and concentrated, we come upon the reality which is behind the mask of affairs. He dwelleth not in temples made with hands, but he does reveal himself in the devout worship of his children.

Solving Problems that Face Every Superintendent

Reverent Opening Exercises

By Will R. Johnson

Fir some years our Sunday school had been wrestling with the problems of irreverence in its program, and the varied, undesirable reactions arising from this trouble. The opening exercises were seldom much better than a bedlam of disturbance, because of one peculiar circumstance and another. During the singing of a hymn, or the reading of the Scripture, or announcements, and even during prayer, inattention and worse could almost certainly be counted upon from some source. The teachers and officers seemed powerless to check it, and eventually came to accept it as a matter of course. After such a so-called worship period, there was anything but a right spirit in either teacher or pupil for the lesson period.

After much prayer and consideration, it was decided that it was almost a psychological impossibility to bring about the radical change necessary, under existing conditions. The mixture of hymns, prayers, announcements, business, and the like was beyond control. With some misgivings the following readjustment was adopted:

At nine thirty the whole Sunday school meets for a song service, during which new hymns are taught and old ones studied more closely. Something about the hymns is presented as well as the hymns themselves. Then a few minutes are taken for announcements and class business, such as class roll call and birthday recognitions.

At ten o'clock sharp all departments of the Sunday school, with the exception of the very small children, march into the main church auditorium. There they quietly stand at attention, in classes. The pastor then takes charge of a fifteen minute worship service. First there is silent prayer, concluding with the chanting of "The Lord is in his holy temple." This is followed by a hymn, then Scripture reading, offering with prayer and organ, special music, hymn and prayer, concluding with the Lord's Prayer. Class session follows. There are no closing exercises except in the individual classes. The signal for closing the service is the beginning of the organ prelude of the church service.

Several marked results have followed the adoption of this plan. Deep reverence is noted everywhere. The teachers report a new spirit in the classes. Inattention has given place to interest. An increasing number remain for church service.

Birthday Records for Superintendents

By W. H. Klein

The superintendent of our Sunday school believed that the recognition of birthdays offered a splendid opportunity to get into vital touch with each member at least once a year. Therefore after studying the situation for about six months he inaugurated a system of obtaining a complete enrollment of the school for the purpose of organizing a birthday department. To accomplish this without interfering with the regular routine work of the school his assistant passed the enrollment cards out to a few classes each Sunday, and within a reasonable time the enrollment was completed. When they were obtained the names, addresses, date of birth, and the like, were classified by weeks, a record book being used with a page for each week. Then a series of three letters was prepared by the superintendent for three groups of members according to age, that is, one letter for members from four to seven years, the second for those seven to fifteen years, and the third from fifteen years upward.

On January 1, 1918, the mailing of letters was started, each person receiving a letter about a week previous to his birthday. The results were at once apparent, far greater than our fondest hopes had anticipated, and since 1918 it has become a part of the regular routine of our school.

The superintendent always believed that the ideal method of preparing letters would be to typewrite an individual letter to each person. This, however, being impossible with the average school whose superintendent is generally a busy person, he prepared the series of three and had them printed in imitation of typewriting, leaving the signature blank. The series of letters has been changed each year, a different style, contents, and color of paper being used. The superintendent always prepares the letters himself and gives of his best efforts to make them original and to convey from his heart something suitable for the age of the person to whom a letter is sent. The letters are always mailed in sealed envelopes under first-class postage. No offering is mentioned in any way in the letter, but a small birthday offering envelope is enclosed. The returns from these envelopes are surprising, enough being received each year to pay the entire expense of sending out the letters in the department (printing and postage), and usually, in addition, over a half hundred dollars are received for use in purchasing needed equipment for our school. Of course the ideal manner in using the surplus would be for missionary purposes, but the average school greatly needs extra money for equipment.

The superintendent personally signs each letter in his own handwriting, and prepares, seals, and addresses the envelope with a pen. One evening a week is set aside for this purpose. At this point perhaps some one may inquire why the superintendent should mail all these letters. Why not have a regular birthday secretary for this purpose? Answer: here is an opportunity for a superintendent to make that connection with each member of his school in a vital manner that tends to strengthen the interest between school and superintendent. This is an opportunity that is not presented through any other avenue except by a personal visit in the homes.

The superintendent always carries with him a complete enrollment of the entire school for his own use. This is aside from the birthday enrollment. In his enrollment changes of addresses are noted as they occur. Our school now consists of seven completely organized departments, ten superintendents, and forty-six regular teachers with several substitutes. Five of our department superintendents have on an average of over 150 credits in teacher-training, and about half of our teachers are our own young men and women trained in our own teacher-training classes.

THE BIBLE AND EDUCATION

Everyone who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may be called educated, and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, among Europeans and Americans, can take its place. Western civilization is founded upon the Bible; our ideas, our wisdom, our philosophy, our literature, our art and ideals come more from the Bible than from all other books put together. It is a revelation of the divine and the human; it contains the loftiest religious aspiration along with a candid representation of all that is earthly, sensual, and devilish. I thoroughly believe in a university education for both men and women, but I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible. For in the Bible we have the nature of boys and girls, of men and women more accurately charted than in the work of any modern novelist or playwright. You can learn more human nature by reading your Bible than by living in a great city like New York.—William Lyons Phelps.

THE CRY FOR GOD

No matter how or when or where the veil is lifted, heart and flesh no longer cry out for the living God, for he is with us. One such moment means more, teaches more, reveals more than all the libraries in the world. At the end of his agony Job learned the Truth of Truths, the first truth and the last, the truth that makes all other truth true, when he said, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee." The silence which follows is a silence not of dumb submission, but of a wise humility mingled with awe. He repents for himself, he prays for his friends who, with the folly that was their only wisdom, sought to comfort him. Many years were given him to live, and riches and honors, but we may be sure he walked the earth with reverent feet, and that he was never again afraid of a storm. Happy is the man who, by whatever dim way, has arrived at the quiet assurance in which there is peace to labor, the patience to wait, and the power to endure.—Joseph Fort Newton.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for March 17)

XI.—The Christian Sabbath

Scripture Lesson—Genesis 2:2, 3; Exodus 20:8-11; Matthew 12:1-14; 28: 1-10; John 20:19; Acts 20:7; Romans 14:4-6; Revelation 1:10.

Printed Text—Ex. 20:8-11; Matt. 12:1-8; John 20:19; Rev. 1:10.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 92:1-8.
Golden Text—For the Son of man is lord of the sabbath.—Matt. 12:8.

Introductory Notes

Sabbath is not derived from a word meaning "seven," as some have thought, but from a word meaning "to desist." The original idea was probably a cessation from labor. The word was applied to certain other rest days as well as to the weekly Sabbath.

Unto Jehovah thy God—a clear recognition of the devotion of the day to worship as well as rest.

The social nature of the responsibility for the Sabbath is shown in the emphasis upon its application, even to the slave and the stranger that is within thy gates.

Six days—referring to the account in Gen. 1:5 to 2:3.

At the time of Jesus' ministry the Sabbath had been loaded down by many rabbinical rules. According to these rules, plucking grain in the field constituted an infraction of the law.

What David did. See 1 Sam. 21:1-6.

Showbread was unleavened bread, of which twelve loaves were kept for a week on a table in the temple. After the week was over they were eaten by the priests in the sanctuary.

The priests in the temple profane the Sabbath—by the labor involved in the sacrifices of the temple service. See Num. 28:9, 10.

I desire mercy. See Hosea 6:6. Hosea emphasizes the superior importance of righteousness as compared with ceremonial formalities.

Evening on that day. John uses the modern method of counting hours, in regarding the evening hours at the close of the day as part of the first day rather than as the beginning of the second day.

Peace be unto you was a customary salutation.

On the Lord's day—an evidence that by the time of the writing of the Revelation the important place of the first day had been fixed.—E. Leigh Mudge.

The Need of the Sabbath

Man needs the rest of the Sabbath in addition to the rest of night. We have "the testimony of medical and scientific experts that the rest of the night does not restore the powers of mind and body to the same vitality they had twenty-four hours before, and that the natural forces run steadily lower from Monday morning until Saturday night, until these powers can be lifted back to their normal vitality and place only by the relaxation and rest of the seventh day. It is a curious scientific fact that Proudhon, the great socialist philosopher of France, attempted to work out mathematically the relative ratio of work to rest, which should secure the greatest efficiency and the largest product. Biased by no religious claim, but rather avowedly hostile to such influence, he found that six days of work and one of rest was the only right proportion, and when France put the tenth day in the place of the seventh she found that the working man took two holidays instead of one, and thereby entailed a loss upon the industrial production of the empire."

The Value of the Sabbath

There is need of special guarding against anything that tends to weaken the effect of the Sabbath law. To break down this safeguard is to open the door for the oppression of the poor, and of all the working classes. It is a terrible fate to be compelled to work seven days each week with no chance for better things, for home, for rest, for culture, for religion. There can be no permanent slavery or oppression or degradation where the Sabbath rights are reserved to all men and women who are employed by others. A holy Sabbath day is the jubilee of freedom. "Of all divine institutions, the most divine is that which secures a day of rest for man. I hold it to be the most valuable blessing ever conceded to man."

Frederick Saunders calls the sabbath the savings bank of humanity. If we lay away in it all through our youth and prime, week by week, and year by year, we shall not be bankrupt in our old age. "Blessed is the man . . . that keepeth the sabbath," Isaiah 56:2. John Harper, the book publisher, was one of the members of the well-known firm by that name. Is it a wonder that God so honored and prospered him? Isaiah 58:13, 14. His biographer writes: "Neither he (John Harper) nor his brethren ever worked on Sunday, even during their apprenticeship. It is told of him that one Saturday evening, when he was a journeyman printer in the employment of Jonathan Seymour (of New York City), he was informed that he was expected to work next day on the catalogue of an auction sale, which was to be held on the following Monday. 'That I will not do,' was the sturdy, though respectful reply. 'I will forfeit my papers, but I will not work on Sunday.' When the clock struck twelve that night, John Harper laid down his composing stick and went home, regardless of the threat to discharge him. On Monday morning Mr. Seymour, who admired the pluck and moral courage displayed by the young man, apologized for having spoken harshly to him, and made him foreman of a department. When in business for himself Mr. Harper never allowed any work to be done in the establishment on Sunday, and this custom was uninterruptedly continued to the end of the office."

Make the Sabbath Attractive

The Sabbath should be made attractive, not by breaking it and seeking pleasure first, but by bringing out its inner joys and possibilities. One test of the right use of the Sabbath was that it should be a delight (Isa. 58:13). There will always be some to whom such a Sabbath will be an irksome restraint, as there are some children who always hate going to school. The school exercises do not stop on their account, but they are made as attractive as possible without interfering with study. So should the Sabbath be. It should be made attractive; useless rules should not hamper the conscience or destroy freedom. Especial attractions should be arranged for the children.

All days should be happy days, but pre-eminently the Sabbath should be a bright and joyous day. Do not relegate the work of this day for your children to the Sabbath school. Give the day and yourself up wholly to the little ones. Make a wise mixture of amusement and instruction, of goodness and games. Make it a day that the little fellows will be sorry to see pass away, and whose return they will welcome.

What Should Christianity, As Interpreted by the Brethren Church, Mean to Those Around Us?

By Gladys M. Spice, Secretary

This question was recently discussed in a Christian Endeavor meeting of one of our local societies. It was requested that the answer be given to other Endeavorers, through this column, for their consideration.

While we certainly dare not say that acceptance to strictly Brethren doctrines offers the only way of salvation, we DARE and SHOULD say that we believe our particular interpretation of God's Word is more nearly correct than any other. If we do not believe this, it is our duty to get into a church where we can honestly believe it.

Let us consider the things for which our church stands: The inspiration of the Word of God; Virgin birth of Jesus Christ; His substitutionary death on the cross; his resurrection and ascension; that all mankind is lost outside of Jesus Christ; that entrance into the new Life includes faith in Jesus as the Son of God; confession of sins, baptism by trine immersion, infilling of the Holy Spirit; observance of Holy Communion (which includes the Lord's Supper, Foot-washing and the Eucharist—the Eucharist typifying the past work of Christ for us, in the shedding of his blood on the cross for our sins, the feet washing typifying his present work for us as Intercessor at the right hand of God, the Lord's Supper, typifying his future work for us, when he shall complete our union with himself and we shall eat the Marriage Supper of the Lamb); prayer and anointing for the sick; non-conformity to the world; second coming of our Lord.

Now what should these things mean to the world about us? They will not mean a thing unless we let the world know that we believe them. And furthermore we should be ready and able to give a reason for such belief. What is it that makes people ask for certain brands of goods and certain models of automobiles? Simply the fact that they have been given publicity and the people in using them, have found them to be all that they were represented to be.

It is our duty as Brethren representatives of the Christian faith to let the world know where we stand and what we stand for, and then be very sure that our lives are consistent with our profession!

Almafuerte, Argentina

For a long time we have been looking for a place that might serve for a place for summer conferences like Winona Lake or Shipshewana, but such places are far apart in Argentina. However, we have had our eyes on Almafuerte because it is near a great dam that is being built in Rio Tercero (Third river) and which will produce a lake about seven miles in diameter and one hundred and fifty feet deep with a peninsula extending to the center where it rises in a mountain, making a potential summer resort.

In November I spent a week there with the Bible Coach to find out the prospects for a work. Brethren Luis Siccardi and Robert Crees were with me. A boy received a tract and took it to his parents who immediately sent him to invite us to their home. They had been converted in Rioja and were praying for someone to come and open a mission in Almafuerte. Their home is now open to us whenever we go there. The father has charge of the supplies for the dam.

Then a Norwegian civil engineer loaned us a vacant hall he had near by, and others gave us boxes and boards for seats. In spite of rain and mud the attendance increased and we found several families that had attended missions in other towns.

After a week we had to return to Rio Cuarto, but in December Brother Crees and I returned and conducted a Vacation Bible school for two weeks and prepared a Christmas program. Forty one children enrolled, some of them being from leading families. There was a large attendance at the Christmas program and a large number requested us to continue the work.

However, on account of the illness of the wife of the Norwegian we were obliged to seek another hall. A prominent business man suggested that we ask for the use of the old school building, since a new one is now in use. The old one belongs to Dr. Gallardo, owner of the town site and a very wealthy lawyer of Cordoba. As he is Catholic and his wife is the donor of the magnificent Catholic church in Almafuerte, I scarcely had faith to approach him. We prayed over the matter a great deal and I went. He received me very kindly and in the presence of his wife said that our work had made a very good impression on the town and that it was far better than that of the priests. He therefore gave us the keys to the building and the free use of it until such time as the Federal government may want it for a school,—which will probably never be. The hall is about 27 by 50 feet, and although a little to one side of the town, is accessible to all.

After our General Conference in Rio Cuarto, Brother Romanenghi and I went to inaugurate the hall and follow with a week of meetings. We found that the priest, who had not been there for a year before, had gotten busy, and arranged for the opening of the new church the same day, to be followed by a campaign lasting until Easter. His dedication sermon consisted of the usual list of slanders about the Protestants. However, the people in general now know us well enough to recognize the lies, which thus reacted against the priest. We have a nice group of children and grown folks whom the priest cannot frighten. One man, formerly a Catholic, saw me give a tract to a man who threw it down and stamped upon it. This aroused his indignation and his curiosity. He went and got the tract and took it home and read it. Then he came and got a Bible. Now he and his entire family are enthusiastic workers for the mission.

As there is good train service from Rio

Cuarto on Thursdays we have arranged to have regular meetings on that night, so that Brother Romanenghi or I can be present. The work is new and there are still many dangers. But in addition to the things I have mentioned there have been many other instances of evident answer to prayer and proof of divine guidance, which gives us confidence in the work. I got a man to haul some gravel and fix the way leading to the hall. It turned out that he formerly lived in Rio Cuarto and his children had been to Sunday school there. Now they will all attend in Almafuerte. The new location is bringing new families from that part of town.

Brother Romanenghi will care for the work during February while I am on an extended preaching tour of which I will write later. Pray especially for this new work, that Satan may find no entrance by which to destroy it. C. F. YODER.

The Mystery of Marshal Feng

By Rev. Jonathan Goforth, D. D., Szepering kai, Manchuria, Forty Years a Missionary of the Presbyterian Church of Canada

This friend and associate of General Feng Yu-hsiang, writes as follows to The Life of Faith:

"Last September I went to Nanking hoping to find Marshal Feng there, but he had gone a thousand miles away into the northwest.

"General Chang Chih-chiang was there acting for Marshal Feng, and on a table in his large reception-room gift Bibles were piled up ready for distribution. He presented me with one, and wrote with his own hand on the fly leaf: 'May grace and peace from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ be bestowed upon Pastor Goforth and family even unto evermore.' He signed himself Chang Chih-chiang, the servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, and affixed his seal.

"General, I said, 'Marshal Feng is about the most spoken-against man in the world. Many say he is not a Christian. What do you say?'

"I believe him to be a real Christian," he replied.

"General Chiang, a man of about forty-three years of age, is chairman of the commission for the disbandment of superfluous soldiers, and also chairman of the commission for the suppression of opium. Marshal Feng is a member of the same commission. He it was who led General Chiang to Christ.

"Among other things he told how the Marshal had invited all the Chinese pastors of Nanking to dine with him. To them the Marshal said something to the following effect: 'Do not imagine that I have given up Christianity because I do not have religious work carried on in the Army as in former days. Then our Army was small, and we could do as we wished, but now our Army is very large. There are two Mohammedan Generals in my Army, and another General is a noted Buddhist. It would not be right to curtail their religious privileges, for we stand for freedom in religion. We know that man "does not live by bread alone," and our Christian reliance is upon the Word of God.'

"An earnest Christian doctor who has been in close association with Marshal Feng for months recently, seemed to be surprised that the reality of his Christianity could be questioned. On several occasions the Marshal asked him to dine with him, and each time he gave thanks before eating. The doctor also told me that Marshal Feng had said that his hope for the regeneration of China was on the Bible, and not on the principles of Dr. Sun.

"The testimony of two missionaries living in Nanking was that while Marshal Feng sojourned in the city he was the most outstanding Christian there.

"When I first came to know Marshal Feng intimately, he was a brigade commander, I saw proof sufficient to convince me that he was a man really born again of the Spirit of God. I have not changed my opinion since then, and no day has passed without praying for him. My trust is in our almighty Savior."—Missionary Review of the World.

The Need of Solitude—It would be unfair for me to speak for others, but for myself let me say that all my creative ideas have come to me when in solitude. They have not been executed or marketed in solitude. One may plan his work in solitude, but he cannot work out his plans under such conditions. Hence I say that all features of life from the monastery to the mill have their economic uses. However, it is very apparent that today the mill is receiving too much attention and the monastery too little. Sunday observance is not simply a religious rite but an economic need as well. A successful nation requires that its people give a proper proportion of their time to meditation and quiet.

The great creative plans that have made the world progress have been born in solitude. Very few new, worthwhile ideas have come to you or anyone else while in an office. Crowds have their use, but they are useless for creative and original work. The thoughts and inspirations which have built America have been born in garrets, in the woods, and on streams away from people.

Hence my appeal for solitude, which offers the greatest source of power, the greatest mine of wealth and the greatest opportunity for spiritual growth—within the reach of all.—Roger Babson.

The companion or friend who keeps us up to the best that is in us is the one that should be cherished.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

Although news from the First Brethren church of Winchester, a mission church, has been very scarce on the pages of the Evangelist during the past year, it isn't because the little flock here is dead or dying, for we are very much alive and we want the Brethren to know it.

The reason why we have not appeared on the written page is because I, having acted as corresponding secretary in the past, have been very busy locating and establishing a home. Everyone acquainted with missionary work knows the importance of having some headquarters from which to work. The burden of the work, especially a new work, has usually to be assumed by the missionary, but praise the Lord, I was not alone, neither without help from the Brethren here nor without success. Thanks be unto God, who has been and is so gracious. He has given me strength to labor and wisdom to plan and now today I can say that with his help I have bought a lot, built a home, bought a new automobile, was given a loving wife and a darling baby boy, all within the past year. This somewhat explains why I have neglected sending in news from the field here.

The work is thriving and advancements are being made along several lines. Within the past year eight souls were won to the Lord and the ones already within the ranks are becoming more united as Brethren in the Lord, both in work and worship. The church has purchased an additional lot.

We regret to mention the loss of Brother Charles Fogle, one of the faithful Brethren who so willingly gave of his time and service in establishing the church at its very beginning and stood by it and for it until the Lord called him away early in September, 1928. Brother Fogle is missed by all and I, his pastor, always admired the open stand he took for Brethren teaching and practise. He was loyal and unwilling to compromise. God grant that more of this loyalty and non-compromising might be possessed by us all.

Following our Summer Bible school with an average attendance of 50 we organized a Mary and Martha Sisterhood for our girls.

Our Christian Endeavor Society is very much awake with devotion and enthusiasm for real service. We entered a contest which was carried on by six of the largest and most active societies from the largest churches here in Winchester. These societies, acting as a union of societies, each prepared a special program and all met together in one of the larger churches. A banner was to be awarded the society having the best program, the finest spirit and the greatest attendance. To judge from outward appearances as to size, strength and equipment of these societies you would have said there is no hope or very little show for a little mission church like ours, but what do you think happened? Well, we won the banner and we mean to keep it for a long time. We have recently organized a Junior Endeavor Society with 25 members.

Our Woman's Missionary Society is growing and undertaking plans to help pay the debt of the church. In fact, every part of our machinery is working toward that end.

We are very much alive in this beautiful Shenandoah valley and if there is anyone in the brotherhood thinking we are stagnating or dying we want to inform that one that he is mistaken.

The pastor and members ask from every praying saint a very special interest in their prayers for a mighty outpouring of God's spirit upon us as we enter our special revival meetings beginning two weeks preceding Easter. We want to see a revival all over the brotherhood.

REV. E. J. ROHART, Pastor.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

The Switzerland of America

The last report from the church here was the account of the dedication of the new building. Perhaps there may be an idea that there has been nothing to report since that time, but an anti-climax was reached. We had barely got into the new building and had not as yet become completely familiar with it and the increased attendance, when the epidemic which was so general made its appearance here and naturally the only thing that could be done was to take care of the sick. Though we visited hundreds of cases, we were spared in our person and family the ravages of the affliction. Plans had been made for a special Christmas program and this was carried out though hampered to quite an extent by the sickness of those who were to take part. The program was different from any given here and was well received.

When Brother R. Paul Miller was here we planned and introduced a system for handling the financing of the new building which started to work immediately and has been working very good ever since. There had never been any effective system for the handling of the current expenses of the church, so a system was put into practice which has proved its worth and is bringing order out of what had been for years only chaos. This year has been of necessity a very heavy year from the standpoint of finances, and as we have no one of wealth in our congregation, it has meant a lot of sacrificing for the members. They are loyally putting their shoulders to the wheel and some are surprised to find how freely the wheel moves when all are working.

During the winter season when so many of the churches are having their addition revivals, we are having a subtraction, or back door revival. The membership list here had not in recent years been revised, and so carried a lot of dead and half dead timber. We have prepared a pledge card which has been given to five different committees and these cards are presented to every member whom it is possible to get in touch with. The signing of these cards pledge the signer to attendance and support as far as they are able. Any one refusing to sign is automatically dropped from the membership list. We have made an effort to impress upon them that there is no virtue alone in having a name on the membership list. We are not going to have so many members when this is concluded, but we will know where they are, and will have a list as active and as much alive as it is possible to have the members of a church organization. This will clear the deck for the meeting here this fall, which ought, from the present outlook, to be the best that the Oak Hill Brethren church has ever had.

Since the "Fludemie" has passed, our attendance for the Sunday school has gradually started to climb. Our attendance for preaching services is splendid. We have been using special subjects for the night services for several weeks and will continue for several more weeks. Our services are the best attended they have ever been, and this is our sixth year of service here. While there are two churches of larger membership I am told that we have the largest Sunday night crowds in Oak Hill. If we who have been on the field all this time can fill the main auditorium, we are commencing to wonder where a well known evangelist is going to put the people when he comes to Oak Hill this autumn. Surely the outlook is encouraging, more so than at any time in the history of the church.

We are now commencing to look forward to entertaining the Southeastern District Conference here the second week of June. With the good roads as we now have them opening up into Virginia from South and East of here we are expecting this to be one of the best conferences from standpoint of attendance and accomplishments that the district has had. The people here are expecting to do their share toward making it a success.

These days are busy days, but since results are now being realized that had been prayed and hoped for for years, our labor is not all toil. We covet the interest of the brotherhood that this section of the field should produce results meet for the Master's needs.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

MIAMISBURG, OHIO

I thought it might be of interest to some of you to know how things are going at the Miamisburg church. Many of you have been there and no doubt have many pleasant memories of the place. Well, we are not dead yet, as has been hinted already. We are yet on the way and are making some progress, even though slow.

I was called to this pastorate nearly three years ago and they have endured me ever since. I don't know how they did it, but I am glad they did. The first two years we had Sunday school every Sunday and preaching every two weeks, and would close the year with a Christmas program. Then we would wait for the groundhog to decide on the weather before opening up. This year we decided to go straight through the winter. And I would have you know that these people are ninety percent church-going and are a loyal and enthusiastic bunch of workers. During my pastorate I had held two communions for them when every member was present. Pastors, how does that sound? A one hundred percent communion! Can you duplicate it?

We have held no revivals as yet, but are trying to sow the good seed. Just recently I had the extreme pleasure of receiving six young people into the church by confession of faith and repentance and by baptism and the laying on of hands. They ranged in age from 14 to 20. Having no convenient place for baptizing, we went to the Dayton church to perform the rite.

We are trying to remember the days for the special offerings. Our offerings may be small but we are doing what we can. These good people have been trying to do something for themselves, also. During my stay here they have replaced the old organ with a piano, and now are repairing the furnace, and have other improvements under consideration. We may be driving slow, but we are sure, I hope.

We have had much sickness among the members this winter.

Some time since we held a Home Coming at the church. It was a great day. Old friends from far and near came and enjoyed the day together. We had a splendid program with Dr. W. H. Beachler present (and he is one of the home boys) and a luncheon at noon. At two o'clock in the afternoon he gave us a real spiritual feast.

I live some thirty-five miles from the church and cannot give it the attention that it needs, but we are doing what we can.

H. C. FUNDERBURG,
New Carlisle, Ohio.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving along very well after about two months of unusually cold weather, with much snow and ice, which of course hindered attendance at all services.

It is milder now and we are expecting to get back to normal, and even exceed that. The W. M. S. has finished its mission study book, and are holding the regular monthly devotional meetings which are well attended, considering their fewness in number. The Sunday school is holding its own with a prospect of increasing in attendance and efficiency. The interest is maintained at the mission point at Godfrey, and some of them attend the Sunday evening service at the church when they can get to the good road. By the time this is being read, we expect to be in a revival at the church, with Brother H. H. Rowsey of Falls City, Nebraska, as our leader. We hope to put on an intensive two weeks campaign, and are expecting good results. While there has been much sickness and many deaths here this winter, we have lost no members by death, and health is now reasonably good and we are going strong. We praise the Lord for all good and trust him for grace to overcome. Pray for this mission point and for our workers on the field. L. G. WOOD.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The Elkhart church just closed a wonderful revival with Brother S. M. Whetstone of Napanee, Indiana and Brother Glen Wagner of Goshen, Indiana. The Spirit of God was with us throughout—our work was made intensive from the beginning as the church realized we had only a "short time" to make our drive for souls.

Brother Whetstone preached the Word with power and conviction—no man whether saint or sinner could mistake his duty toward his God and his fellowman.

His preaching was of a constructive nature—a church always feels stronger with this type of preaching—his work was far-reaching.

Brother Wagner, singing evangelist, did some very effective work, with the co-operation of our choir director, Sister Fay Wilson, and her choir. Much good was done through the medium of song—it was a strong factor in making our meetings a success. Brother Wagner's solo work was pleasing and did much in leading men and women to a confession.

There were twenty accessions. These services were in reality a climax of our year's work. Men, women and children have been received into the church throughout the year—fifty-five during the last fifteen months.

Our neighboring churches, Goshen, Napanee, South Bend and Ardmore came in large delegations. Scarcely a service passed that some of these churches were not represented. Their presence contributed much to the spirit of the meeting. We surely appreciated their happy spirit of co-operation.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

How happy I am that my salvation does not depend on nature, or any of the natural fulminations of man in the varied religions of the day. These things are all too fickle. Last Wednesday evening it began snowing here, and the next morning we awoke to a seventeen inch fall of the beautiful white stuff, the deepest snow known here, at least for a long time. Then in a morning or two, we awoke to find the temperature down to four degrees below zero, and this all when we had expected winter to be over with us here. Well, it all was a real surprise. The snow was enjoyed and the cold endured.

Today with all the cold and snow we had seventy-nine out for services. One year ago eighty-nine. Last Sunday we had ninety-one out, and one year ago that day eighty-eight. There is good interest also in the services.

A couple of Sundays ago I chanced to be in my home as the young men's Sunday school class went by the window to their class meeting. I counted about twenty-five. The thought that flashed through my mind was, What if there were no school here! where would these young men be? Not more than two or three of them would likely have been in Sunday school and church services. Then I asked myself, is it worth while to give them that opportunity here, or rather to make it for them? It seemed to me that there could only be one answer.

All boarding students are required to attend Sunday school and church service, and the midweek prayer meeting. Then also they are required to study the Bible four days in the week, with a forty minute recitation period. The school calls out the best young men and women of the mountains, for here, as elsewhere, the best and most promising young folks go to school. These services, and their requirements, and then the Bible study through the week, gives much opportunity for a real acquaintance with the word, and the life revealed therein. Ninety-eight per cent of our students here are members of the Brethren church, and over ninety-nine percent of our graduates are also members of our church.

For some years now we have been at times teaching what we have called a Normal Term, beginning right after the regular year's work ends. This is never taught except that there is sufficient demand for it. This year we have had the biggest demand for this work that we have had for a number of years. The attendance for the regular school work is also up to, if not above, the average.

Some of the workers are planning on staying over through vacation time, and doing special Bible work—Vacation Bible School Work. We have never done it before, but the time now seems ripe for it and we shall be most happy to see it put on. It will possibly comprise a week of special Bible work here, i. e., Institute work. Then there will be Vacation Bible School in communities beyond us, where some of our students live. We ask for special prayer for this work.

We are glad to know that some are sending in their subscriptions for "The Riverside Beacon." This gives a better idea of what is going on here than one can get otherwise, except by a visit. Sunday school classes and C. E. societies could send their subscriptions as a club, thus saving postage. Our regular school work for the year ends April 5th. May we ask again that you pray for the work here and the workers that all may be led by him who doeth all things well. G. E. DRUSHAL.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

I have been asked to write a line for the Evangelist concerning our work at this place, and I am glad to do so. Everything must have a beginning, and accordingly Harrah is in its infancy, but bids fair to develop into a healthy child. They have a commodious plant, in an unworked, unchurched field, and last but not least a very loyal band of members that are willing to sacrifice to the shame of many of our churches. It was my privilege to be present at their recent business meeting and to hear their financial report for the year past. That report would do credit to many churches many times their size. A union meeting was recently held in the village with a goodly number of confessions but little immediate results for the Brethren, due to the fact that our people had no pastor, and also that our doctrines are so new to the community that it will take some time to have things in shape for a harvest for the Brethren. Brother Bauman spent a week with them at the Holiday season, which if he had continued would no doubt have resulted in a great victory for our work, for he had a splendid hearing and good interest. I have been making a number of trips to the field for consultation with reference to locating a pastor, visiting, conducting communion for them and at present am conducting their mid-week services for them. This is in the nature of a worship service, as they have no regular pastor at present. I have recently baptized five, confirmed two, and anointed one. There are still others awaiting the rite of baptism. We believe that when we have located the right man for the pastorate that the work will go forward. Our plan is to help them as best we can and as much as we can until the pastor is located which will no doubt be before many months. Until then, let us not fail to pray for our Home Mission points and give them all the encouragement that it is possible to give. We need more of them. It would be well for every one of our larger churches to adopt a smaller work and get back of it with its moral and financial support. C. C. GRISSO, President Northwest Mission Board.

A TIMELY PRAYER FOR US ALL

Almighty God, Lord of all governments, help us, in the opening hours of this legislative session, to realize the sanctity of politics.

Save us from the sins to which we shall be subtly tempted as the calls of parties and the cries of interests beat upon this seat of government.

Save us from thinking about the next election when we should be thinking about the next generation.

Save us from dealing in personalities when we should be dealing in principles.

Save us from thinking too much about the vote of majorities when we should be thinking about the virtue of measures.

Save us, in crucial hours of debate, from saying the things that will take when we should be saying the things that are true.

Save us from indulging in catch-words when we should be searching for facts.

Save us from making party an end in itself when we should be making it a means to an end.

We do not ask mere protection from these temptations that will surround us in these legislative halls; we ask also for an ever finer insight into the meaning of government, that we may be better servants of the men and women who have committed the government of this commonwealth into our hands.

Help us to realize that the unborn are part of our constituency, although they have no vote at the polls.

May we have greater reverence for the truth than for the past. Help us to make party our servant rather than our master.

May we know that it profits us nothing to win elections if we lose our courage.

Help us to be independent alike of tyrannical majorities and tiring minorities when the truth abides in neither.

May sincerity inspire our motives and science inform our methods.

Help us to serve the crowd without flattering it, and believe in it without bowing to its idolatries.—Prayer by Glen Frank at the opening of the Wisconsin Senate.

to sing, the older you get the harder it is to acquire the habit. One man will give one hundred dollars to foreign missions, on Easter Sunday, without a bit of fuss or travail of soul. Another man will give five dollars, and in so-doing he will struggle like a sixty-year old man trying to sing a solo for the first time. At heart he feels that he has accomplished a remarkable feat, which he really has, perhaps. The whole trouble is that he didn't begin early enough. That is what makes it so hard for him.

IN a bitter speech against the 18th Amendment, Senator Reed of Missouri declares that during his campaign travels he never entered a single state, city or village where liquor was not offered him.

Evidently, the bootleggers felt perfectly safe with Mr. Reed. But the surprising thing is that he should tell about the matter.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

BOOTHE-TREDWAY—At the Oak Hill Brethren parsonage, February the sixteenth, occurred the wedding of Mr. Delbert Boothe of the Salem church and Miss Dorothy May Tredway of the same community. These young people are members of the Salem Brethren Sunday school. Ceremony by the undersigned. FREEMAN ANKREUM

JEVSBURY-PARKER—At the Brethren parsonage in Fort Scott, Kansas on Wednesday morning of February 20th, 1929, occurred the marriage of Miss Hazel Maude Jevsbury to Mr. Kenneth Clyde Parker. They are both well respected young people of a few miles southwest of the city. After the ceremony we repaired to the country home of the bride's parents where a bountiful wedding dinner was served. Mr. and Mrs. Parker will reside on a farm in their home neighborhood, where they enjoy the esteem of a large circle of friends and where they have resided from childhood.

Ceremony by the writer, who, with his wife, enjoyed the dinner and joyful fellowship with the families. L. G. WOOD.

GORDON-DEAN—On the evening of Saturday, January 19, at the home of the bride, occurred the wedding of Mr. Benjamin Gordon and Miss Sherry Dean. Both of these subjects of this young people are members of the Washington, D. C., First Brethren church. They will make their residence in Washington. The ceremony was performed by the writer. HOMER A. KENT.

FUNK-STEINBRAKER—Thursday evening, February 21, 1929, at the parsonage of the church of Mr. Kenneth Funk and Miss Minnie Steinbraker was solemnized at the Washington First Brethren church. It was a beautiful wedding with a large group of friends present to witness it. Miss Steinbraker has been a valued member of the local church for a number of years. Her ability as a soloist has been much appreciated. Mr. Funk, although not a member of this church, is a regular attendant. These young people will make their home in Washington. The wedding was performed by the writer. HOMER A. KENT.

IN THE SHADOW

COLLINS—Gordon M. Collins, son of William W. and Lillian Collins, departed this life February 5, 1929, at the home of his mother in Seymour, Indiana. He was past adolescence, was of the age of 16 years and had suffered a severe affliction all his life. He was unable to attend the public schools, but he had a brilliant mind and learned rapidly under the instruction of his mother and his older brothers. He was very ambitious and developed remarkable skill in painting. Much credit is due his mother for her sincere devotion and noble sacrifice, through which he had become very much endeared to her. His fine spirit had won for him many friends. His body was brought to the city of Clay City, where he and his parents formerly lived. Funeral services were held in the Brethren church, to which the mother belongs, and were conducted by the pastor. Interment in Oak Hill cemetery. The mother and four brothers survive. H. M. OEBERHOLTZER.

GINGRICH—Miriam Geraldine, youngest child of Elder and Mrs. Joseph L. Gingrich, was born June 11, 1927, and passed to her father's home, February 12, 1929, at the age of 19 months. She was born at the age of 19 months. Death was caused by pneumonia following whooping cough, by which the little body had been weakened and was unable to combat the more fatal pneumonia. All that medical skill and loving care could do did not avail, and death came as a release from an extended period of suffering.

She is survived by the parents (well known to the brethren), Brother Gingrich being pastor of the Third Brethren church of Johnstown), one sister and one brother, beside more distant relatives.

Funeral services at Johnstown were held at the Third Brethren church on Saturday afternoon, January 12, with the other three Brethren pastors of the city having part in the service. The services were directed by Brother Ashman, of the First church; the Scripture was read and prayer offered by Brother Saylor of Conesburg; while the writer was asked to deliver the discourse upon the occasion. Music was provided by a mixed quartette from the First church. The sympathy of the members of the Third church was shown by the goodly number who assembled for the funeral service. The body was taken to Ashland, Ohio, where additional services were held at the Pleasant Valley Lutheran church, on Sunday afternoon, January 13, in charge of Dean J. Allen Miller. Miss Dorcas Bame brought comfort in song at the services at Ashland. Burial was made in the Fairview cemetery at Lakemont, Ohio. The sympathy of their many friends goes out to the bereaved parents, and heaven will have added attraction and meaning to them since their loved one has been there. God sends his sorrowing heart and help us all to strive to become as little children that we too may be worthy of not only "seeing" but entering his kingdom. DYOLL BELOTE.

KELLER—Elmer Michael Keller was born February 3, 1895, and was plucked from this life February 10, 1929, after an illness of about two weeks, suffering from influenza and pneumonia. He was the son of Benjamin and Emmaline Keller of Accident, Maryland, where he grew to manhood.

At the age of nineteen he confessed Christ as his personal friend and Savior, and was baptized in the Brethren church at Accident by Rev. Edwin Bozeman, Jr., who was pastor of the church at that time. He remained a loyal, never-tiring servant, always placing the cause of God before all. Elmer was firm in the faith of his Lord, and never faltered. Though many trials and temptations overshadowed him, he proved faithful to the end. His last words on earth, were concerning his persecution for his Lord. Just ten days prior to his death occurred the death of a beloved sister, Mrs. Louise Keller Killian, who also was a victim of the same dreadful disease. The event is almost unbearable, but we have the promise of a Comforter.

He was anointed according to James 5:14-15. He bore his sufferings patiently, and naturally fell asleep in Jesus at the age of 33 years. He was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and came to Sunnyside in 1904. He united with the Brethren church in Lanark, Illinois, and later with the local church. He leaves a companion, three sons and one daughter, besides grandchildren here and other relatives in Pennsylvania. His going was a shock to the church and community, as he was taken from us without warning. This is the second time that death has visited this home recently, and they need the help that only God can give.

MINNICK—Daniel Minnick of Sunnyside, Washington, passed on to his eternal home on February 9, 1929, at the age of 53 years. He was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and came to Sunnyside in 1904. He united with the Brethren church in Lanark, Illinois, and later with the local church. He leaves a companion, three sons and one daughter, besides grandchildren here and other relatives in Pennsylvania. His going was a shock to the church and community, as he was taken from us without warning. This is the second time that death has visited this home recently, and they need the help that only God can give.

Funeral services held in the Brethren church by the family pastor. C. C. GRISSO.

WESCOTT—Daniel Wescott was born in New York, and passed away at the home of his son at Sunnyside, at 82 years of age. He was a Christian for many years, and since 1913 was a faithful member of the Sunnyside church. As long as health permitted he was a faithful attendant at God's house. He loved the Bible and the church. He leaves three sons. May they ever follow the example of a Christian father. The last rites were held in the Brethren church in Sunnyside by the pastor, on February 13. C. C. GRISSO.

FRANTZ—Mrs. Maria J. Frantz, 91 years old, a pioneer resident of Enid, Oklahoma, and mother of eight children prominently known in business and social circles of Enid as well as throughout the state, died February 4, 1929, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lula F. Whitson, 412 West Elm street.

For some months Mrs. Frantz had been in failing health. Sixteen days ago she met with a painful accident, falling down stairs and breaking her hip. She never fully recovered from the accident though prior to that time she took a lively interest in church and home affairs surrounded by her children, grandchildren and great grandchildren.

She truly was a sainted mother and always was happiest where ministering with her own hands to those whom she loved and they were a legion. Some one has beautifully said that God could not be everywhere and therefore he gave us Mothers. This seems wonderful when one thinks of her. She gloriously fulfilled her mission in life and her children and children's children rise up to call her blessed.

Surviving her are eight children. They are W. D. Edmund, Walter and Mont Frantz, all of Enid; Mrs. Lula F. Whitson, Mrs. Mamie F. Harey, Frank Frantz of Tulsa, a former governor of the state, and Orville Frantz of Tulsa. A son, John, died in infancy and a daughter, Mrs. Minnie S. Hiershausen, died in Pasadena, California, in 1893. She leaves 31 grandchildren and nine great grandchildren.

Her funeral was from the First Presbyterian church and burial was in the Wellington, Kansas, cemetery by the side of her husband, who died in 1897.

ROWLAND—C. Lee Rowland, youngest son of Brother and Sister George Rowland of Lydia, Maryland, died after a brief illness, January 19th, 1929, at the age of 70 years, and 4 days. By his agreeable disposition Lee made a host of friends who miss him and feel the loss keenly. Services were conducted by the pastor, W. S. Baker, and assisted by H. W. Torgue, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, H. W. NOWAG.

PHILIPS—William Harrison Philips was born March 20, 1858, near Springfield, Ohio. He was the son of Robert and Frances (Hess) Philips. He died at the age of 70 years, 10 months and 9 days. He was married to Sarah Jane Early, who preceded him in death 9 years ago. To this union were born 10 children, two of which died in infancy. He is survived by two daughters and six sons, 31 grandchildren, one brother, and two sisters. Mr. Philips had never identified himself with any church. He left his home on the morning of his death in the usual health and had asked only a quarter of a mile from home when he met his death in an automobile accident. Funeral was conducted in the Miamisburg Brethren church by the writer. Burial was in the Springfield cemetery. H. C. FUNDERBERG.

DAVIS—Oscar R. Davis was born near Vandalia, Ohio, and died at New Carlisle, Ohio, February 6, 1929, at the age of 73 years. He had the misfortune of blindness for about four years. He was a well-known and neighborly of the writer and requested him to conduct the funeral, which was held in the New Carlisle M. E. church, of which Brother Davis was a faithful member. Text: Job 14:5. H. C. FUNDERBERG.

PRAY FOR THE NATION'S LEADERS AND OBEY THE NATION'S LAWS

"The most malign of all dangers today is disregard and disobedience of law."—
Herbert Hoover, in his Inaugural Address.

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king (or president) as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free, and not using their liberty as a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God ... Honor the king (or the president)."—1 Peter 2:13-17.

Signs of the Times

Christ in the 20th Century "Helping" the Children

by
Alva J. McClain

SOME of the opposition to the imminent personal return of our Lord to this earth seems to be based upon a secret fear that he would not "fit" into the twentieth century. Men like to think of him in the flowing dress of the Orient, living in the ancient world, walking through the land of Judea, healing the lepers, and feeding the multitudes besides the Galilean sea. But they find it impossible to visualize him moving in the midst of modern civilization. They seem to feel that the personal figure of the Son of God would somehow be out of place in our sophisticated cosmos.

Such men do not know Christ. If they knew him they could have no fears. For Jesus Christ belongs to no one certain age or stage of world civilization. "He rises above the parentage, the blood, the narrow horizon which bounded, as it seemed, his life; for he is the archetypal Man in whose presence distinctions of race, intervals of ages, types of civilization and degrees of mental culture are as nothing" (Liddon). As the late Dr. Moorehead puts it, "He belongs to all ages, he is related to all men, whether they shiver beneath the snows of the arctic circle, or pant beneath the burning heat of the equator, for he is the Son of Man."

The enlightened Christian is certain that if, in the plan of God, the first coming of Christ had been fixed in our own twentieth century, not all its stupendous and complex works could have dimmed his majesty. He would have been just as great in this century as he was in the first century. He belongs to no century. The centuries belong to him. He is the "Father of eternity" (Isa. 9:6 ARV margin). He is the Maker of the ages. Certainly, then, he is at home in any of them.

If this could be true of him at his first coming, it can also be true of him at his second coming. When "this same Jesus" shall come again, he will not be an incongruous figure. He will not seem to be a first-century person transplanted to the twentieth. Modern opposers of his coming may dismiss their fears on this point.

It is true that our Lord, when he comes, will change radically some features of modern civilization that need changing (Matt. 18:41), but if he should come tomorrow he would be just as much at home in this modern world as he was in the country of Galilee. He is the eternal Christ. Therefore, he is at home in all the ages because he is above them all. To some modern thinkers he may be merely "This Jesus of Nazareth," but to us he is "over all God blessed forever."

A CERTAIN author, writing on "Worship Training," declares that there is complete confusion in the minds of most Sunday school children concerning Christ and God. She says, "Most of them make no disinction, using the names interchangeably, but with a preference for the Name of Jesus." And she thinks something should be done about it to clear away this "fog" and "confusion." The children even pray to Jesus, she affirms.

Now as a matter of fact, this writer is in the fog, not the children. Why shouldn't they use the names of God and Christ interchangeably? The Bible does. And why shouldn't they pray to Jesus? Stephen and Paul did, to say nothing of the millions since. And why shouldn't they "prefer" the Name of Jesus? Paul declares that he is to have "the pre-eminence" in all things, and that in confessing him as Lord we are giving glory to God the Father.

The reason why little children pray to Christ and display a "preference for his Name is because that when they are brought into his presence, they feel at once that they are in the presence of God. And the child, not bothered with adult metaphysical problems, turns to Christ and deals with him directly. Why look further? Here is God. The spiritual perceptions of little children on this point are more trustworthy than the reasonings of experts in educational methods. "I thank thee," Christ once prayed to the Father, "because thou hast hid these things from the wise and the prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes" (Matt. 11:25).

The situation, from one standpoint, is rather amusing. Certain modern teachers of religion, not accepting the absolute Deity of Christ, nevertheless go on teaching the children about him. And after a while they discover to their intense embarrassment that the children regard him as God and insist upon praying to him! Bless their little hearts.

The strangest aspect of the matter is that the above mentioned author, in dealing with

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

16. One of the endowments of the officials of the Apostolic Churches was the power to cast out the devils which dwelt in the hearts of their converts. Do we have any demonstration of that gift in the activities of Church officials now?—D. C. M.

The dear brother who asks this question is perhaps as capable of answering it as I am. Perhaps we can do nothing more than express an opinion on the question. Let us consider several plain teachings of the Scriptures.

First, the Scriptures recognize and reveal a hierarchy of evil. Its chief is called Satan and the Devil. Our Lord calls him the "prince of this world." However great his power we must remember that he is a usurper and wields a vanquished sceptre. "The prince of this world hath been judged." So declares our Lord himself.

Second, let us note that the Scriptures also recognize a multitude of evil beings who act under Satan's direction. In the A. V. they are called devils but the R. V. (American) corrects the confusion which that translation makes by rendering the original everywhere by the word demon or demons. Whatever may have been the meaning of this word before its use by the New Testament writers we know that in the New Testament it meant only one thing, that is, evil beings, angels or spirits. Our Lord's only connection with these evil spirits was one of conflict with them, casting out those that had possessed some human being. We may note here that this demon-possession is everywhere treated in the Gospels as a fact. We may also note that Jesus calls these demons by two very characteristic names. The first is spirit. He said in addressing one, "Come forth, thou unclean spirit, out of the man." Mark 5:8. See also Mt. 12:43; Mk. 9:25; Lk. 11:4. The other name he gave them was angels. Mt. 25:41.

To come more directly to the question. The discussion of Spiritual Gifts, that is, the charismata or gifts bestowed for spiritual service, is very full as given by St. Paul in 1 Corinthians, chapters 12-14. Among them are certainly some that we should call supernatural or miraculous. There is no statement to the effect that such gifts were to be temporary. But in the absence of the statement the facts of Church History do show them to have ceased with the Apostolic Age or soon thereafter. I should not say that the exercise of any or all of these powers might not return. I believe that God's power in answer to prayer is absolutely unlimited. I believe further that instead of an individual here or there being endowed with such a gift as Paul speaks of in the above sections of First Corinthians every child of God has access to him in prayer. Prayer as taught and contemplated by Jesus as the prerogative of every Christian opens an avenue of power and of service far beyond that which would be possible in individual bestowments of even supernatural gifts. So Brother D. C. M. perhaps the occasions do not call for the casting out of demons now as was the case in that crisis period when the Son of God wrought out salvation for us men; and further, perhaps through prayer far more and greater works are wrought than we know.

Sabbath Wolves

The Sabbath wolves are howling ready for an attack upon man's sacred rest day, the Sabbath. We have them ever with us—men who are eager to devour the one day of rest in seven to satisfy their insatiable greed for gold. And with the growing spirit of materialism the danger of our losing the sacredness and the necessary protection of the Lord's Day is constantly increasing. Men are seeking more and more, and by every manner of means, to utilize the Sabbath day for gain. Especially is this true of commercialized amusements, whose mighty financial strength is often used to deceive and dull public opinion as well as to influence legislatures.

Christian people themselves are largely to blame for the success with which these Sabbath wolves are able to get away with this or that portion of the Lord's day for gain. Eternal vigilance is the price that must be paid for the preservation of that day as a day of rest and worship. And if the people of God slacken their interest in the maintenance of the public safeguards that have been thrown up about this day and allow selfish, God-dishonoring men to tear down those safeguards without a protest, they have only themselves to blame and it turns out that Christ's greatest foes are those of his own house.

This is no time for indifference or unconcern. It is no time to soothe one's conscience by the discussion of academic questions about compelling Sabbath observance. It is a time for the awakening of conscience and for action. We must bear in mind that the Sabbath (one day of rest, or cessation from labor, out of every seven) is an ordinance of God, is established in the very nature of man and forever in this sphere of mortality is essential to his welfare, and also that it has status as a civil institution, the United States Supreme Court in 1886 having declared Sunday laws to be a part of the common law of the land, and further, that men are trying to nullify or abolish the laws enacted to safeguard that day. As Christian men and women, it is our duty not merely to observe the Sabbath as a Christian institution, but to do what we can to protect it from the ravages of those who are ready to disregard the laws of God and man for the sake of gain.

The Christian Statesman, an organ devoted to the promotion of Christian ideals in civic and social life, speaks specifically of bills pending in certain state legislatures to weaken or destroy our Sabbath laws. It says that:

"At least five such bills have been introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature—House Bills, Nos. 2 and 43, to grant local option on all sorts of Sunday amusements and sports; House Bill, No. 394, to permit Sunday fishing with one rod and two hooks; House Bill, No. 205, to legalize pay concerts and permit musicians to receive compensation for Sunday services, and the Welloch Bill which would legalize non-commercialized Sunday amusements and sports and the sale of half a score of things which cannot now be sold on the Sabbath.

All these bills should be defeated and we prophesy they will be, if the friends of the Sabbath protest vigorously against them. Back of them, largely, are selfish commercial interests, who are ready to break down respect for the sacredness of the Sabbath, interfere with the liberties of those who wish to observe the day religiously and involve many laboring men in Sunday toil, for the sake of financial gain.

The contention that the Pennsylvania Sabbath Law of 1794 is antiquated and prohibits what in our present day civilization is necessary is unfounded. The Law is stated in general terms, and our courts interpret what are "works of necessity and mercy" in the light of present day conditions. This gives the Law a flexibility which adapts it to present day conditions. All these bills are before the Law and Order Committee of the House of Representatives of the Pennsylvania Legislature. Send your protest to the Chairman of this Committee, Mrs. Ella C. Smith, House of Representatives, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

A dangerous bill is before the Ohio Legislature to grant to the Council of a city, incorporated town or village, the power to permit the exhibition of motion pictures on the Lord's Day after one o'clock; or to submit this question to a vote of the electors. This bill was introduced into the Senate by Senator Marshall of Cleveland, and referred to the Committee on Judiciary, of which he is Chairman. It should be fought vigorously as the motion picture interests seem to be concentrating their efforts to secure its passage. Letters and telegrams from individuals, and petitions from organizations, from the Ohio Senatorial Districts should be sent to the Senator from the District.

The danger of losing our Sabbath is no little matter and Christian people ought to become concerned about it. Whenever the opportunity presents itself, we ought to defend it from being desecrated by those who are godless and at the same time seek to encourage its use for man's highest good. That is the purpose of the Sabbath, and therein is our warrant for safeguarding it. As Jesus said, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." It was made for man's whole nature—body, mind and spirit, for physical and mental rest, for deeds of mercy and acts of kindness and helpfulness, for social improvement and moral growth, for spiritual enrichment and eternal salvation. It is God's institution for man, and that puts us under the highest obligation to preserve it—it is of divine origin. It was made for man—that is, for all men, and we ought to keep it, and insist on its being kept, so as not to deprive others unnecessarily of its blessings either to body or soul. As people who honor God and his Son, Jesus Christ, and recognize the authority of his Word, which never at any time abolished the law of the Sabbath—a moral and unalterable law—we are under bounden duty to preserve and protect this religious institution.

But the Sabbath is also a civil institution, and as such we have a right to demand the state's cooperation in its protection. As a civil institution it is necessary to guarantee to man the privilege of enjoying his natural right to a day of rest and of worship in each week. The former,—that is, the day of rest,—is essential to his physical welfare and happiness, and the latter is involved in his inalienable right to freedom of worship. The man who is denied his Sabbath, is denied thereby the right and privilege of worship, and the enjoyment of religious exercises. These rights the state is duty bound to insure to every individual, as truly as it is the rights of property, of marriage, or of family. And nothing is more vital or more justified than such a service on the part of the state. To use the words of William Strong (1808-95), an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, "There is abundant justification for our Sabbath laws, regarding them as a mere civil institution, which they are, and he is no friend to the good order and welfare of society who would break them down, or who himself sets an example of disobedience to them." And in view of movements on foot right now throughout the land, we may well inquire whether we will allow the state to withdraw its protecting arm while these vital interests are sacrificed on the twin altars of pleasure and greed, or whether we will insist that it shall guard the religious and physical welfare of its citizens.

Some people who credit themselves boastfully of speaking plainly, are plainly brutal. Paul's advice is to "speak the truth in love." That takes off the rough edges.

Paul admonishes the Ephesians that, "speaking the truth in love," they should endeavor to "grow up into him (that is, in Christ) in all things." Bishop Hall says that one who endeavors to be a Christian in all his ways, must have three guides—Truth, Charity, Wisdom. Truth to go before him, Charity and Wisdom on either hand. If any of the three be absent, he walks amiss. I have seen some do hurt by following truth uncharitably; and others while they would solve an error with love have failed in their wisdom and offended justice."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Next week's issue will be the special Foreign Mission number.

Dr. J. L. Gillin describes his visit to a French prison in his article published in this week's Evangelist.

The size of the crowd does not always indicate the quality of the goods being displayed, whether by a street-corner merchant or by a minister of the gospel.

If some of you young people want to know what kind of material there is in your mission at Krypton, Kentucky, just read some of the testimonies that appear on Christian Endeavor page in this issue and in succeeding issues. Brother Kinzie reports a very successful meeting recently held.

Miss Gladys Spice, general secretary of the Brethren National Christian Endeavor, reports the twenty-seventh pledge made for the support of the mission at Krypton, which task has been assumed by the young people. She states that thirteen societies are cooperating that did not last year. "Thirteen" is a lucky number, but if there are those who would desire to increase the number, that will simply make it still more "good luck."

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, gives us another report of White Gifts this week. Some church schools are still convincing us that they did not forget, but were just delayed. Perhaps there are others. The editor is quite willing to publish yet other reports for Brother Puterbaugh, if you make it possible. The total to date is $3,979.94. Some body ought to put it up to $4,000 at least.

A post card from Brother D. F. Eikenberry, who lives at Canton, Ohio, says: "I just want to report a little of the progress of our meetings here in Canton, held by Dr. J. C. Beal. The sermons are wonderful messages. There is a deep interest. The average attendance at the services has broken all former records. I have been here eighteen years and I know the congregation is being wonderfully blessed. There will be one more week of meetings."

It is quite fitting that Brother Dyoll Belote should write a tribute to the life of the late Brother Harry F. E. O'Neill, whose obituary appeared in the Evangelist under recent date, and concerning whom we made editorial comment. Brother Belote knew him intimately, and many others of us were happy to call him friend. Brother O'Neill was outstanding among our laymen, as a Christian gentleman and a servant of the church and the kingdom, and the cherishing of his memory is an inspiration.

The drift to the cities is much the same in Argentina, says Dr. C. F. Yoder, as it is in the United States, and though it was the policy to confine their mission efforts to the district assigned to them, yet the moving of their members to the large centers of population calls them to these places. Rosario, second largest city in Argentina, contains a little group of Brethren believers, who are conducting a mission and hoping to build up a self-supporting work. On a visit to this city recently, Brother Yoder baptized two men.

There are two characteristics of "babes in Christ," which it is desirable quickly to grow out of,—namely, helplessness and selfishness. The babe in physical life is helpless, its life depends on some one taking care of it. It is also a selfish little body; it cannot help it. It has no thought but for its own pleasure and satisfaction. Everybody about is there for its service. So there are Christians who are always showing themselves helpless, and evaluating everybody and everything in the light of their own selfish needs.

The funeral of our lamented Brother E. L. Kilhefner, whose death we announced last week, was held in the Brethren church at Ashland, Ohio, on March 8th, with Dr. J. Allen Miller preaching the sermon, Dr. E. E. Jacobs speaking on behalf of the College, of whose Board of Trustees the deceased was president, and Dr. Martin Shively conducting the devotions. The funeral was one of the largest in attendance and one of the most impressive and representative expressions of sympathy and respect that Ashland has seen in a long time. A fitting memorial will be published in a later issue.

Brother N. W. Jennings, pastor of the church at Turlock, California, writes that he is engaged in an evangelistic campaign in his congregation, and that five were recently baptized. In the midst of the campaign he received a telegram informing him of the death of his father, Brother P. J. Jennings, who passed away on February 23. Instead of closing his meeting, Brother Jennings bravely continued under the burden of sorrow, believing, as he says, that his father would have wished him to do so. Brother Jennings, Senior, was at one time greatly interested in evangelism. We extend to Brother "N. W." sincere sympathy in behalf of the Evangelist family. He gives us a list of interesting sermon subjects, which he used during the first week of his meeting.

Brother Frank Gehman, pastor of the Uniontown congregation in Pennsylvania, tells about the dedication of their new church building on March 3. Brother J. L. Gingrich of Johnstown was present to preach the morning dedicatory sermon and to aid in the raising of money. Dr. Bame was over from Masontown to preach in the afternoon and Brother Koontz, pastor at Masontown, preached the evening sermon. The day was successful from the standpoint of weather, attendance, speakers and money-raising. The cash and pledges covered the indebtedness. We congratulate Brother Gehman and his faithful co-workers on this splendid achievement and this mark of divine favor. There is but one thing lacking, and that is a picture of their new church. The Evangelist family would like to see your new building, Brother Gehman.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—We will itemize in our "Review" column each week requests for prayer that are communicated to us. If you have a special request for prayer and would like to have the cooperation of the praying people of the brotherhood, send it to us. Just a post card notice will do. Those writing newsletters and desiring the prayer of the church at large will have their requests itemized here, when they make such requests in their letters. Here are the requests for this week:

Pray for the blessing of the Lord on the mission at Rosario, Argentina.

Pray for the evangelistic meeting at Masontown, Pennsylvania, where Dr. Bame and the pastor, Brother Herman Koontz, are holding forth.

Pray for the campaign at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, where Brother F. G. Coleman is assisting the pastor, Brother Frank Gehman.

Pray for the coming Easter offering for Foreign Missions, that it may be sufficient to meet the needs and may be a credit to the church that gives it.

The editor appreciates, and we are sure the entire Evangelist family will also, the fact that Dr. G. W. Rensch is sharing some of the riches of his winter's Bible study with us. He began his series last week. We have his third installment in hand. We do not know how many numbers we are to get, but we are sure we shall appreciate them all. We wish to say that others ought to be sharing with the brotherhood now and then some of the riches of their Bible study. It would be a real service. Some have expressed a desire for more Bible studies in the Evangelist. Some of the leaders who are wishing it, ought to be putting their abilities to account along this line, helping to realize their desire for their church paper. The making of a church paper, such as ours, must of necessity be a cooperative affair. We are unable to command the talents of men for a price. All our contributors are doing their work gratis and every one should be willing to do his part. The pages are open to you, brethren. All we ask is that you endeavor to put up your copy in a manner that does not require transcribing by the editor, and in a spirit of Christian love and of kindly consideration one of another.

"He Wist Not that the Lord had Departed from Him"

By H. C. Marlin

He stood helpless before them, and as if to add to his humiliation, the one woman in all the world to whom he had given his love and with whom he had shared his secrets, joined in mocking him. All of his life he had been a conqueror. Armies had fled in confusion when he challenged them. He had killed a lion with his naked hands, and once in the heat of passion had seized the jawbone of an ass and slew thirty thousand of his enemies. Today his power had vanished. Sampson, pride of Israel, was stricken and smitten of God.

In the twentieth chapter of Judges is recorded the most pathetic incident of his life. This matchless physical giant has arisen from sleep at the cry of his sweet-heart, "The Phillistines be upon thee Sampson!" Every nerve in his magnificent body is tingling; The hot blood of the warrior is pounding in his veins; mighty muscles like bands of steel were ready for instant action as he stood facing them—the one who had never suffered defeat was ready for the test of power.

But, declares the writer of the sacred page, "He wist not that the Lord had departed from him." How pitiful. That magnificent body, with every nerve and muscle in perfect condition; that canny brain which had brought him to the pinnacle of leadership in Israel to judge his people, were now of no avail. He was helpless as a babe—and he knew it not. A moment later he was overpowered and mocked. Blinded by his tormentors he was destined to spend the remainder of his days in darkness and despair while he toiled as a beast of burden.

America, the land of physical giants; the land of intellectual giants; the land of big business and gigantic undertakings; of towering churches and magnificent schools; the land where the pauper's son may become the millionaire of tomorrow; the one great nation where there is equal opportunity—is much like Sampson. In a few generations she has grown until her strength is beyond compare. Today she towers above her neighbors as Sampson did the Phillistines. She is the physical and intellectual giant of the world.

Yet in the midst of all this power and glory comes the cry that she is the most lawless nation on earth. Day after day the most heinous crimes are committed. Many of the guilty go unpunished. It has become alarming. Beneath the culture provided by our churches and institutions of learning beats a heart of selfishness that threatens to disrupt our social structure and undermine our national life. From the one who sits in the presidential chair to guide the destinies of our national life to those more humble citizens who sit by the fireside of the village store, there is a continual discussion of a problem that has puzzled everyone.

From editor to journalist; from educator and preacher; from lawyer and politician; from business man and citizen, have come many suggestions and as many remedies, but the crime wave still persists; disregard for law and order reigns from the one who drives his automobile at excessive speeds to the one who coldly murders his fellow citizen. Education has not improved it. Legislation has not prevented it. Politics cannot produce a remedy. Like Sampson, we stand in physical and intellectual greatness, but we are helpless.

"He wist not that the Lord had departed from him." Cannot this be true of us? Is it possible that the Lord was the source of our power and that our physical and intellectual greatness counts for nought? Certainly there is something missing, call it what you will. The fact remains that conditions are not what anyone of us would like. It is pathetic that a nation of great deeds, heroic acts and high ideals has become so helpless. There must be a great first cause.

Here it is. A great outstanding fact. America has lost her Christ.

No man however ignorant he may be can scan the pages of our national life without viewing the groups of men and women who gathered in little bands of prayer for every vital issue and who arose from their knees to perform the daring deeds of glory written on the pages of our national history. From the day our fathers knelt to ask the blessing of God upon the declaration of our independence to those other days when churches were built in the wilderness and free schools were born, the spirit of Christ was the motive power in every life, and it bore fruit in the erection of every church and school and college, as well as every hospital and other humanitarian enterprises in this great land of ours.

America was the land of churches and schools; of religion and education. The land of Christianity and the old McGuffey reader. The land of the Bible and the three R's. All of which means that our citizenship was religious and taught stern discipline, especially regarding the rights of others. In no other way would it have been possible to have formed a government "of the people, by the people and for the people."

How is it possible in this land of churches, land of preachers, land of religious education; land of evangelists; to have lost the Christ? We are like his mother who lost him. One would scarcely think of his mother having lost him. That the one woman in all the world to whom such a gift was given, would lose him but she did. The mother into whose presence the shepherds came to tell of an angel chorus singing of peace on earth as she laid her first-born in a manger and at whose feet they knelt in adoration; and the one mother who heard from the lips of the Wise Men the amazing story of a Star that came out to guide them to her feet, as they offered their gifts to a King who sweetly slept in a manger cradle; that mother upon whose breast the greatest of all mankind laid as a babe, lost him.

No man would dare to question the love of Mary for her child. No man would dare to question her religion. Pure enough to be honored above all women, sweet enough to receive the kiss of Heaven, yet she of all women the most unlikely to lose him, lost him—and she lost him in the most unlikely place.

She lost him in the Temple. Filled with holy zeal, her feet had trod the weary miles to the Holy City. The greatest religious expression of her day had filled her heart with a thousand thrills, and in the very midst of her avowal of faith she lost her hearts desire. She did what the most of us in this land of churches do—She went away and left him behind. When she left the temple there were too many things upon her mind. She went with the crowd and never missed him until dark. All through the day "she wist not that she had lost him." But like all of us the hour came when she missed him. When darkness came she realized her loss. There is darkness in our land today. Moral and spiritual darkness. None but the blind will deny its presence. And as it has come, slowly creeping over the land we have begun to grope our way and cry, "send the light." There is a sense of loss, but we wist not that we have lost the Christ.

That is the first great cause of the crime wave and lawlessness. We have lost the Christ. Mothers have lost him. No longer do they take their children on their knee to tell them of Jesus and how he came to save men from their sins, and how he wants them to be pure and good. No longer do their baby eyes open wide with wonder as a mother tells of the love of God which prompted such a gift to the world. Fathers have lost him. No longer do they begin the day with prayer in the presence of the family, and many a child has never seen its father on his knees. Too many of us are in the position of the father whose little son came to him with the question, "Papa, is God dead?" And when asked the reason for such a question the little one replied, "You never talk to him any more." How many boys and girls are grown up among us today who have never had the blessing of a Christian mother and a praying father. Too many parents have lost the Christ.

Preachers have lost him, and they wist not that they have lost him. No longer do they tell forth in mighty power the story of the Cross, or the sinner in the hands of an angry God. They never take an audience beneath the gnarled trees of the Garden to witness the agony of a soul in full surrender; and they never lead them to the Cross on Calvary where his blood was shed for the sins of men. No longer do sinners come weeping to the altar in sorrow for their sins, and for that reason they do not arise in newness of heart to go forth to conquer the overwhelming sins of the day. No more is the Christ the central theme of every sermon preached. No longer is he held high that men might see him and be saved. No longer is there anything to be saved from, for Hell has lost its fury and Heaven its rewards. This is why ten thousand preachers go back to their studies Sunday night after the evening service to weep and pray because of empty pews and the waywardness of a nation. They too have lost the Christ and know it not.

Now Mary was sensible. When she sensed her loss she retraced her steps and she sought him until she found him. She sought him in sorrow and agony of heart, but her sorrow turned to joy as she clasped him to her throbbing breast. The church in America has concerned herself with many things, all of them worthy no doubt, but in the midst of her zeal she has drifted from the center of her power. She has been so intent on her social service, her missionary projects and her political influence that she has forgotten her Lord and left him behind. Hundreds of sermons are preached on "Topics of the Day" by men who know but little of what they say—far less than those to whom they preach. And hearts are hungry for the Gospel and they feel that something is wrong, they know not what it is. It is the Christ that is lost. The fact remains that now, as perhaps never before, do we need the preaching of the Gospel. A revival of powerful preaching that will convict and convince of sin, thereby quickening the conscience of men toward God and their own blood-brothers. Education will not do it. Legislation will not do it. You cannot force or compel a man to be good, he must want to be good of his own free will and Christ alone is able to create this desire.

In every crisis of our national life God has raised up from among us a man whose very power for good was his belief in the Gospel. Somewhere in life's experiences he had met the Savior of men in the Garden and had followed him to Calvary where he stood in the spirit beside the mother and John and gazed upon that scene and as he looked until tears befogged his eyes a new heart was given him and he knew that he had found the Christ. Such a man is needed now. One who can tell that experience so that it will reach the heart of men and point them to that Cross.

Here are two examples. Sampson and Mary. Sampson the mighty Judge of Israel, the one whose useful life ended in misery and woe because "He wist not that the Lord had departed from him." Mary the one who realized her loss and sought him until she found him, and when she did she found peace and joy.

This sin-blinded world needs to realize that it has lost its Christ and therefore has lost its power. A land of scoffers, hypocrites, and flagrant sinners needs not to expect anything but misery and woe and lawlessness. When newspapers, journalists, teachers, preachers and others whose lives and thought mould those of other men, turn to Christ and fall upon their knees before the Cross in prayer for guidance as they seek to solve our problems then, and not until then, will they receive the power to help them do it. This is not a plea for religion, but a plea for sane thinking and honest living that needs not to be ashamed before God and man, and it's a plea for us to turn to that Christlike life that made us the nation that we are and the only thing that will keep us there.

Oh, thou America, land of churches whose spires pierce the sky to point the way to Heaven; thou land of riches whose pocketbooks have opened wide to send the story of the Christ to heathen lands; thou land of professed Christianity and empty pews; thou land of weeping preachers and Christless fathers and mothers; thou land of undreamed luxury and wealth; thou land of crime and wickedness; thy riches are as a canker to eat out thy soul; thy luxurious apparel doth not hide thine empty heart—undone thou art, like Sampson, with all thy glorious history of the past; undone thou art, even as powerless as he for thou dost wist not that the Lord hath departed from thee. Turn thine eyes to Calvary, seek thou the Christ who died for thee, repent and confess thy sins. Lift up the Cross and behold the Christ who set you free, then from thy rocks and rills, thy woods and templed hills shall freedom ring and trouble cease. Arise let us go back to Calvary, back to Jesus and back to God.

A Sublime Scripture. II

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

In this wonderful opening sentence of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the whole letter with its numerous arguments seems to be condensed into one sweeping statement. What power over its author could hold in check the flow of words here—and elsewhere in the New Testament—save the Holy Spirit? The sentence seems to be finished at the close of the fourth verse. In the Authorized Version there are 108 words; in the Revised, 107; while Moffatt uses 108 to express what he considers needful.

The first word in that sentence adds much to its grandeur: "God, who at sundry times and divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets," etc. That majestic beginning of a sublime scripture makes us think of another: "In the beginning God." How can we break away from that first word—GOD? Oh, faltering soul, you can not get back of God, and set him in front by puny tools called the mind! Shakespeare, the world's great poet, certainly knew something of human nature, and here is one thing he says:

"The dread of something after death,
That undiscovered country
From whose bourne no traveler returns,
Puzzles the will . . .

Thus conscience doth make cowards of us all."

Put the emphasis on "thus," and you get the poet's point. The disobedient soul dreads the realm beyond death. That dread is a part of our nature; and all the beautiful poetry ever written about death can not take it away. It is as impossible for us to get away from God as it was in the days of David when he wrote: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me." (Psalm 139:7, 11).

The one big word standing near the middle of that stately sentence, beginning with "God," is the word "Son." The light emanating from that word but serves to set in their proper relations the preceding words, and those which follow it. That word carries our thoughts back to the beginning of another book: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" (John 1:1). Three powerful verbs predicate action by the Son, which set the whole passage quivering and pulsating with life: "hath spoken," "hath purged" and "sat down." These words of action reveal Christ in his three-fold office of Prophet, Priest and King. The scriptures everywhere proclaim Jesus as a prophet; and this letter as the greatest of all prophets. Honored name!

And what is a prophet? Not one merely who predicts the future; but a flaming light from heaven—a preacher of righteousness—with a message from God, and who has courage to present his message to the people. Such were the prophets of old. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets;" yes, "in" the prophets, and so rendered by the Revised Version. A great commentary says, "A mortal king speaks by his ambassador, not (as the King of kings) IN his ambassador;" a fine distinction.

What fine heroes these, IN whom God thundered his mighty messages against sin—and sinners! What fidelity to a sacred trust! What fearless challenges to the humble tillers of the soil, and THE CORRUPT KING UPON THE THRONE! What entreating pleadings to return unto God! And what heroic martyrdoms for the TRUTH which God had entrusted in their hands! Here they come! "Attention; uncover!" Moses, Joshua, Samuel, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah and a multitude of others! Stop and read the eleventh chapter of this Epistle—the roll submitted by divine authority.

But with a graceful gesture he sets them all aside. They are of "times past." "At the end of these days" God speaks again; not in "divers manners" but "unto us" and "in" his Son. What contrasts: "unto the fathers by the prophets"—"unto us in his Son." "Whom he hath appointed heir of all things." Being a Son, of course he is heir; and heir of all—A-L-L—things. He has complete authority to speak. He knows the will of the Father, and is qualified to make that will known. Before the great Commission was issued, Jesus, the Son, declared his authority. "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth." And he immediately adds, "Go ye therefore;" "THEREFORE"—because of this. Behold the divine authority of the Christian message! "Never man spake like this man" (John 7:46).

"By whom he also made the worlds." This is the second clause in support of the proposition that Jesus is the great Prophet. In John's gospel we read, "In the beginning was the Word. . . All things were made by him." Does he understand the needs of his creation? and in him are these needs met? If not, who can show us mortals a future, and point out the way? I have not overlooked the marginal note that the word here rendered "worlds" literally means ages. "Through whom also he made the ages," is the close reading. It is important to remember that God is planning to meet the utmost needs of man through the various ages; "in times past," prophets were his spokesmen; "in the end of these days," his Son, "and ye are complete in him" (Col. 2:10). This age will come to a close, ushered in by another great catastrophe, described in the language of Paul: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump" (1 Cor. 15:51, 52). "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thes. 4:15, 16, 17). And the Lord has planned to meet our needs in THAT AGE.

Comforting Words

By Samuel Kieh

The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words (1 Thes. 4:16-18).

How many have you and the writer comforted with these words? Each answer for himself, or herself, as in our loving Father's invisible presence (1 John 4:10, 11, 19).

Dayton, Ohio.

Positive Preaching—I think that the smallest business for the minister is to take a microscope to find and advertise defects found in the Bible, for the intellectual delight of his congregation. It is quite possible that the defects are at the subjective end of the microscope. The Book has mysteries, but what of it. You can go into any kitchen and find plenty of mysteries you can't solve. It isn't necessary to tell what you don't believe in the Bible—tell what you do. How long would it take to save the world by ministers who are telling of the mistakes of Moses and Abraham? How much better for us to have a constructive attitude. You can magnify what you know in your own personal experience. Let us postpone till we get up yonder talking about things hard to be understood in the writing of Moses and of the prophets.—Bishop Luther B. Wilson.

Essentials For a Successful Song Service

By Leo Polman

III.—The Audience

One of the most disheartening things to confront a song leader, is to have an unsympathetic audience. This will take the heart out of any leader. I have had this experience time and again. Why should we sing, when we have a singer; that is his job. That is the spirit we sometimes find. I wonder sometimes if such do not have the idea that they are doing the leader a mighty big favor: if they sing. Far be it from such. The fact is, that the service the audience renders in singing is not for the sake of the leader, but wholly for the praise of the Lord. And with the words of the Psalmist I say, "Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands. SERVE the Lord with gladness: come before his presence with singing" (Psalm 100:1, 2). Serve the Lord and not the leader, keeping in mind however, that a leader is necessary, and where numbers are to be considered it would be to the benefit and the glory of the Lord to be in one accord.

A sympathetic audience will follow the direction of the leader and will at all times give self and talent for the good of the cause of Christ.

A hearty response to the gathering together and an enthusiastic start with the first words of the song, will do much for the gladdening of the heart of the speaker. This will be a tonic to any pastor or evangelist's heart. Try this, and see if it does not work. Where the audience puts something into a service, it can be assured that it will get something out of it as well, and that, with interest. This day of paid quartets and choirs, when they are to do the singing for the people, I am afraid cannot bring joy to the heart of our Master. Again with the words of the Psalmist, "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. "How can one sit through a song service and allow somebody else to do their singing and praising of God? How can they? God has given us these voices and, as with the many other blessings we have received from him, he expects us to use them for his glory. LET US SING!

The next article will have to do with The Essentials for a Successful Song Service, THE CHOIR.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

HONOR FOR BISHOP CANNON

The selection of Bishop James Cannon, Jr., by the "Christian Herald," "as the American who during 1928 made the most significant contribution to religious progress," gives great satisfaction to the people of the South and especially of the Southern Methodist Church. The choice is not a surprise. Bishop Cannon gave himself last fall most heroically and effectively to the advocacy of a prohibition president. He traveled and spoke and wrote and counseled day and night. The drys credit him and the wets charge him with having wielded an inestimable influence. The manner of his campaigning was that of a poised character. He presented facts and plead for patriotic and Christian support of sobriety and the laws of our country. He was free of intolerance. When he was attacked as a religious bigot he responded with quotations from high authorities in the group against which he was accused of being prejudiced. For diligence, force, mentality, and Christian manhood Bishop Cannon is eminent. He devotes these qualities to the good of his country and the Christianization of the world.

CONSIDERING CHURCH UNION

Commissions on Church Union of the Reformed Church in America, the Evangelical Synod, and the United Brethren in Christ held a joint meeting in Dayton, February 7. The three Commissions included some twenty persons, besides those who attended the sessions as visitors. This was but one of a series of meetings held by these representative bodies. A syllabus, or basis of union of the three churches, had been carefully worked out, and in this meeting it was put in final form for presenting to the general bodies of the three churches in their forthcoming sessions.

Our people will be given full and accurate information relative to this movement, for it is generally known that no consummation of that nature could be effected, or become final, in the United Brethren Church without a favorable vote of the church membership. The reason no more has been published regarding the work of the Commission up to this time is that there was very little of a definite character that was ready for publication. All that has been done thus far has been of a preliminary character and is of course only a recommendation to the general legislative bodies of the churches. With the United Brethren it is the General Conference. The approval of those bodies will be but the next step in the process.—Religious Telescope.

VATICAN TREATY RAISES QUESTIONS

The recent signing of the peace treaty and concordat between Italy and the Holy See has already raised many questions and suggested many possibilities. France is said to have requested further information on certain details of the concordat, and Great Britain has asked about the Vatican's alleged intention to spend a billion lire for missionary work in the Far East. Some governments seem to fear that the Italian Government may try to use its new position of friendliness with the Vatican to further its national, and nationalistic policies at the expense of other countries, which is altogether possible. The motives of the ambitious Italian dictator are yet to be fully revealed. Diplomats are naturally wondering whether the restoration of the church's temporal power and status will stimulate greater diplomatic activity on the part of the Vatican. There would seem to be but one answer to that question. Even more interesting is the surmise as to what the reaction of Protestant countries will be to this situation. For instance, what will be the attitude of the United States? Will America officially recognize the Papal State and send an accredited ambassador to the Vatican court? If so, there are apt to be further complications.—Elderdice in Methodist Protestant.

A FIELD MARSHAL ON HIS TRADE

Field Marshal Sir William Robertson was fifty years a soldier. He was severely wounded years ago and carried bullets in his body for years. During the World War he was chief of the British Imperial Staff. He had medals and decorations from various nations.

Field Marshal Robertson denounced war. He declared that war is utterly futile, a mere horror, and called the plea for large fighting forces an out-of-date platitude. He said:

"Instead of preventing war, we know that preparations are likely to precipitate it. Never in history were preparations so complete or so widespread as in the fifty or sixty years previous to 1914. And yet never were wars so frequent as during that period."

Sir William pointed out that a few hours' artillery bombardment preparing for one infantry advance in France had cost one hundred and ten million dollars.—Central Christian Advocate.

FRANCE RATIFIES ANTI-WAR PACT

"The French Parliament ratified the Kellogg anti-war treaty on March 1 by the overwhelming vote of 570 to 12. All parties voted solidly in favor of the pact except the Communists. This action was largely due to the leadership of Foreign Minister Aristides Briand, who cooperated with Secretary Kellogg in the formulation of the treaty, and whose eloquent support of it had much to do with its enthusiastic adoption. He is hailed by his supporters as the initiator of the movement which resulted in the signing of the treaty by fifteen original signatories and the adherence of fifty other nations. If statesmanship can abolish war, we are at least moving in the right direction." So says C. M. Elderdice in the Methodist Protestant. Statesmanship may not be able wholly to abolish war. But we should be thankful for every effort to lessen the causes and chances for war. It has all come about because of the leavening influence of the Prince of Peace. Let it continue with the heartiest support of every Christian.

AMERICA'S DEBT TO ONE IMMIGRANT

In 1874 there was born in Austria-Hungary a child named Joseph Goldberger who was destined to "make the most important contribution to medical science of any man during the last quarter of a century." Dr. Goldberger's special achievement was the discovery of the causes and the treatment for pellagra. But he risked his life in other battles with disease, for while making studies he at different times suffered from yellow fever, typhus fever and dengue fever. However, his recent death seems to have been caused by a baffling malady somewhat similar to pellagra. His discoveries have saved tens of thousands of lives and will save tens of thousands of others as the years come and go. But himself he could not save. The medical hero thus becomes a martyr, with not only America, but the whole world greatly in debt to one who came as an immigrant less than fifty years ago.—The Gospel Messenger.

COMMERCIAL, OR EDUCATIONAL, WHICH?

Henry S. Curtis writes in the February Journal of the National Education Association of interschool athletics. While enumerating their recognized values, he says: "The publicity in connection with athletic contests often distorts educational values to such an extent that the high school appears a mere minor appendage of the football and basketball teams. The victorious heroes of these contests are given an amount of adulation which is not awarded to honor men in scholarship." But why is there such publicity, and what is to be done about it? Like all schoolmen who discuss the subject, Mr. Curtis suggests a bit of tinkering with the conditions of training and playing. He does not tackle the difficulty; he offers merely some slight interference. Set this down: Interschool athletics cannot be made at the same time a commercial and an educational institution. It may be one or the other. You cannot have both. You take your choice. Until educators recognize this dilemma, they may as well save their breath and their typewriters. The investor has beaten them to it and has the field.—The Baptist.

Our Worship Program

OUTLINE OF "THE FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER"

MY GOD AND FATHER

MONDAY, March 18—"He that is of God heareth God's words" (John 8:47). Read John 1:1-18. "No man hath seen God at any time." But that need not disturb us, for no man hath truly seen me at any time. My body is seen, but not my soul. Yet though my soul and my friend's soul are invisible to each other, we are fully persuaded of each other's spiritual existence, and we communicate soul with soul. Words, mere words! But they are the only ships that traverse the infinite sea that I am not alone, bringing comfort to my sad heart, companionship to my lonely life. And God—I do not see him, but I am assured that he is there, and his words come sailing in, argosies of them, telling of infinite companionship, sympathy and help.

TUESDAY, March 19—"I will say of the Lord, he is my refuge and fortress: my God; in him will I trust" (Psalm 91:2). Read Psalm 91. This thought is of frequent recurrence in the Psalms. In those stormy and perilous times, the devout souls sought refuge by fleeing to the Unseen Presence. So when my cup of bitterness is full, when every human resource is exhausted, I take flight to God. In the last emergency all flesh comes to him. Is that making God only a last resort? Perhaps it is. But from this extreme may I learn to make God my first and constant resort.

WEDNESDAY, March 20—"Like as a Father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him" (Psalm 103:13). Read Psalm 103. Here is exquisite comfort for me, though I must be careful not to make it either condonement or license. It corrects my self-esteem, too. God does not expect too much of me. He remembers my weakness; he is considerate of me as of a little child. And then, "Like as a father." His pity is not contemptuous, but affectionate. I must be ashamed of my folly and sin, and show sincere repentance, but the heavenly Father does not want me to be miserable. He cheers me with assurance of his everlasting mercy.

THURSDAY, March 21—"For whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth" (Heb. 12:6). Read Heb. 12:1-13. I suffer acutely when I see a child punished. And yet, what is more unlovely or pitiable than an indulged, undisciplined child? How unlovely are indulged, prospered, spoiled men and women! I begin to understand a little. With breaking hearts we ask, "Why? Why?" I anguish of soul I have asked it myself. I must still my rebellious heart with the remembrance that infinite love is behind the seeming evil as behind the seeming good.

MY LORD AND MASTER

FRIDAY, March 22—"But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me" (John 7:29). Read Matt. 6:25-34. I need not trouble my mind with difficult questions, but will simply accept the word of Jesus, that he was with God, came forth from God and knew God perfectly. He is to me the revelation of the Father, my Lord and my God. I can trust him.

SATURDAY, March 23—"Henceforth I call you not servants . . . but I have called you friends" (John 15:15). Read Phil. 2:1-11. "Jesus, who was intimate with the Father, entered also into truest intimacy with me. He who was so good and pure sought the companionship of publicans and sinners. Here is wonderful encouragement to me. Jesus does not hold himself aloof from me, but enters into my troubled and perplexed life. "Our wants and weaknesses he knows." "Tempted in all points like as we." I can go to him, for he understands. He is my friend.

PALM SUNDAY—"And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it" (Luke 19:41). Read Luke 19:28-41. Day of triumph, and day of tears! How incongruous the association! And yet, how true to eternal experience! Our fictitious successes are very close to our real sorrow. If we saw through to reality as Jesus did, we would not be deceived by the glamour of prosperous days. Jesus knew very well that Jerusalem would not be captured by this rustic peasant. If he had come riding in great state it would have been different. Jerusalem did not know. Do we know the things that pertain to our peace? Or are we blind as were the people of Jerusalem? Is Christ an imaginary Christ? Or do we know him as he really is, as one who is meek and lowly in heart, and not as a proud and pompous person?

The Behavioristic and Anti-Theistic Trend of Modernistic Religious Education

By John Horsch

MODERNISTS generally assert that, considered from their viewpoint, there is no conflict between science and religion. But they persistently ignore the fact that science, as taught in our schools, is not by any means a unit on some of the cardinal points in its own field.

Take psychology, for an example. The new psychology, called Behaviorism, contradicts the old psychology at every important point. Behaviorism conceives of every human thought, feeling and action as mechanical—that is to say, as the result of physical causes. Human volition and responsibility are destroyed. All distinctions between good and evil are wiped out. "Self-expression" is the watchword of the new psychology. There is supposed to be no higher aim than to "let one's self go." All forms of repression of the natural impulses are discountenanced. Behaviorism means, as some one has said, that "there is nothing in people's minds, and they think only with their muscles."

The new psychology fully endorses and supplements the evolutionary hypothesis, implying that man differs from the animal simply in degree; he is supposed to be merely a more delicately adjusted, more highly developed animal. Immortality is considered quite out of the question. God is bowed out of existence. He is simply ignored. Here, then, is atheism pure and simple.

Such is the new psychology as defended, not only by many scientists, but by an increasing number of Modernistic theologians as well, as may be shown elsewhere. The editor of America's most widely read Modernist journal says, speaking of Behaviorism:

"There are scarcely a dozen American college of standing in which this new type of psychology has not been accepted, even though it has yet to win a conspicuous convert among the psychologists of the rest of the world" (The Christian Century, June 10, 1926).

In other words, there are, in his opinion, but few American colleges besides those standing for Fundamentalism, in which Behaviorism is not taught as science. And yet there are those who would censure the Fundamentalists for declining to take an attitude of indifference to the fact that the most destructive hypotheses are being taught to our young people as science.

Most assuredly the Scriptures do not agree with all that is accepted as science in our higher institutions of learning. On some of the most important points scientists do not agree with one another. How can any one agree with them all? It is important to notice in this connection that "science," in so far as it contradicts Scripture, is based on suppositions and hypotheses. True science is based on fact, and is, on the whole, of great value. It does not conflict with Scripture.

The New Religious Education

Many quotations from Modernist leaders might be given, did space permit, expressing the view that all theological doctrine is relative and uncertain; hence no such doctrine should be accepted as authoritative or final truth, or taught as such. These representative Modernists hold that, if Christian doctrine is taught at all, it should be presented merely as uncertain human creation and supposition. In fact, religious doctrine is often entirely eliminated in Modernistic religious instruction.

"We talk about right attitudes, right conduct, growth of personality, practising the social gospel," says a correspondent of a Modernist journal (The Christian Century, 1928, p. 767); "now what are we doing as religious educators to 'open the pathway between God and man'?" A writer of the more advanced type of Modernists says in the same periodical: "The purpose of religious education is to stimulate the children to form their own conception (on such subjects as deity, ethics, health, and race brotherhood), based on their experiences, in the belief that these conceptions, standards and ideals will thus have a more vital effect upon the life of the child than any which are thrust upon him" (by positive teaching of Christian doctrine).

At a convention of the Religious Education Association held in the summer of 1925, at Wichita, Kansas, Ross W. Sanderson, Secretary of the Federation of Churches, said: "The newer religious education has once for all abandoned the effort to indoctrinate anybody . . . It has definitely turned its back on the old certitudes."

The practical meaning of such views is that no one should give or receive positive instruction in the Christian faith. The young people of America, including those who receive instruction in courses in modern religious education, should virtually be permitted to grow up in heathen darkness.

Atheism Taught Under the Cloak of Religious Education

And this is not the whole truth. The most advanced Modernist leaders have passed the point where they content themselves with teaching that Christian doctrine is not to be accepted as true. They teach positive anti-theism—pure atheism. They do it under the cloak of theological and religious education.

It is important to notice that many of the directors of religious education, who have been engaged by the churches for the instruction of the children and young people, have been trained and decisively influenced by professors defending the most advanced Modernism. Many religious educators make no secret of their anti-theistic position. Of this there is convincing evidence. (Compare on this point the article, "The Atheistic Tendency of Modernism," in the Moody Bible Institute Monthly.)

In the 1928 annual convention of the Religious Educational Association, held in Philadelphia, Professor James H. Leuba, of Bryn Mawr College, frankly defended unvarnished atheism in one of the principal addresses of the convention. John M. Versteeg, a Methodist minister in New York, author of a text book on religious education entitled, Christianity at Work (published by the Methodist Book Concern), states, on the ground of his experience in this field, that many religious educators "are infected to a considerable degree by extreme behavioristic views, or are, at least, flabbergasted by them" (The Christian Century, June 2, 1927).

Professor Walter S. Athearn, of the Boston University School of Religious Education, the author of well-known books on religious education, in an address given in 1926 before a large religious assembly, made the following important statements: "An age of science has given us a partial and incomplete view of nature. This partial and incomplete view of nature has been carried into the fields of education, sociology, philosophy, and religion. A materialistic age is the result. Sociology, philosophy, education, and religion have all been affected by the adoption of the so-called 'scientific methods,' drawn from a partial view of reality. The field of religious education has been invaded. Our greatest task today is to keep religious education religious. The concept of the existence of a personal God is on the defensive. A naturalistic humanism is sweeping, almost unimpeded, through educational and religious circles. There is rapidly developing a cult of Christian atheists . . . persons who say they accept the ethical program of Christ, but who deny the existence of Christ's God, upon whom that ethical program is based."

Dr. Athearn pointed out, further, that a group of men representing a materialistic philosophy "dominates the academic circles of America today." "It has revived anew the emphasis of Voltaire, Rousseau, Hume, etc. . . . The pupils of the men of this group are carrying this theory into secular and religious education. Religion is identified with social adjustment. Biology becomes basic. . . . A moral and religious education based on such premises will produce a materialistic, naturalistic humanism and eventually end in atheism, or at best agnosticism for the church and anarchy for the state."

Testimony of a Prominent Modernist

Shailer Mathews recently published a noteworthy article on this subject under the title, "Let Religious Education Beware." Professor Mathews has long been known as an ardent advocate of Modernism. With all Modernists, he disowns the authority of the Scriptures, and consequently disparages doctrinal teaching, except when presented as mere human opinion which is not supposed to stand the test of time. He has often expressed himself against considering the doctrines of the Christian faith as the unchangeable truth. He has insisted that Christian doctrine must not be taught as dogma, since it is not believed to be final or authoritative.

Now when, in agreement with the principles which he holds, the more advanced Modernists declare that the doctrine of God may be discarded, Professor Mathews asserts that this doctrine is essential. He makes this assertion on his own authority, and is quite dogmatic about it.

In a recent address in Chicago he made the statement: "When God is lost, all is lost." In the article mentioned above he confesses that he sees great danger in the atheistic tendencies of modern religious education. "Religious education," he says, "too frequently sidesteps the issue, and religious educators teach a 'non-atheistic religion.' He says further: "The reason for such an attitude . . . springs from the current pragmatic view which refuses to treat God as anything other than a social idea." (The Christian Century, March 24, 1927.)

God, then, is regarded as a mere idea, as a creation of the human brain, as having no objective reality. This is a terrible indictment, indeed, of that type of religious education that is now in the ascendency all over this broad land, being represented by men and women who have fallen prey to the influences of the more advanced Modernism. This type of religious education is today largely represented in the state organizations of religious education. It means that great numbers of children and young people in America are taught virtual atheism by their religious instructors.—From the Bible Champion.

(Lesson for March 24)

Stewardship and Missions

Scripture Lesson—Genesis 12:1-3; Deuteronomy 8:17, 18; Jonah 3:1-10; Malachi 3:7-12; Matthew 23:18-20; Acts 1:6-8; 13:1-3; 26:12-20; Romans 1:14-16; 1 Corinthians 16:2; 2 Corinthians 8:1-15; 9:1-15.

Printed Text—Acts 1:6-8; 2 Cor. 8:1-9.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 96:1-8.

Golden Text—It is required of stewards that a man be found faithful. 1 Cor. 4:2.

Trail Blazers

Stewardship is broader than tithing, but money is its acid test (2 Cor. 8:2).

The Macedonians even before the time of Red Cross and community-chest drives, had learned to "give till it hurts." (Verse 3).

Stewardship starts with self. (Verse 5).

It is easier to toss a coin or write a check than to go where need exists and give yourself. (Verse 5).

To put off the life of stewardship until one has become affluent is to postpone it forever. (Verse 6.)

The grace of generosity is contagious. (Verse 6.)

Stewardship that is vague and general soon ceases to be stewardship; it must have a definite plan to merit the name. (Golden Text.)

A faithful steward makes every dollar that comes his way sing the doxology. (Golden Text.)—L. B. Phiper in the Church School Journal.

Golden Text Illustrated

1 Corinthians 4:2

Robert J. Burdette, the missionary wit, said something that was published in the paper in 1910, that aptly illustrates our Golden Text:—"There is about as much reason why the pastor should urge upon the flock the great importance of cordial and generous support of missions, as there is for the mother to impress upon the father this week, and next week, and the week after that, the fact that the children need shoes. A man may have seven children to make him proud and happy and strong, and yet he is always astonished when it is announced that one of them needs another pair of shoes. It is much the same with home missions. When the pastor announces the offering for missions for the current year, astonishment answers with its staccato, 'What! Again!' Then the usual pause, as though to recover from the shock, and then the accusing question. 'What did you do with the offering I gave you last year?' Well, motherlike, I must confess; we spent it for missions.

"Now we want more shoes for our own children. We want 'more' this year than we did last, because, thank God, there are more children. 'Why can't the younger children wear the outgrown shoes of the older ones?' Because—again I thank God—our missions do not crawl around and outgrow their shoes. A religion that sits still long enough to outgrow its clothes has also outgrown itself and its life, and has need of nothing but a long, deep, dark, lonely, unresurrectable grave. Missions never outgrow any of their clothes. They hustle around and wear them out."—Missionary Review.

Proportionate Giving

"Every man shall give as he is able," said Moses (Deut. 16:17): "according as a man hath," said Paul (2 Cor. 8:7-15). It is not enough to give systematically—"a penny a week and a prayer" would be systematic, but it would be only farcical if it measured a rich man's gifts. "Every man according to his ability." Not every man according to his mood, or fancy; not every man according to other people's giving or other people's ability, but every man according to his ability. How well cared for the poor brethren would be if this were the recognized standard of giving to the church today."—Henry Clay Trumbull.

Give Joyfully

"The abundance of their joy—abounded unto—liberality." v. 2. A joyful Christian is likely to be a liberal giver. A gentleman called on a member of the church for $50.00 for a certain benevolence. The merchant gladly responded to the call and handing him the amount said to his clerk: "Credit O. B. J. with $50.00." The solicitor asked, "May I enquire what O. B. J. has to do with the matter?" The merchant laughed and answered, "That is my benevolence account and I have named it, O Be Joyful."

"The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." 9:7. The Greek word for cheerful is hilaros giver. One who rejoices to give, who has a happy, buoyant confidence in his cause, his fellow-workers and his God. A man gave so liberally to a certain benevolence that he alarmed his brethren. They told his pastor to go and see him and tell him he ought not to give so much. The pastor said to him, "I have come to talk with you about the collection." "Yes," said his parishioner, interrupting him, "I have been thinking about it all the morning. Last night I dreamed that I threw four soda crackers on the water and they came back to me in four pound loaves and I have made up my mind to double my subscription."

A smart young fellow said to an aged minister, "I'll give you this five-dollar bill for the cause you pleaded for on Sunday, just for fun." "Just for fun!" the old man exclaimed; "why, that is just as it should be, for the Bible says the Lord loves a hilarious giver."

Sacrificial Giving

Some one enumerates the seven ways of giving: the careless way, the impulsive way, the lazy way, the systematic way, the fair way, the heroic way. This last is "the self-sacrificing way, giving more than you can, giving till it hurts, and then giving till it does not hurt."—Rev. A. B. Simpson. The last is the way of the widow's mite.

How Help Foreign Missions

1. Knowledge. Have a mission study class. Let each study thoroughly at least one mission field. Those who have done this have considered their field "the most interesting one in the world"—until they learn the equal fascination of the next field they study.

2. Prayer. Pray for the missionaries—their converts. Pray for the home churches, that they may have a baptism of the Spirit which will waken them to the glory of mission work.

3. Service. This can be done in at least three ways: (a) Gifts of money. There is no end to the needs. (b) Gifts of time. Our missionaries are in constant need of articles to help them in their work. (c) Gifts of life. We need new recruits for the field. The older missionaries are gradually passing on. What shall be done if no new ones take their places?"

"Every Man is a Missionary, now and forever, for good or for evil, whether he intends it or not. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. There are no moral blanks; there are no neutral characters. Being dead or alive, every man speaks."

Dan. 12:3 tells us that the "wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Daniel himself was a great foreign missionary, a model of faithfulness to his God, though surrounded by all the temptations of heathenism. Every such missionary life is a star, whose light never goes out.

A new treaty providing for joint projects to increase and maintain the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls was recently signed by the United States and Canada at Ottawa. Under its terms the two nations will share the cost of constructing remedial works in the Niagara River to increase the volume of water flowing over the American falls and to provide better distribution of the flow over the Canadian section. The International Niagara Board estimates that the cost of remedial work would approximate $1,750,000, of which Canada's share would be $800,000.

A Special Christian Endeavor Program at Krypton

Christian Endeavor officials some time ago asked each society to hold a special service, the complete record of which should be turned in to International headquarters, and these programs were to be interchanged with foreign societies. The society at Krypton, Kentucky, under the direction of the pastor, Brother Fred V. Kinzie, prepared a special program on the topic, "Christ and Youth," and we are supplied with the following reproduction of the talks and testimonies which were given on that occasion. Brother Kinzie says, "We have copied these amateur efforts with practically no alterations." They are remarkable testimonies to the power of God, exercised through Christian Endeavor, on lives who have been lifted up out of untoward circumstances.

We will not have space enough to complete these testimonies this week, but they are of sufficient interest to be continued, and should prove an inspiration to young people who have had better opportunities. —Editor.

Christian Endeavor Meeting Held at the First Brethren Church, Krypton, Kentucky, February 3, 1929

The meeting was opened by the singing of "Yield Not to Temptation." This was followed by "What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

Our topic for the evening was "Christ and Youth." We chose as our Scripture lesson Ecclesiastes 12:1, and 1 Timothy 4:12. These verses were read by a member of the society. The leader tried to show what the attitude of youth toward Christ should be. We should be altogether loyal to him. Christ loves young people. He accepts the service of young people. The lesson called for instances recorded in the Bible where God had honored young people and accepted service from them. Such names as Samuel, David, Jeremiah, and Solomon were mentioned. By discussion, five reasons were brought out why a person should become a consecrated Christian while still young. They are as follows: First, Physical health; a young person is physically able to do more and better work than an old person. Second, one's mind is more active and keen and swift to memorize in youth than at any other period. Third, a young person has a chance to give more time to God's service than one whose course is nearly run. More work can be done, consequently. Fourth, not only can more service be given, but more efficient service. Other things being equal, the man who has been a bookkeeper for twenty years is a better bookkeeper than the man who has been keeping books for only one year. A Christian should give his entire life to Christ's service so that the most effective work may be done. And fifth, we owe Christ our all. It is an insult to him when we wilfully keep our lives for ourselves, intending to give them to him, after we are too old to enjoy them ourselves.

After this, three talks were given by Cecil Campbell, Alma Hall, and Clarence Feltner. These were followed by testimonies from James Feltner, Irvin Campbell, Charles McIntosh, and Mrs. Kinzie. By the time the meeting had reached this stage the leader felt that it would be a good time to extend an invitation. Everyone seemed quiet and thoughtful. So she asked the pastor to do this if he felt impelled. He took charge and at first no one responded. At the suggestion of Mrs. Kinzie the invitation was expanded, not only to accept Christ, but also to give Christians an opportunity of saying that they were willing to serve Christ wherever he might lead them. Six bright young people responded—one to accept Christ, and the other five to surrender themselves to his service.

The meeting closed happily in praise and prayer. LYDA CARTER, Leader.

Testimony by James Feltner

People and friends, this is the first time I ever had an opportunity to say a few words for Christ, and I am going to make these words count. Folks, I am willing to confess that I have lived a reckless life, which I am ashamed to let be known. But thank God I have changed in every respect, and I know that if it wasn't for God that I wouldn't be here tonight. But in my life I have seen things that would change old Satan if he were here on earth. You may not think this is true, but I know more about it than any one else. I once lay sick, and by my bedside were two doctors, when all of a sudden there arose from my bed a man in a chariot with two horses hitched to it, and a group of angels flying after this chariot, and they all ascended into heaven, and I thought it would be my time next to go, but God spared my life for some purpose and I want to find out what it was for. Folks, that didn't change my life at all, till here of late, I have begun to study about this vision, and the fact about it is that I wasn't asleep when I saw this. I know I haven't been thankful enough to God, but from this time on I am going to live more for God than for the world.

The Effects of Christian Endeavor

By C. E. Feltner

There are many communities in our country that have been and are being aroused with real enthusiasm by the Christian Endeavor Society. Wherever there are societies it will surely be noticed by those traveling through, and also by the ones living in the community, as it is the duty of every Endeavorer to aid and help in every way possible their community.

Let us look, on the other hand, just a moment, and we can very easily see that where there is no Christian Endeavor Society we will be certain to be disappointed, if we ourselves are Endeavorers and are looking for those to welcome us into their community.

Just a little experience as an Endeavorer to show that Christian Endeavor really does have effect on young people's lives, as well as the lives of old people. We had a revival at our community and of course, all we Endeavorers were present most all the time. There was a young man that had cared very much for one of the Endeavor girls; she had talked to him concerning his soul several times, but he, like many other young men, loved to drink whiskey and this, of course, would lead him into trouble. As this young girl was walking down the road one day she saw this man at a distance, and knew what was the matter, so she rushed down to where he lay. She found that he was drunk, and was very badly hurt and bruised; he was very near the edge of the river, all muddy, and in a condition so that he could not help himself. She pulled him to a dry place and washed his face with her handkerchief, and before leaving him she spread the handkerchief over his face to keep the hot sun from burning. After he recovered from this terrible condition, he noticed a handkerchief lying beside the place where he lay. He picked it up and saw her initial on the corner, which gave him a deep study; he knew that it was this girl whom he loved who had been there and seen him in that shape. He could hardly wait until he could get to see her, but he went straight to her home and called for her. She came to the door and invited him in, asking him to kneel with her in prayer, which he did, and she asked God to forgive him for this awful deed which he had done, and also asked God's help to gain his soul for Christ. After they arose, he departed, leaving the girl thinking seriously. In a short time the girl received a letter from him saying that he had joined the church and was a willing worker for the Lord, about whom she had spoken so many times. It was not long after this until he was elected president of the Christian Endeavor society and he always told in the C. E. meetings that it was through Christian Endeavor that he had found his Savior.

Not only does Christian Endeavor have its effect on young people, but older people as well. Doctor Frances E. Clark, the father of Christian Endeavor, saw that this organization would have effect in the world and show the effects of the movement in winning many souls for Christ.

We can see that through Christian Endeavor young men and young women have stood firm for God and have left their homes and loved ones and gone to other lands to carry the Gospel.

Christian Endeavor has taught many young people that tithe-giving is necessary and also that we must meditate and study

Statement Regarding the Famine Situation in China

(The following statement may be considered reliable as it comes with the authority of Leslie B. Moss, one of the secretaries of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America—Editor)

Condition of Famine Exists

There is no question whatever that famine conditions actually exist in a number of the provinces of China. The best conservative estimate indicates that at least 20,000,000 people in nine provinces are suffering this winter from starvation in varying but serious degrees. The provinces that are affected are Honan, Hupeh, Shantung, Hopei (Chihli), Shansi, Shensi, Chahar, Suiyuan and Kansu. The Chinese Recorder for January, 1929 states—"this winter famine exists to a devastating degree."

Causes of Famine

The main causes given for the widespread famine conditions are: three years of short crops, drought, army worms, locusts, bandits, and in some of the provinces the contending armies of the past few years have contributed to the results.

Administration of Relief

The International Famine Relief Commission with headquarters in Peking has developed since the famine of 1921-22 an organization which enables them to administer famine relief in a large part of the area afflicted. Mr. Dwight Edwards of the Y. M. C. A. in Peking has been set free to give his full time as Executive Director of this international committee during the present emergency. There has been organized by the China Famine Relief Inc., which is raising money in the United States, an advisory committee of which Mr. C. R. Bennett of the National City Bank in Peking is Chairman and Mr. Roger S. Greene of the Peking Union Medical College is one of the members. Mr. John Earl Baker, personal representative in administering relief for the Red Cross in the famine of 1921-22, has gone to China to act as Secretary of this advisory committee and to supervise the distribution of all gifts received from American sources.

This advisory committee is utilizing existing facilities in the territory for the carrying out of relief measures and wherever possible is using responsible missionaries in administering relief.

Chinese Government Participation

The Nanking Government has made a grant of $2,000,000 Chinese currency to be distributed as necessary and there appears every reason to believe that the Government is making honest and effective efforts to relieve the situation. Upon the insistence of the advisory committee mentioned above the Government has agreed to remit taxes on famine supplies, to guarantee the protection of workers and funds and to provide free transportation for supplies. It is reported that they are making efforts to secure a million and a quarter dollars for famine relief from provinces not affected by the famine.

Help by the Chinese People

It was reported last fall that from various sources the different Chinese relief agencies had raised and made available nearly $2,000,000 Chinese currency for famine relief purposes. It is variously estimated that from four to six million dollars Chinese currency have been made available from Chinese sources.

Help by the American People

There has been organized in the United States the China Famine Relief, Inc., 205 West 42nd St., New York City, which has to date sent to China $205,000 Gold contributed by the American people.

Necessity of Additional Aid

The horrors of famine conditions are pressing upon these millions of Chinese people in the midst of the coldest winter weather. They are forced to the use of all sorts of inadequate food substitutes such as, the bark and roots of trees, weeds, or chaff ground up with dirt. They abandon their homes wandering around in search of such food materials, or use the combustible materials in their homes for purposes of keeping warm. The clothes off their backs are often sold to procure something to serve as food. They are faced with pestilence and there is a continual process of selling children and women in order to secure bare subsistence. It has been reported that migrations of immense numbers of Chinese people are in process through the winter snows from some of the northern provinces into Manchuria in the hope of finding food there. The distress suffered by untold millions of people can scarcely be imagined. This emergency calls for an immediate response. Reliable estimates are that it would be necessary to have $40,000,000 local currency in order to take care of the 20,000,000 people who are afflicted. Appeal has come to the United States and other foreign countries to supply at least $12,000,000 Gold. Although it would be impossible to reach some of these areas with relief certainly the church people of America could well send several million dollars to the starving in China and be sure of its being effectively used to relieve the direst suffering. If millions of people are to be saved from death by starvation it can only be because the American people give liberally and at once to meet the emergency this winter and spring.

Rosario, Argentina

Inasmuch as our denomination is not large and strong like some, we thought it best in Argentina to concentrate on a district rather than spread over the entire country. However, the tendency to drift to the cities is the same here as elsewhere and, whether we will choose to go to the cities or not, the Lord leads the way to them.

Buenos Aires and Rosario are the two largest cities in this country, the former having two million and the latter five hundred thousand inhabitants. In Buenos Aires we fostered a work for a number of years, but for lack of competent workers and the great expense it was given up. However, we have nearly thirty members scattered through the city, and Brother Anton and wife are still living there and trying to support themselves with the hope of yet forming a self-sustaining mission.

Rosario is only half as far from Rio Cuarto and there also our members have drifted until now there are twenty in this city, including several who can preach.

The majority of these live in one district so that it is possible for them to get together. On the preaching tour which I am now making, my first stop was Rosario. Here I baptized two men. One had been a candidate before leaving Rio Cuarto. The other has been conducting a little mission in Rosario and working for a living. He learned our doctrine through another family from Rio Cuarto and for over a year has been requesting baptism. All these members have been attending other missions in Rosario, but now the majority feel that they should choose an unoccupied field near where they live and form a self-sustaining Brethren mission.

They already have benches and a place for a Sunday school and the streets of this section are swarming with children. Pray that the blessing of the Lord may be upon their efforts.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
 was a great correspondent

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

If there is anything the world cannot and will not be able either to understand or appreciate before that great day it is the fact that the true Church of our Lord is an invincible and unconquerable thing. However Stygian may be the darkness before the dawning it augurs well the forthcoming dawn. The Lord has blessed us here. That is what we want to tell the brotherhood. With our new church building completed Sunday, March 3rd saw its dedication. The Lord gave us a beautiful day. The sun shone in lovely fashion all the day. It was one of those early spring days that so forcibly recalled those pleasurable youthful days upon the Indiana plains. Returning feathered friends brought the first breath of warmer days betokening the fact that nature was preparing to doff her gray and to don her green.

The day wasn't all that the Lord did for us. He gave us a nice Sunday school attendance and brought us some good speakers for the day. Brother J. L. Gingrich was here from Johnstown to aid in steering the day's services to a successful and delightful conclusion. The morning service saw the dedication of the building. Brother Gingrich preached an uplifting and pertinent sermon upon the subject of Christ and the Church. The formal dedication was made truly realistic to our hearts by the joy of the occasion.

In the afternoon service we had the good fortune to have with us Dr. Charles A.

Bame, presently engaged in evangelistic services at Masontown. Also the pastor of the Masontown church was with us, Brother H. W. Koontz. The sermon of the afternoon was brought by Dr. Bame. In a pointed address he laid down the challenge of the Old Time Religion,—how much are we willing to do for it? Through the kindly efforts of Brothers Gingrich and Bame enough money was raised by cash and pledges to completely efface all indebtedness on the building.

At the night service Brother Koontz preached, bringing a message of evangelistic note. All the messages of the day were deeply appreciated by the people. At this night service Brother Jonas Conaway was ordained to the deaconship. Thus ended a day long looked forward to by the Brethren people and their friends of Uniontown.

On Monday, March 4, a two weeks' evangelistic service began under the leadership of Rev. Frank G. Coleman. Brother Coleman is facing many adverse circumstances among which are a seriously curtailed time limit, and inclement weather. We are trustful that the Lord will bless the work and that he may have a victory in truth here.

FRANK GEHMAN.

TURLOCK, CALIFORNIA

We are now in an evangelistic campaign; the crowds are good and the interest is splendid. I baptized five young men last Sunday night, which was February 24th.

Last Sunday was a hard day on me. Just before going to church a telegram came saying my father had gone home. He died Saturday night, February 23. He was past seventy-five years old. He never was so happy in anything as in evangelistic work, and I felt in my soul that he would have me go right on with my work, and I did so with a heavy heart. But the blessed Savior strengthened me,—bless his name!

In all the messages of the first week we endeavored to unveil and reveal the dynamic lifting power of the cross. Following is the list of subjects, the discussions of which proved of such interest to those who attended:

"The Blood of Jesus, in the Light of the Cross."

"The Great Judgment, in the Light of the Cross."

"The Sin That Can Never Be Forgiven, in the Light of the Cross."

"The Immutable Love of God, in the Light of the Cross."

"The Greatest Thing in All Worlds, in the Light of the Cross."

"The Picture of a Lost Soul, in the Light of the Cross."

"The Only Way to Salvation, in the Light of the Cross."

"Heaven, How to Get There, in the Light of the Cross."

"No excuses for Not Being a Christian, in the Light of the Cross."

The subjects for the next week will follow a different line of thought.

On March 10th we will dedicate our new addition to the church, which is so much needed for Sunday school work and social purposes. It was quite an undertaking for a small band, but they are willing workers.

May the Lord bless you all in the work of our great Master.

N. W. JENNINGS.

A FRENCH PRISON

Paris, France, May 11, 1928.

I have not had time yet to write up our visit yesterday to the Fresnes Prison. I shall now try to tell you about the Maison Centrale Correctionnelle at Poincy, which we visited this morning. We took a taxi down there, kept it until about 3 P. M., and it cost us only $5, so you see taxis here are cheap.

The Central Correctional Prison at Poincy is one of the oldest prisons in France. It was an old nunnery, and about 1820 was turned into a prison. Consequently it is built on the old style and must not be judged on the same basis as that we visited yesterday at Fresnes, which was finished in 1897.

It is intended for those sentenced for from 13 months up to 10 years. Most of them have been in prison before. Hence there is not the same efforts made here to keep the men from knowing each other as there is at Fresnes, which is intended for first offenders. Hence, here there are no veils worn over the face, and the men work in workshops together. However, the men are not supposed to communicate with each other. In other words, while the institution at Fresnes is modelled on the old Pennsylvania separate cell system, this prison is modelled on the Auburn solitary system even though they work together. Men are punished for talking together or communicating in any way. This is like most of our prisons in the United States. For even the Pennsylvania Prison works the men together now instead of in their individual cells, as was done originally.

The men sleep in separate cells in the great cell houses. These are old and very primitive. The cells are small cells with no bars over the tops so that there is plenty of air. However, there are no sanitary conveniences. There is no water in each cell except what is carried in in a pitcher. However, that is as good as you find in most French houses even today. The smell of disinfectant is everywhere, while at Fresnes there was no smell at all.

There is only an infirmary here with no operating room. We were told on inquiry that in case of an operation being necessary the men were taken to Fresnes. What would happen in case an immediate operation were necessary, they did not say. Not many were in the infirmary. There were about 20 out of 1,000 men in the institution. This, however, was a much greater rate than that of Fresnes, where out of 1,500 they had less than a dozen in the infirmary yesterday.

The work is done in shops. All kinds of trades are carried on. They make paper containers for pepper, paper lanterns like Japanese and Chinese lanterns, paper decorative work, paper bags, furniture, iron chairs for lawns and these sidewalk cafes so famous in Paris. They make shoes and ladies' comfy slippers, clothing not only for this institution, but for the prison in Algiers, and for the prisoners deported for life to Guiana in South America. These uniforms for the exiled convicts in Guiana are cotton with red stripes. They also make tennis racket holders, tubes of stickine with which things are pasted. Their largest industry is the printing plant. They print all kinds of forms and labels, blank books, bank forms, envelopes, etc. I asked the sub-director who took us around whether the labor unions did not object that these were made and sold on the market in competition with goods of like kinds made by free labor. He said that they had never made any trouble.

The men here work nine hours a day. They get a pecule as they do in Fresnes. Some of the men make enough to set them up in business when they get out. One of the most interesting kinds of work I saw them doing was making fur garments out of the smallest pieces of fur I have ever seen used in garments.

The food of these prisoners interested me. Keeping in mind the rather limited food of the ordinary Frenchman both as to quantity and quality, I am not prepared to say that the food is bad. I am afraid that the same food served in any American prison at least in the United States would result in a riot. I saw them eating their noon meal. It consisted of macaroni, bread, water, and some potatoes. Then any man who has money can also buy coffee, cheese, sardines, and other delicacies. They get meat, we were told, a few times a week. The bread is whole wheat bread baked in their own ovens, but at least 36 hours old. Well, it is so hard that when the sub-director tried to cut a loaf of it, he gave it up.

The guards which work with the men have no weapons whatever. Those on the walls only are armed. This is in spite of the fact that in many of the shops the men have knives, and other tools with which they might easily inflict serious injury on the guards. I asked about this and was told that they never have any trouble. Certainly this is not America.

The punishment cells here are old, but are not dark. The men confined in them sleep on the floor, have bread and water three days and then meat one day, then bread and water for three again. They are left out for exercise in the open air a half hour each half day. A man kept in the discipline cell for more than 15 days may be given some work to do. Otherwise they do not work. They are punished for talking, slighting their work, refusing to work, or other disobedience to superiors. Much the same regime is observed as in the United States. No whip is ever used in the French prisons.

In this prison much more power machinery is used than in Fresnes, where the men work in their individual cells rather than in workshops. I have no doubt that the prison work here is much more productive than there.

After meals the men march around the yards for exercise for half an hour. One wonders at this for some of the men, especially those who are standing all the time at their work.

This prison reminds me of many of the state prisons of the United States of the older type. It is not modernized with scientific ventilation and sanitation. It has the prison smells. The kitchen reeks with the smell of poorly prepared food. The whole thing makes a bad impression on the American visitor. This impression is in striking contrast with that made by the much newer institution at Fresnes.

Here I was not impressed with the superior character of the prison guards. I did not get to see the director, but the sub-director was of the old sort of prison official often seen in the United States even yet. I was impressed with the better class of officials at Fresnes.

I am bound to say that so far as I have seen prisons in France she has nothing to teach the best prison officials in the United States. She is not using the results of modern science in psychiatry as much as some of our states. She is trying the old, old method of solitary cellular confinement for the first offenders at Fresno. She has not yet adopted some of our methods of getting men out upon the land. She seems not to have heard of the experiment at Witzwill, Switzerland.

Tomorrow I am going to visit one of her reformatories for young men. We shall see whether she has something there we have not yet learned.

We expect to leave for Brussels Sunday or Monday morning. J. L. GILLIN.

CHALLENGE

By Molly Anderson Haley, in "The Christian Advocate"

*Some day, perhaps, we shall forget
Main street where rum-holes festered—doors that swung*

*As loosely as the lounge's idle tongue:
Forget the haunted look that children wear, Robbed from their birth by thieves whose licensed lair*

Waxed fat upon the passing workman's wage,

*And cheated helpless youth and feeble age.
Some day, perhaps, we shall forget,
But O, please God, not yet, not yet!*

*Some day, perhaps, we shall forget
The glorious thrill of having set them free,
Of keeping faith with children yet to be!
Though in the harbor fogs have settled low,
Opinion's frenzied ships dart to and fro,
Still gleams aloft for those with seeing eyes*

*The torch of Liberty, serene and wise:
Some day, perhaps, we shall forget,
But O, please God, not yet, not yet!*

Dutch engineers are attempting to reclaim the land which is now covered by the Zuider Zee in Holland by constructing a network of dikes. Originally this was dry land, slightly below the sea level, protected by massive dikes, but during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the dikes were allowed to deteriorate and the water gradually filtered in. Nearly half a million acres of farm land will be uncovered, but 350,000 acres will remain untouched by this project.

the word as outlined in our C. E. pledge. We can very easily see that the C. E. organization has advanced our country's welfare and has helped to promote the Christian brotherhood of man. We should thank God for such men as Dr. Francis E. Clark, who found a way for young and old to help advance God's kingdom on earth.

H. F. E. O'NEILL—AN APPRECIATION

It is not with any desire to suggest that the words of esteem for our brother Harry O'Neill which have already appeared in the Evangelist were not properly presented, but simply to express appreciation of the help and encouragement which came from an acquaintance of more than twenty years' duration, that I indite this article. (The family have also asked me to include a few facts concerning his life that have not appeared previously.)

I first met Harry O'Neill at Johnstown about the year 1903, when as a young pastor I came to serve a church in this city. Being of almost the same age we were naturally drawn to each other. The associations the years that have intervened since then have but deepened the respect of my heart for one who was gentleman, Christian, and always a true friend. His taking away in the prime of his manhood has left an ache in the heart at the thought of the earthly parting, but it also brings note of exultation that he has made full proof of his faith and has but entered into the joy of the Lord a little while ahead of the rest of us.

Brother O'Neill came of good Brethren stock, his father being Patrick F. O'Neill and his mother Lydia Ann (McCartney) O'Neill. He was born in Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, May 2, 1880, and was translated to see the Lord on February 5, 1929, having rounded out almost 49 years of earthly life.

H. F. E. O'Neill
New Brighton, Pennsylvania

His parents were charter members of the Conemaugh congregation, and at the early age of twelve years Harry O'Neill gave his heart to Christ under the ministry of Elder J. F. Koontz. Twenty years ago Brother O'Neill went to Pittsburgh to engage in Y. M. C. A. work and transferred his church membership to the Brethren church of that city. The obituary published over the signature of that congregation testifies to the esteem in which he was held by that congregation. No man who knew him ever questioned the manhood or the Christianity of Harry O'Neill.

Harry O'Neill was well known to those members of the Brethren fraternity who attended National Conference during the years from 1915 to 1925, because of his connection with the work of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund. As president of the Benevolence Board which has charge of the gathering of these funds he was always alert and aggressive in promoting the interests of his board. Naturally witty and ready of speech he was no mean antagonist in defending his views, as many who measured lances with him in wordy combat learned, but he was always a magnanimous victor and a good natured loser.

Brother O'Neill commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew him, and was in his life a constant refutation of the contention of some that a man cannot be a real Christian in his associations with his fellow men. A Y. M. C. A. Secretary for some twenty-five years, he was compelled to work among men for practically all his time, and to retain the respect of men of all classes is no mean task. Harry O'Neill did so.

His wife and daughter, and one sister, Mrs. Nettie O'Neill Rochford of Van Etten, New York, survive him. He served his generation, and like one of old has fallen asleep. But he fell asleep in Jesus, and even the sorrowing hearts are satisfied. Satisfied that after life's fitful fever he sleeps peacefully. Satisfied that God's ways are best, and satisfied that "we shall meet on a fairer shore." We are better for having had his friendship. DYOLL BELOTE.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

this "problem," forsakes her own pedagogical principles of religious education. Over and over in her book she stresses the value of concreteness in dealing with children, and rightfully so. The child "lives in the realm of the concrete." And this is precisely why the child prays to Christ. Furthermore, this is one of the great reasons for the Incarnation of the Son of God. He became flesh in order to make the invisible God concrete to the human mind. "No man hath seen God at any time; the Only Begotten Son ... he hath declared him" (Jn. 1:18). Christ is the "Image of the invisible God" (Col. 1:15). One would think that, following their own principles of child education, the experts would recognize the value of the Incarnation of God in Christ, and encourage the children to find God in him.

The main difficulty apparently is not with the author's pedagogy, but rather with her theology. And this leads us to an important observation. The antagonism of orthodox Christians to the modern program of "religious education" is not so much based upon opposition to scientific teaching methods as it is to erroneous theological opinions. We wish to use the very best teaching methods, but we do not propose to use these methods to teach error.

The religious education expert is always tempted to turn aside here and there for the purpose of teaching theology. For example, the book under discussion contains a great deal of valuable material, but its value is seriously modified by the author's amateur excursions into the realm of theology.

Scientific principles are very important when we are teaching the most important book in the world—the Bible. But the Deity of Christ is more important than teaching principles. We can do without these last, if necessary, but not the other. If the writers on Sunday school methods feel they must enter the field of Christian doctrine, they should see to it that they have the proper knowledge and training in this field. A psychologist is not necessarily a theologian.

WILL ROGERS rebukes the Preachers

In a syndicated article, he says, "A preacher just can't save anybody nowadays. He is too busy saving the Nation. He can't monkey with individual salvation. Every cross-road minister is trying to be a Colonel House. In the old days those fellows read their Bibles. Now they read the Congressional Record."

Of course, the wise will understand that it is a dangerous thing to take Mr. Rogers too seriously. They will remember that he is a humorist, and that he is paid a great deal to make us laugh at ourselves (which is a good thing once in a while), and also that the professional humorist is compelled to exaggerate our follies for the sake of effect. But after making all these allowances, there is still enough truth in Mr. Rogers's caricature to turn all our amusement into soberness.

The highest service that any minister can render for his nation is to bring the message of salvation to the individual men and women who make up the nation. This is more important business than even Prohibition.

MEXICO and the "Mass"

Another serious rebellion has broken out in this unfortunate country. In all the reports of it no legitimate reason has appeared which would justify armed revolution against the present government.

One recurring item in the news, however, is interesting. In various places where the revolution has succeeded, the Roman Catholic church has begun once more to conduct religious services. This church has maintained an attitude of bitter hostility toward the present Mexican government, going so far as to stop their religious services in protest against the governmental ruling against foreign priests.

In stopping the celebration of the Mass, the Roman hierarchy struck a terrific blow at the Mexican government. In the mind of the Roman Catholic worshipper his very life and relation to God hangs on the "sacrifice" of the Mass. To be deprived of its benefits, to him, is an appalling thing. The Roman Catholic organization could not have taken a more effective way to foment unrest among the Roman Catholic population of Mexico than to stop the celebration of the Mass, and then lay the blame for this deprivation upon the civil government. Technically, of course, the Roman Catholic church has nothing to do with the present revolution.

In the matter of political cleverness, modern governments are scarcely a match for the Great Harlot which "sitteth upon many waters." Her political wisdom is the accumulation of centuries.

OUR "Precious" Illusions

The other day Colonel Lindbergh with his fiancée narrowly escaped disaster while making an airplane landing. Except for his remarkable skill both might have been killed. The entire nation rejoices in their escape.

Now for the strange, and rather amusing, aspect of the matter. At the field where the accident took place, Mexican guards immediately cleared the field of spectators and systematically destroyed photographs taken by newspaper men. But one enterprising reporter eluded the guards with his camera and within a few hours the pictures appeared in a Los Angeles paper. Naturally, it was a "scoop," because the "flying eagle" is the best news in the world. The publication of the pictures, however, did not help the popularity of the newspaper. The editor has been bitterly excoriated by various people for daring to publish a picture of Lindbergh's accident! One critic thinks the alert reporter should be "tarred and feathered."

Thus humanity loves its precious illusions. When the ancient Roman Emperor, deified by the people, made a blunder, it was extremely bad form for any one to "see" it. And George Washington, it is said, never told a lie. And Mrs. Eddy, in the minds of many devotees, has never died. Likewise we resent the unpleasant discovery that even splendid Mr. Lindbergh can have an accident.

It is this stubborn tendency of man to deify himself in his heroes that will pave the way for that final apotheosis of humanity in the "Man of sin." Having rejected the truth, men will finally come to believe a lie.

The truth is that men at their best are are human, finite, full of sin and mistakes. But there is one Man who is more than human, infinite, sinless, infallible and worthy of divine honors—the Man Christ Jesus. Those who idealize and worship men are following illusions, and at the last they will find nothing but disillusionment and bitter disappointment. But those who worship

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

17. Would it be right in your estimation to permit Boy Scouts to hold meetings in the Sunday school rooms of the church? W. D.

I can only express my own opinion. I have seen very fine results with boys under proper Scout Masters and I see no reason why under the care of a qualified man the boys could not use the Sunday school rooms for meetings. Manliness, truthfulness, courtesy, respect for their elders and a sense of honor are some of the virtues inculcated. These are all good in shaping the character of boys. Further, there is instilled a fine spirit of helpfulness and service and the boys are taught a multitude of most useful things in self-help and first aid. My observation has been that any sort of movement or organization for boys depends for its usefulness and value to them far more upon the adult leaders than even upon the boys. This gives me the opportunity to say that the church through some of its many agencies for service should do far more for her boys and girls.

18. Why is Sunday often called the Lord's Day? How does it differ from the Jewish Sabbath?

To begin with, the Christian Sunday or Lord's Day is in no sense the Jewish Sabbath. It is not even a Sabbath in the sense that Saturday was the Sabbath under the Jewish economy. The first mention in all Christian literature of the "Lord's Day" is in Revelation 1:10. The special observance of the First Day of the week is clearly attested by Acts 20:7 and 1 Corinthians 16:2. These three references certainly show, in the manner in which the day is spoken of, that it was an established designation for the day. That the day was so named and celebrated in honor of the Lord's Resurrection is also certain. In witness of this we have the testimony of Barnabas in the Epistle that bears his name. In Chapter 15 he says, "Wherefore, also, we keep the eighth day with joyfulness, the day also on which Jesus rose again from the dead." In the Didache we have this statement, "But every Lord's Day do ye gather yourselves together, and break bread, and give thanksgiving after having confessed your transgressions, that your sacrifice may be pure." St. Ignatius in writing to the Magnesians also speaks of the "Lord's Day." He calls it a festival day honoring the resurrection of Jesus. All these references from the early Fathers can not be more than 30 to 50 years later than the last of the Apostles. Space forbids showing how the name came into use.

19. Is it proper and right for a minister to say things about the members from the pulpit that he would not say to them personally?

By no means would it be right. Personalities, whether thinly or thickly veiled, are reprehensible to say the least. I think it is a cowardly thing to do in the premises. No one can answer. But if I can be more serious permit me to say that the minister should be what his name implies and what his ordination signifies. He represents God and as a true prophet of God he speaks for God. I have followed a simple principle in

The Trend of Foreign Missionary Interest

It may prove helpful to us individually and to the foreign mission situation if we are led to face a few questions as we approach the time for the Easter offering. Our questions deal with the trend in missionary interest. They are not given necessarily to suggest what the trend may be, but rather as a warning against an undesirable possible trend. For a few years back there has been a general slump in interest in foreign missions, if we are to judge by the retrenchments which some denominational executives have been forced to make. There are certain indications now appearing on the horizon that seem to point to a renewed interest that will make possible advanced steps in world evangelization. But these indications are too new and uncertain to give warrant for anything more than hope that a renewed advance is soon to be made possible. We certainly are justified in hoping and praying for it, but it requires that men and women of God shall respond still more magnanimously to the challenging conditions if it is actually to be realized.

Giving to foreign missions among our own people has kept up to a right commendable degree, so that no retrenchments have been necessary on the part of our own Foreign Board, for which we may be truly grateful to God. But indications are that we are about to reach a standstill, and that at a time when the opportunities of the fields appear most alluring, and when it seems that a spirit of advancement is about ready to grip other denominational groups. Therefore it is folly to suppose that we do not need to question ourselves as to what may be the real situation among us, or the trend of our missionary spirit. And in that conviction we shall outline a few test questions designed to bring us personally to face the situation and to consider our individual responsibility thereto. We shall make no effort to answer the questions, but shall merely state them and emphasize their implications.

First, Is our church beginning to take less seriously the command of our Lord to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature? Are we allowing the "Go ye" of the Commission to depart from the focal point of our vision? Is it shifting to the fringes of our consciousness? And are we becoming indifferent to our world responsibility thus divinely imposed? Is the command of the Master losing for us its compelling power? If that is the case, we do well to remind ourselves of his challenging statement, "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" If he is our Lord, then we are his servants, and we can only prove our loyalty as servants by obeying his word. The evangelization of the world was the burden of Christ's last message to his disciples, and is today the first task of the Christian church. They who lose a sense of their responsibility for that task by that very fact lose their right to wear the name of Christ.

Second, Is the church inclined to muffle its ears to the continuous cry of the restless, needy, suffering millions who are living in the darkness of heathenism, without God and without hope in the world? Is it growing weary of the everlasting appeals for gifts of money and of life to carry the knowledge of the saving grace of Christ to those who are dwelling under the pall of ignorance and superstition, and dying under the curse of sin? Are the wells of sympathy drying up; are the springs of loving kindness ceasing to flow; are Christian hearts becoming seared and unmoved with compassion by the wretched plight of their fellow mortals? There are those who express dissatisfaction with missionary appeals that stir the emotions. But God gave us just such natures as we possess that we might be moved with sympathy, and our Lord reproved those who in self-righteousness and coldness refused to respond to the cry of those in need.

Third, Is the Christian church becoming encased in a deadening materialism that makes it insensitive to the higher and finer and more spiritual demands of religion? Is it coming to partake of the common materialistic attitude toward life to such an extent as to value things above spiritual realities? Is it more concerned about the materials connected with its worship than it is with the spread of the Gospel? Does it think more of beautiful church buildings, elaborate equipment, comfortable pews, stately music, eloquent sermons and popularity than it does of the evangelization of the world and the salvation of lost souls? Are the people of the church becoming surfeited with things? If they are, they will find that these all-engrossing things will starve their souls and ere long they will be panting for the water and bread of life that can refresh and satisfy. If the church concerns itself predominantly with things, its life will ultimately become jaded, and weary, and dissatisfied and unfruitful. Beneath the beautiful overlay of materialism there will be found a little, self-centered, sordid life, constantly diminishing in its spirituality and becoming ever less adequate to feel and to communicate the higher and diviner elements of eternal truth.

Fourth, Is the spirit of romance long connected with the foreign missionary enterprise dying out? Do stories of the new and wonderful, the great and the strange, the difficult and the dangerous, the baffling and the impossible, no longer lure the souls of men? Have men lost, or are they losing the spirit of venture? Are men and women no longer taunted by what lies "beyond the mountains," and are they no longer challenged to undertake the seemingly impossible, both with life and with financial resources?

And lastly, Are the people of the church becoming less generous and less benevolent with their gifts? Are they becoming more tight-fisted with regard to foreign missions? We are not making an accusation, but merely raising the question. However, Charles H. Fahs, in writing the story of American Protestant finance since the beginning of the century, says it is "a story of ever-mounting expenditures for almost every enterprise except benevolences" (black face type, ours). "To missions the average church member is shown to be giving less now, in terms of purchasing power of the dollar, than he gave twenty-eight years ago—and his actual contributions for the past few years have steadily declined." This statement may not fit exactly the situation within our church, and yet we think it is fair to question whether our gifts have increased in proportion to the decrease of the purchasing power of a dollar.

Let us examine ourselves sincerely and see whether the trend of missionary interest among us is up or down. Let us face frankly and honestly such questions as these, and discover whether we are putting the church's supreme task first, or making it a matter of secondary importance.

"Bad Handwriting"

The Evangelist would like to restore the widely discarded "Amen Corner" long enough to speak out a hearty assent to a complaint made by a distinguished English contemporary about bad handwriting, and approved by an equally distinguished American publication—"The Living Church," which says:

The following paragraph from a recent number of the Guardian awakens within us such a chord of sympathy and understanding that we gladly take it over into our columns in toto, adding our fervent Amen to the plaint of our respected English contemporary: "The head of one of the great London stores has been complaining of the bad handwriting met with in commerce today. We read his lament with a lively sympathy, for we suppose that editors and printers suffer even more than do shopkeepers and bankers from illegible script. Bad writing, declares Mr. Richard Burbidge, costs business houses thousands of pounds every year. It also occasions newspaper editors a great deal of irritation and much delay. The clergy are notorious offenders, and certain laymen are not much better. What is the cause? It cannot be lack of education, for most of those upon our own black list are persons of culture and erudition. Sometimes we feel, when laboring through a difficult manuscript, that most of the abominable handwriting that reaches us is the result of a faulty psychology—an assumption on the part of the writer that what is passing through his brain will flash with equal facility upon the understanding of the unhappy individual whose lot it is to decipher the formless scrawl by which the writer's thoughts and ideas are expressed. It may be merely the carelessness bred of this age of distracting hustle, but whatever may be the cause the result is annoyance, delay, and the opening of the door to error. Mr. Burbidge's complaint offers us an opportunity of appealing to our correspondents to mend their ways; we hope that his words and our own will not fall upon deaf ears."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Sister J. H. Foster writes a story of a remarkable little six-year-old African lad who takes his Christianity seriously. It should be an inspiration to adults as well as to our young readers.

We are very prone to criticise the church freely and thoughtlessly, but it would only take a few months of closed doors to make some of us enthusiastic in its praise.

Brother H. C. Marlin, pastor of the church at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, is engaged in a revival meeting in his own church, and according to reports, the crowds are large and the interest is good and well sustained.

On the Sunday School magazine page, besides the article which Prof. Stuckey has supplied, we have some suggestions from Brother N. V. Leatherman, National Missionary Superintendent of the Association, for the missionary superintendents of our local schools regarding their cooperation in the Easter offering.

The two series of articles now in progress in the Evangelist—the one by Dr. G. W. Rench and the other by Brother Leo Polman—are interrupted this week, because of lack of space, this issue being devoted to the Foreign Missionary interests. Next week they will be resumed, and Brother Polman's series completed.

Brother A. R. Staley reports a meeting he held for Brother Hubert C. Hammond and his good people of Vandergrift, Pennsylvania. The pastor led his people in making good preparation for the meeting. Brother Staley sees a real future for this church. Under the present leadership enlarged Sunday school quarters have been added, and now further improvements are being made.

The Girls' Gospel Teams of the college are giving good account of themselves. Reports from several of the churches which they have served, have been most commendable. One of the teams conducted the Sunday evening program at the Ashland church on March 17th, in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Bame, and their talks were really gripping and full of inspiration.

The following announcement reached the Evangelist office as we were going to press:

"The First Brethren of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, will observe Holy Communion Sunday evening, March 31 at seven o'clock. All members of the church are urged to attend this service, and those of like faith are invited to come and join us in this fellowship with the Lord. W. C. Benshoff, Pastor."

One of the most significant symbols in which the church is set forth in the Scriptures is that of Christ's "body." That teaches us better than any other our relationship to each other and to Christ. If we are members of his body, we are members one of another. Consequently, no member of that body can be handled roughly without the other members being affected. None can suffer pain without the others sharing in it. None can be diseased, or dying, or cut away, without the others feeling the loss. In view of this we ought to be more mutually sympathetic and helpful.

A communication from our friend, Brother Louis C. Clapper, of Louisville, Ohio, informs us that the church at that place had the Girls' Gospel Team with them on Sunday, March 17th. The local S. M. M. served dinner in the church and spent an hour in fellowship. The boys are not being neglected, however, for on Friday night, the men and boys had a banquet, and the W. M. S. served a chicken dinner. A very interesting program followed. Brother A. E. Whitted is the pastor of this church.

Our correspondent from the church at Berne, Indiana, reports a three weeks' revival with Brother George Swihar of Wabash, Indiana and Brother W. F. Johnson of Berne doing the preaching. The music was in charge of Brother Clyde Rodabaugh of Williamstown, Ohio, whose direction of choruses and Bible stories for the boys and girls were greatly appreciated. One soul was added to the church by baptism. Brother John Parr is the faithful pastor of this church and under his leadership the various departments of the work are going forward harmoniously.

Brother Floyd Sibert, pastor of the church at Ellet, Ohio, informs us that the Ellet Sunday school orchestra will go on the air Saturday, March 23, from 3 to 4 in the afternoon in the Juvenile program of WADC, Akron. A similar announcement was made for them a few weeks ago, but due to a rearrangement of their schedule their date was postponed two weeks. Some of our friends, who happened to tune in on the program, spoke quite complimentary of its rendition. The Sunday school attendance at both Ellet and Rittman is keeping up to a good mark, we are informed. These two churches constitute Brother Sibert's charge.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, gives us another report of home mission offering receipts. It would be well for our readers to survey these reports from time to time to ascertain whether their offerings have been reported. If your church made an offering and it has not been reported, inquire of some one about it. If you failed to make an offering, then of course you cannot get credit for helping in this very vital department of the church's work. Nothing is more important to the extent of the church's service to the Kingdom of God than the building up of the home base.

We have a letter from Dr. Florence N. Gribble this week. She says the Yaloke station still wears its war garb, but there is hope that it will not be long until our workers will have their buildings to themselves, as the soldiers are building quarters for themselves. Our missionaries have been busy preaching to the soldiers when they were unable to go out to preach to the natives. One soldier only was baptized. This fact may not be so surprising when we realize that a war consciousness, which soldiers in active service usually have, is not conducive to spiritual responses. Our missionaries are not so restricted now, and evangelizing trips are beginning to be made. An especially encouraging feature of the situation is the fact that the native evangelists are becoming able to give so good an account of themselves and to take such responsible positions. Brother and Sister Sheldon are on their way home for their first furlough.

Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the church at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, reports an evangelistic campaign recently held in his church with Brother A. T. Ronk as the preacher. Seven were added to the church by baptism, and one by letter, while two await baptism. Brother Ronk's services were highly appreciated, and the splendid attendance during the meetings resulted in advertising the church more widely and in making the things for which it stands more generally known in the community. Brother Benshoff makes mention of his meeting held at the Washington, D. C., church and reported some time ago. He says the foundation has been laid both materially and spiritually under the wise leadership of Brother Kent for a great church in that city, and that the brotherhood ought to see that the building is soon completed in order to take advantage of the opportunities that face our people there. And we might add that this suggestion, which has been urged on previous occasions, is in line with what other denominations are doing. Practically every church group is putting its best foot forward in the Capitol City by the erection of great, elegant church edifices. We would not advocate throwing any money away on extravagances, but it does seem that we ought to make possible the erection at an early date of a church adequate in size and equipment to meet the opportunities of the field and of such character as to command the respect of the people.

The Call of the Unevangelized

I read a most astonishing statement the other day in a secular magazine. It came from far-off New Zealand to a Chicago editor and called the attention of his magazine to the fact that there is yet much human slavery in the world. I can not refrain from quoting. "In Abyssinia, Arabia, Northern Africa and China, there are still over five million actual or virtual slaves—men, women and children who have no family rights: who live in daily dread of what the avarice, lust and brutality of their owners may bring upon them." The editor above referred to calls this a challenge.

The above set me to think about the condition of this old sin cursed world. And there are two aspects to this thinking of mine that I crave the privilege of setting forth in more detail.

The first is that in spite of all the vaporings of worldly-wise men, social reformers, new thought faddists, and all the rest of the motley crowd that has outlived Jesus Christ, SIN IS HERE YET. It was a wiser teacher than these who under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit wrote, "The whole world lieth in evil" (1 John 5:19). Jesus, the world's greatest teacher, said, when speaking of the Communion Cup, "This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many unto remission of sins" (Mt. 26:28). Paul sums up the whole matter in one brief sentence. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Romans 5:12). Nothing is more certain than that the New Testament teaches the universality of sin as well as its ruinous consequences for all humanity. No Bible student will question this statement. A fact just as certainly taught and as surely believed by all who believe the Word is that men in sin, unrepented of and unforgiven, are lost.

It takes but a most superficial view of the conditions and states of men everywhere, in every land, to show us that what Christ and the Apostles called sin is with us yet; that its effects are just as blasting, destructive and damning as ever; that the pain, woe, sorrow, defeats and death entailed by sin are to be found everywhere that man is found. Slavery, injustice, immorality, debauchery and crime make up a terrible and crushing catalog of human ills growing out of sin. FROM THESE THERE IS NO SALVATION EXCEPT AS PROVIDED IN CHRIST.

The second fact which I wish to state briefly is this: Man can not save himself. No educational program however extensive and intense can save a soul from death. It can not even save a soul from its own sins and their consequences. The moron, the uneducated, the uncultured in his sin is wholly lost. He may be repulsive and reprehensible and utterly to be shunned because sin may be a most loathsome thing, especially when it begins to enact its penalties from mind and body. But the superior and highly educated man, when in sin, is just as lost and just as helpless to deliver himself as the moron. In fact, sin in a man otherwise highly gifted and cultured is more reprehensible than in an unfortunate who perhaps never had a fair opportunity. The old Adam nature can not be educated out of sin. It can not be reformed into a Saint, not even into a decently good man.

We have seen the power of the Gospel manifested in the salvation of souls from sin. We have seen how the Gospel brings a message of hope where only despair had reigned. We have seen the best things of this life and the promise of the life to come follow in the train of the Gospel. The world cries out for God and for redemption: for salvation and for peace. MAY THE BRETHREN CHURCH RESPOND TO THE LIMIT OF HER ABILITY IN ANSWERING THE CALL OF THE UNSAVED FOR HELP AND LIFE.

President, J. ALLEN MILLER.

"HE IS RISEN"

That is the assurance for which the world is waiting.

Some Facts We Must Face

Here are some facts that must be faced by every true Christian in the Brethren church, as Easter Sunday draws near:

1. That Jesus Christ commanded the Church to preach the Gospel to all the world, and this command has never been abrogated.
2. That after 1900 years there are more unsaved people in the world than when the command was originally given.
3. That God, in the most unmistakable way, has laid upon the members of the Brethren church the responsibility for two great fields in Africa and South America.
4. That some of the finest young men and women of the Brethren church have offered their lives for this work, and there is no money with which to send them to the field. Life is upon the altar, but where is the money? Must the Brethren church admit that money is harder for to give than life?
5. That the Son of God still watches us as we cast our "gifts into the treasury." He will be watching among the churches on Easter Sunday, watching with those eyes from which no intent and motive is hidden.
6. That if we fail on Easter Sunday we shall be passing a solemn judgment upon ourselves as a church. We shall be admitting that our "candlestick" should be taken away.
7. That the very fact that God has committed so much precious truth to us as a church only makes our responsibility the greater, and will make our possible failure all the more blameable and disastrous to us.

8. That if we merely try to save our own life as a church by the human expedience of holding our money for ourselves, we shall lose it. But if we pour it out for others, we shall save it.

9. That the last word of our Lord was, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rewards are not for churches, but for men and women. Therefore, the responsibility is individual.

10. That in the final great day, we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ, and there each one of us shall give an account of himself to God. The solemn question there will not be, "What did your Church do for Foreign Missions?" but "What did you do?"

ALVA J. McCLAIN,

Secretary Foreign Missionary Society.

Our Easter Offering

Statement by the Treasurer

As we approach the day for our Annual Easter Offering to the Foreign Missionary Work of the Brethren Church, many may be interested in knowing how matters are standing on the books of the Treasurer.

It is interesting to review our offerings for the past four years:

	Receipts	Expenditures
1924-1925 .....	$ 34,568.73	$ 37,433.56
1925-1926 .....	37,402.13	38,803.60
1926-1927 .....	40,257.00	34,889.80
1927-1928 .....	39,493.60	39,868.68
	<hr/> $151,721.46	<hr/> $150,995.64

The above figures do not take into account the funds received as Annuities nor Endowments.

It will be seen that our Receipts for four years have been just $725.82 above our Expenditures. So close are the figures that they are practically the same. We might say, the Lord has provided just in proportion to our faith. "Jehovah-jireh" is his Name!

Now, as to the present year, it is impossible for us to say what the final figures for the fiscal year (ending June 30th) will be. However, our expenditures so far this year are about the same in amount as they were at this date last year. All of which goes to show that if we are to increase our forces on the Fields, there must be a corresponding increase in our Easter Offering. Expenses on the Fields, with such forces as we already have there, are constantly growing heavier. The expense of school and medical work naturally has grown heavier. Additional children do not lighten the financial responsibility. Automobiles, saw-mills, brick-making machines, etc., increase the efficiency of those on the Fields, but add to the financial burdens rapidly and heavily. The cost of missionary autos is causing the Board real concern. They are greatly needed, and are a tremendous help, but to what extent can we afford to use them? It is not their first cost that troubles us,—it is the expensive up-keep. Gasoline and repairs cost money on mission fields. We appreciate the splendid gifts coming to us to provide for the first cost of this much-needed machinery; but, folks, don't forget that "Daddy" of all the "Funds,"—the "GENERAL FUND." We say "Daddy," because he is the fellow who usually has to foot all the bills that everybody else forgets, and do the other absolutely necessary things no one else wants to do. There is nothing very "special" about "Daddy," but, Oh, what would we do without him? Yes, we appreciate these

"special gifts" to "special funds," but, don't forget the most indispensable "Fund" of them all,—the "Fund" on which all the others lean,—the "GENERAL FUND." And, next to that one, the "SOUTH AMERICAN GENERAL FUND," and the "AFRICAN GENERAL FUND."

The expenses for furloughs will now be much heavier than in the past. Also, we have added this year, as all know, three new missionaries to our pay-roll,—Miss Ethel Myers, Miss Grace Byron and Miss Johanna Nielsen. During Miss Nielsen's first term in South America, she supported herself. She has proven herself such a valuable worker that the Board asked, on her return, that she devote all her time to our mission work and be supported by the Board, as are our other missionaries.

Do not forget, also, that we have Brother Floyd Taber, his wife and baby, now in France, facing long years of necessary preparation, for medical work in Africa. It would be suicidal for us to continue our work in French Equatorial Africa and fail to make due provision for the medical care of those we send over. What would happen to us right now, if Dr. Gribble should suddenly be taken from us, as was her husband several years ago? We should have a medical missionary at each Station in Africa. We wish we might find a physician, already educated at his own expense, who, called of God, would be willing to make the necessary sacrifice to go; but none has yet volunteered. Therefore, we are doing the next best thing we can do, and we thank God for Brother Floyd Taber. But his preparation is furnishing the Board with some real problems. Those who desire to make some special gift to the cause for which it seems to the Board to be most greatly needed, will do well to consider the "Taber Personal Fund," out of which must be paid his expenses in France. This Fund is "in the red," (overdrawn), and is greatly in need right now.

We believe that every one within the splendid group of missionaries that represent the Brethren church on foreign fields has been called of God, and this is our confidence, that, if God has called, he will provide. "Jehovah-jireh" is his Name. But, we know, at the same time, that he provides through the loving gifts of those he has redeemed. We are not afraid but that he will speak to their hearts, as they make their contributions on this coming anniversary of his resurrection. If we shall only obey the Voice that speaks, we know that there shall be a sufficiency in the treasury of the Lord for all the work he has called us to do during the coming year.

LOUIS S. BAUMAN, Long Beach, California.

Why Preach Christ in Foreign Lands?

When our church thinks seriously of Foreign Missions only once a year we wonder what can be said that will place the responsibility of meeting the demands of our work squarely upon the shoulders of the membership of the church. We will seek to deal with only three of the many answers which can be given to the above question and try to lay them on your hearts at this Easter time.

I. Christ should be preached in Foreign lands for without him as Savior the inhabitants are lost.

Of late years so much has been said about the love of God and the brotherhood of man and so little has been said about the judgments of God and the punishment of the wicked that men no longer have a feeling of responsibility for those who are lost. This attitude has cradled the consciousness of men to an indifference which makes it no longer possible to distinguish a saint or a sinner, but remember that it was Jesus Christ, God in the Flesh, able to interpret the love of God and also understand the sinfulness of men, who said:

"WOE unto the world!"

"WOE unto you, blind guides!"

"WOE unto you that are rich!"

"WOE unto you that are full!"

"WOE unto you, . . . hypocrits!"

This same Lord from heaven gave us the great commission and commanded us to preach the Gospel to every creature, for without the Christ of the Gospels men are lost. Not many years ago we heard of men "Getting under Conviction," and having no peace until they were right with God. However this term may have been abused there was a time when men had sleepless nights and unhappy days because of the burden of sin and there was no peace until that man would cry out, "What must I do to be saved?" We no longer hear of such situations, not because men have become so highly educated that they no longer permit their emotions to sway them, but men no longer have a burning conviction that they are sinners and are lost. O what a change! Some of the most hardened sinners will listen to the most eloquent, stirring sermons and go home to bed and be asleep almost as soon as the head touches the pillow; in fact some who are lost are so unconcerned that they will go to sleep under the voice of the preacher while being warned of death and judgment to come. At one time men came to confess Christ as Lord with tears streaming down their faces so penitent were they because of their sin, but now men make application for membership in the church in such a careless and independent manner that they appear to be doing God a favor, and one would think that they were paying him a compliment. Why such a change? It is because men are no longer taught form the Word of God that they are lost. Men no longer believe that they are sinners. They hope that there is some other way out. Read Ephesians 2:11-13. The nations of the world need the Gospel, for without Jesus Christ they are Lost! Lost! Lost!

II. Christ Should be Preached in Foreign Lands Because He Gave Himself for Them.

John 3:16—"God so loved the world that he gave his Son."

John 15:13—"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Romans 5:8—"While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

Galatians 2:20—"Who loved me and gave himself for me."

That was a heroic deed when that young, bright and successful medical missionary refused to leave the plague ridden district in China. His friends begged him to come out—his superiors ordered him out—the officials commanded him to come out, but he stayed; helping, ministering, nursing until death claimed him; yes that man was a hero. We bare our heads to a man like that. And yet at the very best he gave but a few years of life, for death would soon have claimed him though he had lived to be an old man. But Christ who was not subject to death; Christ in whom there was no sin to be worthy of death; Christ who was from everlasting and is unto everlasting Christ came to earth purposely to die because he loved us and wanted to give himself for us. What love! O what love! and John three sixteen includes the nations now sitting in darkness and Christ should be preached to them because he gave himself for them.

III. Christ Should be Preached in Foreign Lands Because He Gave Them the Right to Become Sons of God.

John 1:12—"But as many as received him, to them gave he the power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." How dare we claim this right for ourselves and withhold it from those who are also entitled to it?

On a certain street in Los Angeles there was a mother who was like the old woman who lived in the shoe, she had so many children she did not know what to do. Her husband had left her and while she worked to support the family the children ran the streets, dirty, ragged and hungry. A Christian man and wife, without children, took little Marie into their own home. They adopted her, gave her warm clothes, good food, regular meals and sent her to school and church. They read the Bible to her and taught her how to pray and she was a happy little girl indeed. One day she was a little cross and her adopted father told her to be good or they might take her back where she was hungry and cold and without good clothes. Fear came into her eyes and the pain in her face told that she knew what that meant. She dropped her head for an instant and then looked up with a smile and said, "You can't do that. You cannot take me back. I'm your girl, I've got your name."

Adam was created by God but in the hour of testing he fell. "But the natural man (The Fallen Man) receiveth not the things of the spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned,"—but accepting Jesus Christ by faith we become Sons of God, a nearer, higher more glorious relation that Adam ever thought of enjoying before the fall. Read Romans 8:14-17 and say if we dare deny this inheritance to those who have not heard about it?

The Danish missionaries were in India translating the Scriptures with the help of the native believers. When they came to the words, "Become the Sons of God," it was very difficult to make the natives understand the possibilities involved. After long explanation they realized something of the meaning of the words and the missionaries insisted that they give them words to express the thought in the translation, but the natives exclaimed, "It is too much—make it read—We shall be permitted to kiss his feet."

For these three reasons, if for no others, we are under obligations to preach the Gospel in our fields in Africa and South America, that in these far places in the earth men may know of Jesus Christ and be saved.

A. V. KIMMELL.

The Average Church

Some months ago an article appeared in a prominent secular magazine concerning the "average man." He has been discussed for years, but at last he has been found.

This Average Man

is said to live in the center of the United States, in the center of the State of Iowa and is supposed to be the central figure in his town. He is of average height, average weight, average intelligence, and average education. He also has one wife, the average sized family, drives the average size car, goes to bed and rises at average hours. Now this story may not interest us much until it comes to the fact so flippantly referred to in the magazine article that

He Belongs to a Church but Seldom Goes.

If this is the opinion of a secular magazine about the average man, what would be said about the "average church member?" If observation is at all reliable, our "Pews are Filled with People who are Absent."

But some reader is saying, "That is not the case in our church. Our members attend well. We like the preacher and he likes us. He preaches fine sermons and has a high standing in the community. We pay his salary and besides all the auxiliaries of the church are in fine condition."

But let every reader turn his eyes from this church to the field. If we take God's Word as final,

The Field is the World.

It is time to make an impression on the world. According to our present denominational program of evangelism, every Brethren church from the Atlantic to the Pacific is responsible for the salvation of lost souls

In Africa and South America.

The average church needs to consider this mighty truth and learn this practical lesson, and the Christian who has not yet learned it will remain "average" until he does.

The average church member with little or much of this world's goods is interested in some sort of an #### Investment.

Why not consider the investment which the spreading of the Gospel affords? Get the record of the money paid out in support of our work in Africa and South America. Get the number of souls saved, and then do a little figuring. See the cost of winning a soul in foreign fields as compared with the cost in the United States. You will be

Astonished at the Figures.

The writer knows men in the Brethren church who have multiplied their gifts to Foreign Missions, by two, by five and by ten because they saw the opportunity for an investment for eternity.

Remember, dear brethren, that your dollars will now make it possible for more sinners to hear the Gospel. You may walk the streets of the New Jerusalem some day with the man whose soul your money made it possible to save. We have the message of salvation. We have the candidates for the field,

But there is not the Money to Them.

One of the depressing experiences of the Foreign Mission Board is to see missionary candidates, consecrated to God, ready to go to the Foreign field, anxious to go, and be compelled to place them on the waiting list because there are no funds available.

The average church member who spends God's money on himself and satisfies his carnal desires in this life and allows souls to perish in Africa, will have a tremendous matter for which to answer in the day of judgment.

If we could just hear the unsaved plead (and they do this thing) for more preachers to come and tell them of the good news of salvation, if we could see the miracles of God's Grace that transpire in our mission fields,

It Would Revolutionize our Churches at Home

as well as give unspeakable impetus to the evangelization of the foreign fields.

"God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself," (but the poor lost souls don't know that) but the Word continues, "and hath committed unto us the Word of reconciliation." Certainly, "He that winneth souls, (no matter where) is wise."

If we take what belongs to another, that is stealing. But if we deliberately keep what God has told us to give away, what is that? The church is guilty when it is negligent of Foreign Missions.

The "average" church must remember that to keep the Gospel at home is to lose the Gospel, for Gospel ceases to be Gospel when it fails to reach the whole world.

If You Have Tried Everything Else

to give your church more life, try missionary propaganda. Write to a particular missionary. Ask about his own experiences. Make his burdens your prayer. Make his victories your cause of rejoicing. Learn the needs.

Find some personal way to help. Tell others. Just get genuinely interested in the salvation of souls in the foreign fields, and the Lord will lead you to opportunities and joys of which you never dreamed.

If an Average Member of an Average Church

reads this, let him determine now to leave the average and go above it. Leave the ordinary and strike for the extraordinary. Put yourself and your church where God can use both in sending his Gospel to the "utmost part of the earth."

What Is Your Grade?

This is a great day of testing in the schools. Our students all have a general intellectual rating and then also a special grade in the subject studied. What would happen if we could be graded spiritually? How many of us would be C, D, E or F? F means failure. Alas! How many failures in Christianity!

Have we lost sight of the standards set many hundreds of years ago?

Fundamentally Christianity is a religion of sacrifice. We are to "Present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God" and which is according to the Word, "our reasonable service." Have we caught sight of this note of consecration? Consecration and sacrifice are very closely related words. Our Christianity demands of us nothing less than complete dedication of our lives and of our all. Otherwise it isn't Christianity but a counterfeit, or a sham.

Let's grade ourselves this year and remember that an outstanding question in the test is: "Do you believe in, pray for, and give substantially to missions?" If your answer to the above is "YES," then you are well on the way to a high grade. Should your answer be "NO," then I fear that you belong to the moron, or it may even be the imbecile class, religiously speaking.

Unquestionably we as Christians are able to adequately finance the Kingdom of God. Statistics will abundantly prove this. May God so direct our meditation, thinking and self-examination that we may attain an "A" rating academically speaking.

Give not as the squeaky old windmills that fuss and complain and then pump only a scant and intermittent stream of water. Give like the beautiful mountain spring which quietly and with no fuss at all, just overflows. It is the overflow that counts. "God loveth a cheerful giver."

A. L. DELOZIER.

The Needs of the Mission Field

A Challenge to GO or GIVE

"We have each to determine," says Dr. Grenfell of Labrador, "whether this world is an arena where we fight to get all we can for ourselves, or a field of honor where we give all we can for our fellowmen." To those who have decided on the field of honor, there is the challenge of South America and Africa.

Many have made the gift of life. Many others will give the best they have, and that is life. Missionaries are not limited to preachers. Teachers, doctors, nurses are some of the needs. As young people what have we to give? Making it very personal, what will I give to him who said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." How can he be lifted up unless we go to the places where he is not known and lift him up. We must GO and DO the lifting." He will not lift himself. Ours is the first part. If we do not go and lift him up in Argentina, South America and in the Oubangui-Chari district in Africa, he will not be lifted up. If he is not lifted up he will not draw men to himself. Who, then, is responsible for the lifting? It is up to us to GO and DO the lifting. He will do the drawing.

Perhaps it is your part to Pray and lift. There can be no reason why any of us should not pray. Jesus said, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest." All missionaries ask more for prayers than for anything else. Prayer moves, God, men and things. Great and mighty works are accomplished through prayer. This is one challenge which all can meet. Pray and lift.

Then all can give money and lift. "God so loved that he gave his Son," his all; we must so love that we will give our all. The call has come for gifts of money and on Easter Sunday is our opportunity to answer the call. Give, give, give and lift up the Christ. Missionaries cannot lift up the Christ unless they are sent. Some of us do the sending by giving of our money, thus doing our part of the lifting by giving. The more give the more we lift. If the Christ, our blessed Master, were here and said to each one: "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me, and you are to do the lifting," would you be willing to lift with a dollar, or five, or ten, or fifty, or a hundred, or more? The challenge has come to each one.

Give, and so lift all you possibly can, and then give some more.

Why not make this the finest and largest offering of lives and money the Brethren church has ever given, so there will be no retrenchments by the Foreign Board, but a much larger going forward program. This can only be made possible by increasing our gifts of lives and money.

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." PRAY—GIVE—LIFT.

U. J. SHIVELY, Nappanee, Indiana.

"She Hath Done What She Could"

It isn't always necessary to wait until we are dead to have these words said about us. In fact, if they can be truthfully said when we are dead, it will be because they have been true about every call that has come to us in life.

Only once a year does the call come to us for financial aid to all the vast unevangelized world. We may count our blessings many times each day, but only once each year does the call come to us from our National Foreign Board to share of our material benefits with those who have been neglected throughout all these centuries. Neglected because men and women from the very first have not taken seriously the command of our Leader to "go into all the world."

We have been willing to work where the task is easy; to reap where others have sown; to lavish money on a more elaborate and comfortable place wherein to worship—but when the missionaries have asked for just a roof to protect them from the scorching tropical sun as they preached in the distant villages, we have just been content to do nothing, or nearly so.

Then, too, there is the vast territory in South America where the call comes for the establishment of new points, but the high rents make such work almost impossible. Therefore, we see the great need of building churches and equipping them for the service they can render.

As we approach this Easter Season may we do it on our knees. May we forget self for one brief month and put our whole mind on the folks who have been so unfortunate as to be born in unchristian lands. May we not wait for death to bring us the commendation, "She hath

MY LORD AND MASTER (Continued)

MONDAY, March 25—"For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself" (Mark 4:28.) Read Mark 11:12-26. Jesus has a great deal to say about fruit bearing. He expects results. The story of the barren fig tree illustrates the stern demand. So I ask myself if I am a profitable servant. But how shall I tell? The product of a useful life is slow in appearing, and very shy of showing itself at all. I observe, too, that people intent on doing good to others often make themselves objectionable, and defeat their own ends. I will not torment my soul over this thing. Of course I must be faithful and diligent; but I need not be obtrusive or impatient. A good life, filled with unselfish service will not be in vain. Results may safely be left with God.

TUESDAY, March 26—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Mark 12:31.) Read Mark 12:28-44. Self-love is assumed. It is made the norm by which is measured and tested all my human relations. Of course I love myself. To hate one's self would be the sign of a diseased mind. Do I love my neighbor equally? That is not inevitable, nor is it easy. But it is necessary if I would meet the standard my Lord has set, if I would find joy and peace, and if I would find the satisfaction of being useful.

WEDNESDAY, March 27—"I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now" (John 16:12.) Read John 16:12-24. This day in our Lord's last week was a day of silence. It may have been passed in seclusion with his disciples, or in the home at Bethany. He was serene and untroubled. He had many things to say yet, but he could not say everything now; it was not necessary. The future would still have access to divine guidance. And they who come after have ever the possibility of a larger, richer grasp of divine truth than we possess.

THURSDAY, March 28—"This do in remembrance of me" (Luke 22:19.) Read Luke 22:1-20. The scene of the Upper Room is the despair of art, and very properly Leonardo de Vinci's great painting is fading on the wall at Milan. The theologian and even the poet fail to express what the Last Supper means to me. So a ceremony with words of instruction speak to me in the primitive speech of the heart, and I enter the mystery and glory of the life as it is hid with Christ in God.

FRIDAY, March 29—"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me" (Mark 8:34.) Read Mark 15:15-37. It was with a true appreciation of its significance that the church made the cross the symbol of the Christian religion. In a comprehensive and eloquent gesture it both tells a story and announces a program. On this Good Friday I must humble my soul with the thought of the price of its redemption, and challenge it anew to a life of heroic, unselfish, sacrificial service.

SATURDAY, March 30—"For we are saved by hope" (Rom. 8:24.) Read Psalm 42. Another silent day in Passion Week. It was the pause between the cross and resurrection. The church early named it the Day of Darkness. For we remember the disciples were without expectation that day. Many of us have had such dreadful pauses, when despair set heavily on our hearts. There are those who live and suffer in this gloom, without God and without hope in the world. Alas for them! We can endure anything if only we have hope.

EASTER SUNDAY—"But I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (1 Thess. 4:13.) Read Luke 24:13-35. This is my day of comforting. It is not a day to be interested in my neighbors' new clothes, but to think of those who are in white raiment. And comforts are not shouted; they whisper low, in a still small voice. I want to hear them today telling me of those whom I have "loved long since and lost awhile." They will not return to me, but I will go to them. This is the assurance of this day.

done what she could," but may that be a true epitaph written on every envelope that is placed in the Easter offering this year.

The Missionary Urge

Another year has rolled around and again comes our opportunity to give of our substance toward the furtherance of our Foreign Mission work. Many of us just give to foreign missions at Easter time. Some of us give then and sometimes between. I hesitate to say that some of us do not help in this great work at all, but I fear that is the case.

All through the Scripture, and especially the New Testament, we are confronted with foreign mission work. Did you know that "Every book in the New Testament was written by a foreign missionary?" that the "one book of prophecy in the New Testament was written to seven foreign missionary churches; that "the disciples were called Christians first in a foreign mission community; that "of the twelve apostles chosen by Jesus, every apostle except one became a missionary;" that "according to the apostles, the missionary is the highest expression of Christian life?"

With these few statements and the great call from the mission fields today, what will we do? Many more workers are needed in the African field. Money is needed to send workers who have already volunteered to go to this needy field. While we have a plenty and to spare for ourselves, can we not give liberally to help Christian-ize the natives of Africa? The need is apparent and the results of the work depend on each of us.

Perhaps your sympathy is not for the African field but for the work in South America. If this is the case, the need for funds there is great, too. In an article in one of the late editions of the Evangelist it was told concerning students who want to take Seminary work but have not the funds to do so. What greater work could be done than to help one of these young people to get their training to teach the Gospel of Christ? Then we have heard for several years of the great good that comes from the distribution of tracts there. A church was built because of a tract that was handed to a certain person in one city. Money is needed to buy these tracts and to keep the Bible coach going if our work is to increase there as we want it to.

With all these needs and many more of which we hear from time to time through the church publications and the different missionaries which are home on furlough, do we not feel the urge to give a part of the money with which the Lord has blessed us in the past year? I am hoping and praying that the offering this year will be a BANNER OFFERING.

"Give as you would if an angel
Awaited your gift at the door.
Give as you would if tomorrow
Found you where giving is o'er.
Give as you would to the Master,
If you met his loving look.
Give as you would of your substance,
If his hand the offering took."

The Teacher the Keystone of the Sunday School Arch

By Cheesman A. Herrick, Ph.D., President of Girard College

The arch is the oldest, the strongest, and the most beautiful construction known to masonry. Other styles of building have been tried, but no other form has given the durability or the usefulness of the arch. That the arch is so satisfactory is due to the cooperation of the different parts. Its foundation is laid deep, it is built from the bottom up, and stands part upon part until at last at the very top there is left a narrow, wedge-shaped opening into which is fitted the keystone, serving as a "lock to the arch." The arch is of no value until the keystone is in place. This stone supports weight, distributing pressure placed upon it through the other stones, and resting all upon the foundation which is underneath. Is not the arch a remarkable illustration of cooperation in the accomplishment of a given result?

The Sunday school has many agencies co-operating. First, there must be the preparation and publication of working material in the form of lesson texts and lesson helps; then there must be the officering and management of the school, such as work at the desk, music, and the services of a secretary and a treasurer. Outside of these are various voluntary organizations such as international, state, and local associations. Thus a great number of persons are putting their effort into the school. But the person who serves as the keystone of the arch, and without whom all the other factors would be of no consequence, is the teacher. We have all known instances where excellent Sunday school buildings, good organization, the best of lesson helps and working material all failed to accomplish any desirable result on the lives of those taught because of the failure of the teacher. On the other hand, we recall instances where a poor building, unsatisfactory lesson helps, and a crude organization, supplemented by a skillful teacher, have wrought a marvelous result. Every other force may fail because of the failure of the teacher, and every other influence may be unfavorable, and yet the teacher accomplish the desired result.

Marion Lawrance says that next to the minister of the gospel, the Sunday school teacher occupies the highest office in Christian service, and may it not be that in many cases the Sunday school teacher occupies a more determining place on the life of the child than even the minister of the gospel himself? Have we not failed to estimate at its true worth the importance of the Sunday school teacher?

There are some common delusions on Sunday school teaching, the first of which is that Sunday school teachers are "born and not made." That was a very old misconception in secular education, but in secular education we have largely disregarded it. In most of the callings requiring skill there is the insistence on training and practice. We are no longer willing to allow untrained doctors to treat our bodies, or untrained dentists to care for our teeth. We are not even ready to let an untrained veterinarian render service to dumb brutes. On every hand there is the insistence that training shall precede performance. Is not the general experience such as to convince us that training is desirable for the Sunday school teacher?

The second common delusion is that good intentions on the part of the Sunday school teacher are all that is required. But as Dr. Brumbaugh puts it, "Mere goodness is not enough." People who are genuinely and instinctively good may be without the life experience, the knowledge, or the skill, to apply goodness to the minds of those being taught.

Nor is telling teaching. A teacher sometimes goes over the lesson of the day, telling his or her own language the thing that is in the Bible. This is pouring out without any certainty that the thing which has been poured out will find lodgment in the mind of the pupil.

In the next place, drilling is not teaching. Much drilling may be merely going through motions, answering stock questions, and may fail completely in accomplishing the great end of teaching, which is the implanting of truth in the minds of the taught. The use of stock questions which are prepared for lesson helps and the drilling on these often fail to get anywhere as a teaching process. Dr. H. Clay Trumbull once told an interesting incident in the matter of the failure of drilling rather than teaching. A teacher drilled a class of half-grown boys on a set of fundamental questions. The first boy was asked to tell who made him, and was to say, "God." The second boy was to answer why God made him, and was to answer, "To glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever." As the teacher went down the class one after another was taught a fixed answer to a specific question. Soon the teacher tried to get from the class the results of this drilling process. He asked the boy at the head of the line who made him, and the answer came "To glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever." He asked again, but with the same result. When there was a troubled expression on the face of the teacher a boy who was lower down in the line raised his hand and offered an explanation stating that the boy whom God made had just gone out. Much teaching is as pointless and fails as completely of accomplishing a result as was true in this case. Drilling is not teaching!

What Our Missionary Superintendents Can Do for Our Easter Offering

First: You can see that the children of the Bible school learn about our work in South America and in Africa. The Brethren Evangelist and the Brethren Missionary furnish abundant material for the Departmental superintendents and their teachers. You should see that they are alive to this opportunity and obligation. They may not be of their own accord. Many are not.

Second: You can see that the children do have the missionary truths and verses of the Bible taught to them that they may have truthful and intelligent motives for giving.

Third: You can see that the children of your school each have an envelope in which to place their individual offering at Easter time for the support of our Foreign Missions.

Teach a child to give when but a child and it will not be so difficult for him to give when he is older. Our children should be intelligently moved to give response to the call early in life.

Missionary Superintendent, National Sunday School Association.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for March 31)

XIII. The Future Life

(Easter Lesson)

Scripture Lesson—Matthew 25:31-46; Mark 12:26, 27; Luke 24:1-12; John 14:1-6; 1 Corinthians 15:3-20, 50-58; 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18; Revelation 22:1-5.

Printed Text—Luke 24:1-2; John 14:1-6.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 23:1-6.

Golden Text—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. Rev. 2:10.

Introduction

No fact in history is so well authenticated as the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Strauss the great German rationalist says, "There is more historic evidence of the resurrection of Jesus Christ than of the life and death of Julius Caesar." Some of the many proofs of the resurrection are given in the Scripture passages assigned under the heading of our lesson today. Note specially the text in Mk. 12:26, 27, and its parallel in Lu. 20:37, 38, upon which Dr. Seiss comments so ably:—"He (the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob) is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him." We are here assured that the righteous although they "sleep in Jesus," 1 Th. 4:14, as regards the body, and are "absent from the body," 2 Cor. 5:8, as regards the soul, they are still "Alive unto God." This the Savior quotes from the Old Testament, where "even Moses showed at the bush (Ex. 3:6) when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him." God cannot be called the God of beings who no longer exist, or the continuity of whose existence has been interrupted by a blank. Whatever else he may be, it is no property of his to be a God of nonentities."—The Apocalypse.

The Empty Tomb

Lu. 24:1-12. It is clearly testified by the gospels that Jesus expected and predicted that he would rise from the dead. The correctness of the records in this respect is confirmed by the testimony as to his teaching concerning the resurrection of the righteous in general, Mk. 12:24-27, and his whole doctrine of "the fatherhood of God. It is impossible that the Son of God, the object, the preeminent object of God's approving love, should perish, Ac. 2:24-28. Believing that no one who is in loving fellowship with God can perish, Christ could not but apply this reasoning to himself,—that though he was to die on the cross yet such death could not interrupt his life with and unto God. The Evangelists predicted that he would rise after three days, though this phrase meant to him simply in a short time. Hos. 6:2.—Sharman.

The Resurrection and Redemption

Some one has inquired what is the import and importance of the resurrection of Jesus for the redemption of the world. In reply, we quote the following from the Illustrated Quarterly:

It proves that we have a living Savior, sitting on the right hand of God (Rom. 8:34; Col. 3:1), seated with the Father in his throne (Rev. 3:21-22:1). We have a picture of his glory in Heb. 1:2-4, and in Rev. 1:10-18. We do not, as has been falsely charged, worship a dead Christ, but a living Christ. Having shown his power to conquer Death, the great enemy, we know he has power to conquer all our enemies. He is the great, living Leader, Inspirer and Protector of his people, who will make his kingdom to triumph over all evil. "The whole alphabet of human hope" is in the resurrection of Jesus. It is the citadel of the Christian faith.

It fulfils the prophecies Jesus made in regard to himself, and thus proves him to be a true prophet.

It is the crowning proof that Jesus is the Son of God, and that by the incarnation he was the messenger of God to man. If he could not conquer death, and come back from heaven, he could not prove that at the first he came from heaven. Canon Liddon says, "The resurrection of Christ is the certificate of our Lord's mission from heaven, to which he himself pointed as a warrant of his claims."

It is the assurance of that wondrous power which has wrought such marvelous works for the redemption of the world.

We have a living, personal Leader and Captain of salvation, whom we can love and serve and follow as our Ideal.

Thus we can realize why Paul lays such emphasis on the resurrection.

Thus, too, the resurrection gives largeness and broadness to life, everything we are and do having an influence and a meaning beyond the grave. We can look forward with the assurance of faith to the great triumph, when death and sin will be swallowed up in the victory which Christ will achieve; nay, has already achieved for all believers. In that faith we can work patiently here on earth, knowing that our labor is not vain, that no portion of it will perish, but all of it will be gathered up into the spirit world, and its results incorporated in our glad, eternal existence. "Thanks be to God, through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

The Golden Text Illustrated

Years ago an aged man sat on the banks of the Hereford River in England, leaning on the top of his staff, while his eyes seemed intently fixed on the gliding stream. I sat beside him, yet he was so absorbed in thought that he did not move. Speaking loudly, I said, "Old man, you and I must cross the river" (meaning the river of death.) This aroused him, and looking at me with a start, he exclaimed, "And what can a man do if he cannot swim?" "He must sink," was the reply. He heaved a sigh. Then preaching Jesus, I showed him God's way of saving perishing sinners, but without any apparent effect, for he waned to swim across the river of death in his own righteousness. I left him shortly afterwards, and when I had crossed over the bridge towards the town, I waited for the old man, who was slowly coming that way. "Now," said I, "old man, you have crossed the river; how did you get over safely?" He pointed to the bridge, and taking this illustration, I preached Jesus, whose blood had washed our sins down the tide of death and himself as the bridge or Mediator between God and men. The poor man's eyes opened; he no more tried to swim in his own strength or righteousness. He believed in Jesus, and went on his way rejoicing, and exclaiming, "I see it! I see it! I see it!"—Illustrator.

Patience means the readiness to wait God's time without doubting God's truth.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

all my preachings in preparing subject matter of sermons and selecting illustrations. It is this,—To say nothing and to use no language which the Holy Spirit could not own. When a minister speaks as the very mouthpiece of God his very tones and words should be chaste, serious, worthy of the Lord. Can the Holy Spirit own the message you are about to deliver? That question must determine what you should and what you should not say.

Testimonies from Krypton Continued

(Last Week we published the first part of the program and testimonies given at a special Christian Endeavor service at Krypton, Kentucky. Brother Fred V. Kinzie, the pastor, sent us this report with the statement that he had "copied these amateur efforts with practically no alterations, so that some of them may be a trifle crude." But they show a remarkable spirit of earnestness and candor, and their publication will give the Endeavorers a better idea of quality of the fruit being born by their missionary efforts at Krypton.—Editor.)

How We Can Help Other Nations to Become Christian Nations

Cecil Campbell

The first way we can help is to become Christian. Then we should give ourselves to God, so he can send us where he needs us the most. If we have not the health and energy we will have to trust in the Lord for them. He is the only one who can give them to us. We sometimes say, "I can't go and be a missionary." But watch out! The Bible says, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phillip. 4:13). Without God we can do nothing.

We boys and girls of America have a better chance than the poor little Chinese boys and girls. We have schools and churches, and have more about God than they do. For the people in China have but few schools, and most of their churches have been established by a few American and English missionaries who have gone there. We boys and girls of America ought to grow up and be children of God and go into foreign countries to teach the poor boys and girls of other nations more about Jesus. We should teach them God's love for people and tell them that Christians can have a better time than people of the world. Oh, how I would like to teach those little Chinese boys and girls about God! Although a Christian has many trials and temptations, a Christian life is the happiest life I have found. By the strength of God we are able to throw off all things which come upon us to trouble us. We Christian people of America, I hope, will see the need of other nations. We have the Bible before us while they have not, unless we send it to them.

Testimony by Irvine Campbell

My testimony is not very much, but what few words I have to say will help to prove to you how great God is. Just before I accepted him as my Savior Mr. Humbert was holding revival services. One night I said to myself, "I will join the church tonight." But when Brother Humbert called for confessions it seemed like in one of my ears a voice would say, "Go," and in the other ear a voice would say, "Stay." So I let Satan overcome me that night, but my mind was on joining the church all the time. The next night it was the same way; still I would not let Satan handle me that night. I joined the church, and since then

I have lived a happier life than ever before.

A while after that I thought everybody had gone down on me, and I thought that I would have to quit school at the end of the month. So the time drew near, and on the Friday I was to quit a close friend of mind said, "Irvin, you will not have to quit school, for I have the money and you shall have enough to go to school." I found out that everybody had not forsaken me. Now, I am sure, by God's help I was able to come back to school Monday.

Testimony by Mrs. Mae Kinzie

"Only a sinner, saved by grace." I am so happy to know I am saved, and then it gives me more happiness to be used of the Lord in saving others. It's impossible for unsaved people to know real joy and peace. This doesn't mean that we always have a flowery pathway and a jovial, easy, prosperous life. It might mean quite the reverse, but whatever it is we can still be happy,—happy to help bear the burden and heat of the day. "Happy in the service of the King."

Testimony by Charles McIntosh

I used to be a drunkard, and I always believed in being with the bad crowd, which would drink, carry guns, and seek to get in something mean and hateful. It was more embarrassing to be caught with a Testament than with a bottle of liquor, or a gun. I would steal my father's pistol, and go sometimes for two or three miles to get a drink of liquor, carrying the gun for what I called protection. Now I thank God that I was never forced to use it. I can only imagine now that if I would be out with a gun I would not only be afraid of the law but of Christ my Savior.

I also thought that I was having a good time, but since I have joined the Brethren church and also become a member of the Christian Endeavor I can see that what I called "fun" then was nothing compared to the joys of the Christian life, and being amongst Christian people.

I would go to dances where perhaps there would not be a Christian, and generally it would end with a fight or some of us would have to be carried to a bed on account of drunkenness." Then the next day one would feel so bad that he would have to remain in bed. But now, instead of going to frolics, I go to C. E. socials, which begin with prayer and close likewise. I go to bed feeling happy and the next morning the same.

Youth's Opportunity in America

By Alma Hall

We, the young people of America, do not realize the wonderful opportunities which lie before us.

We have so many opportunities in life—Education. Anyone can get an education if they really want it. We can do anything we choose along the vocational lines. You may be a doctor, lawyer, or even the President of the United States if you climb high enough.

Then, too, there are churches built all through this land of ours, making it so we can hear of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We also have the opportunity of worshipping our Lord in any way we choose. How proud we ought to be that our country has been called the land of religious freedom and upon that it was founded. We have had the opportunity of going and telling the Gospel to others who know it not. In that way we have a chance of working for our Lord, which is greatest of all. Let us each ask ourselves, Are we day by day grasping the opportunities that come to us? Are we preparing for the opportunities that will be ours some day?

I found a little pamphlet advertising a school in Kentucky. On the pamphlet were these words, "Opportunity for youth." What is it for? It is for youth. The world's future is resting on the shoulders of the young people of today. What is the future going to be? Are we going to be shining lights to show people the way? Are we going to show the world we made use of the opportunities that were given us?

Testimony of Fred V. Kinzie

That God has led me through a maze of difficulties and problems there is no question, and for all his goodness I can never thank him sufficiently. All that I am and all that I ever expect to be I owe to the providence of a loving, patient Heavenly Father. May his name be praised throughout the ages!

African War Situation Clearing Up

Yaloke par Boali, par Bangui.
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
January 13, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

I believe I have missed a month in writing to you. At least I am sure I have not written this year!

Yaloke station still wears its war garb. French officers still occupy our new unfinished brick house which has been the case for almost three months now. Constantly they come and go—Captain Pouffoulon, who on October 24th established the occupation here, has not since revisited us, but his arrival is expected soon. Following him Lieutenant Boutin arrived from Iremou accompanied by Sergeants De Meritans and Jamet. These three officers are the ones who were so kind to me during the days of my detention at Iremou. They preceded me here by a matter of six days, after which Sergeant de Meritans kindly returned to Iremon for me and escorted me here. Shortly after Monsieur Pordie arrived with Sergeant Sanducci. During their stay Monsieur Bouquet, our new commandant at Boali, arrived, shortly after which Monsieur Boutin and his aides departed. The next arrival was Monsieur Canty, who after the departure of others remained for considerable time in charge here. A few days ago he was replaced by Monsieur Chacassat. Other officers who have spent a few brief days with us have been Monsieur Dessert and Monsieur Wondy.

At the time of the arrival of the present incumbent and the departure of his predecessor, Mrs. Foster was just giving them a dinner, when who should arrive, fortunately (for him) just in time but a Belgian mining official, prospecting for gold. After dinner he and Monsieur Canty departed together. Meanwhile the station was honored with a brief visit from the Governor of Oubangui-Chari and his "Chef de Cabinet." So much for the officers. Meanwhile the soldiers' camp encircled the three residences, the brick house of the officers and the two mud-houses of the missionaries.

During a recent attack of malignant tertian fever complicated with sun, it was necessary to ask to have the soldiers' houses which practically came in contact with our veranda removed, on account of the noise and smoke. So now we are protected only by a semi-circle of soldiers' huts. They, too, like the officers, come and go. They belong to various tribes, but mostly to the Saras. Daily we preach to them meanwhile inviting them to the daily services in the church. So far one soldier only has been baptized. Among them a number have received and read the word, and many others have no doubt heard unto life everlasting. We are trusting that the Word which has been placed in the hands of the officers may also bear fruit.

Our building unfortunately has been at a standstill. Of course the brick house cannot be finished owing to its premature occupation, and owing to the lack of workmen due to war conditions, but little other progressive work can be attempted. However a small force of native Christian workmen still reside on the station, and are fortunately sufficient to care for orchards, gardens, necessary repairs, cattle, etc. Mr. Foster, now that the people are beginning to return to their villages has placed an application for permission to draw on them for workmen. Meanwhile Monsieur Chacassat is constructing a house for military occupation on the opposite hill, to which when completed he will remove, taking the soldiers and their retinues with them. The soldiers here at present do not have their wives with them, but alas they have women. They also have their boys and other hangers-on, and from time to time large caravans of military porters are for several days upon the station. We see that no one comes and goes without a knowledge of the saving blood of Jesus Christ.

For a long time it was the most that could be done. Now however that the people are returning to their villages the missionaries have recommenced village evangelization, at least in the nearby villages. The evangelists also are once more upon the path as of yore. Converts are awaiting baptism in various villages, especially along the Iremon road. Mr. Foster hopes to be able soon to go to baptize them. Mr. Foster will of course accompany them. Both automobiles having been for some months out of repair, we are hoping and praying that the long-ordered necessary parts may soon arrive in order that it may not be necessary (as war conditions make traveling possible, to go by tepoi or "push."

Serious illnesses have occurred within the past two months on all the stations. Mr. Sheldon having had fever at Bellevue and Miss Myers having been ill at Bassai.

But few wounded soldiers, and none of the rebel wounded, have been brought to us for treatment. Two of these had arrow wounds which are frequently fatal, as the arrows are often poisoned. One soldier was sent to us with a serious abdominal wound. We operated at once, but he died the next day of internal hemorrhage, having accepted the Lord. Only one soldier has followed the Lord in baptism—Greyboubon. He made a deep and sincere confession. He has been sent elsewhere, but fortunately not without the Word which he can read. Three others were under deep conviction but decided they could not give up drink. We had a most unique and impressive funeral service following the death above mentioned. Five French officers were on the platform. All the soldiers present were in attendance. Let us hope that the preached Word, both in French and in Sango will indeed bear fruit unto everlasting life.

The school continues, with a depleted number of pupils, about thirty-five being enrolled. Miss Emmert resumed school on December 31st. As we are now having cold bleak January winds, the forenoons are rather trying. The afternoons, however, are always warm, sometimes hot.

Mail comes more infrequently than ever since the war. The last interval without letters was thirty-two days. We have now been 25 days without mail. In the meantime, so the officers tell us, two French boats have arrived at Bangui. We feel quite cut off from our loved ones as the days go by and "hope deferred maketh the heart sick." We have however quite good facilities for the sending of mail.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon and Kenneth have not yet left the field, as Mr. Sheldon has been feeling chilly and has dreaded to arrive home in the winter. Miss Myers is translating Mark in Karre with the aid of the evangelist Jean (Noatemo). Joseph Nguede is translating John from French to Banou. He will need aid in revision.

The Karre tribe is being wonderfully blessed with a revival. Villages are building their own chapels. Evangelists are going forth from Bassai to live in the villages. Mr. Jobson is building new dormitories for the school boys. Mrs. Jobson is teaching the newly enrolled divisions of forty boys.

Our social life as missionaries at Yakolke is vastly different from what it was before the war. All our gatherings are French now, at least as far as conversation is concerned, on account of the presence of French officers. Thanksgiving was a very quiet day. As we do not observe strictly American holidays here, even school was in session.

Miss Emmert whose birthday is December 4, and I celebrated on December 3rd. Several French officers were present and the festivities were naturally of a different nature from usual. For instance there were no speeches! Mrs. Foster entertained for Christmas dinner, and we for New Years. French officers were of course present on both occasions. New Years' evening was devoted to the boys in our service. Trifling gifts were given them, and special games played with them. The church decided to give their Christmas White Gift Offering this year to South America.

We believe a new era is dawning in our evangelistic work, with the voluntary going forth of the Karre evangelists. Yolo, one of our own evangelists, is soon to go to Bozoum to take charge of the chapel there, he being a Baya. Jodiwan will continue his evangelistic work. He is now a widower, and seems happiest when on the road. We are praying that God will in his own time and way give him another companion. Yuma and Voloungou continue faithful and are daily in prayer for the Holy Spirit's leading in their lives. The other evangelists are growing in grace. All hold this "treasure in earthen vessels." For them as well as for ourselves, we solicit your prayers.

The war still continues. Our evangelistic limitations, while lightened, are not wholly removed, and doubtless will not be until the close of the war. We crave a continual interest in your prayers for God's glory and the furtherance of the Gospel.

Lovingly yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle
was a great correspondent

WAYNESBORO, PENNSYLVANIA

The last Sunday in February marked the close of a three weeks' revival meetings in the Waynesboro church. Like all such meetings this one had its disappointments and its surprises. One of the surprises, and a very encouraging feature, was the large attendance throughout. People of all denominations in and around the city came in large numbers. In this sense the meeting resolved itself into a union effort. But the unsaved were not in evidence in any appreciable numbers, nor with any degree of regularity. While this is generally true, I think it is more so in this community than in most places. As a visible result of this special effort, seven were added to the church by baptism and one by letter. Two await baptism. The converts ranged in age from eight years to seventy-seven.

We were led in this meeting by Brother Albert T. Ronk of North Manchester, Indiana. I have known Brother Ronk since our student days at Ashland but this was our first opportunity to work together. I found him a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Our fellowship was most pleasant and the time went all too rapidly. It was a help and an inspiration to associate with one who has had a wide experience in the field of evangelism. The Word was preached with power. The sermons were of the expository nature, and the attendance and interest are an evidence of the hunger there is, on the part of many, for the truth. Brother Ronk spoke at shop meetings, to the High School and before the Rotary. He greatly endeared himself to our people and to many in the community and will always be welcome in our midst.

Through these meetings our church, which is one of the newer and smaller churches of the city, has become more generally known. The things for which we as a denomination stand were brought from time to time to the attention of the many hearers. It is very evident that the results of this time of special effort are not to be judged alone by the number of converts. Many were led to see the truth in a new light. Our own people were greatly benefited. Increased attendance, especially at the preaching services, is very marked.

Will not take time to enumerate recent events, but wish to assure you that our people have been busy in the work of the Lord. Attention has been given to the various phases of the work, both local and general. Reports at the recent business meeting indicate a normal growth. We hope, by divine grace, to accomplish more this year. We ask an interest in your prayers.

Washington, D. C.

During the month of November the writer assisted Brother Homer Kent and the good people of the Washington church in a revival effort. This meeting has been reported by the pastor. I was more than pleased with what I found there. The foundation has been laid, in things spiritual and material, for a great Brethren church in that city. Brother Kent has proven himself capable and under his leadership the church has gone forward from one victory to another. The first unit of the new church is being used to capacity. There is great need for the completion of the building. The sooner this is done, the more quickly will we occupy the large field which is ours there. May I raise a question—Is it not possible for the church at large to assist in the completion of the building? Such should prove to be a wise expenditure. We need to build large and be well equipped in the Capital city. The earnestness and self-sacrifice on the part of the people there merit our prayers and material assistance. I shall ever remember the kindness and hospitality of the Washington people. Entertainment was in the home of Elder S. P. Fogle. May the Lord bless all who labor for the success of his work.

NORTH VANDERGRIFT REVIVAL

Beginning February 4th it was the writer's privilege to work with Rev. H. C. Hammond and the North Vandergrift church in a three weeks' evangelistic campaign. The pastor and I having spent two years as schoolmates at Ashland, I was glad to be able to assist him in the Lord's work. Through special prayer meetings he had prepared the church for our coming. The choir gave us fine support. No new or untried methods were used. God honored prayer, daily visitation and the plain preaching of his Word. The visible results of the meeting will be reported by the pastor.

I believe that there is a real future for the Vandergrift church. While the present membership is small they are loyal to the Book and the Brethren faith. Under the leadership of their present pastor they have built a large Sunday school room on to the church. At the present time two fine classrooms are being built in the basement.

During our stay in Vandergrift we enjoyed the fine hospitality of the home of Brother and Sister Thomas Sloan. Our fellowship with Brother and Sister Hammond, and the church was most pleasant, and shall always be a pleasant memory to us.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

BERNE, INDIANA

We have enjoyed the blessings of another three-week revival service since our last report. Rev. George Swihart of Wabash, Indiana and Rev. Frank Johnson of Berne, Indiana, were used of God in bringing the messages from night to night. We are sorry to say that only one soul was brought to repentance as the many Spirit filled messages were delivered. This young lady was baptized and received church membership following the close of the meeting.

Brother Clyde Rodabaugh of Williams-town, Ohio, led our song service, organized a choir, and taught the boys and girls Bible stories and choruses. Brother Rodabaugh, who is a member of the Brethren church, is a graduate of Moody Bible Institute. We do not hesitate to say that he and his wife are dedicated to the service of the Lord. I wish my readers could hear him sing some of the old Gospel songs. We feel that every effort was well worth while. For we know that the saints were revived in faith. And who knows but what this one convert may lead many others to Christ.

Plans are being executed for an Easter program. The young people are giving a pageant while the boys and girls are having a part in recitation and song. The church work in general is continuing onward in harmony with Rev. Parr as our faithful leader.

do not know the ages of their children; therefore we must take a guess at them, unless we are able to determine them by some definite event. Jacque was not able to walk alone when his parents brought him on the Yaloke Concession five years ago; therefore we believe that we have his age quite accurate at six. He is short and chubby, quiet and a great lover of his two little sisters, Esther and Estella. He loves his home, his father and mother, but best of all, he loves the Lord Jesus with all his heart.

It is just about six months now since Jacque gave his heart to the Lord. He did it in the same quiet way that he does everything else. One morning he came forward during the church services, after Doctor Gribble had held Children's Meetings in the village: the following Sunday he was baptized. His father is one of our faithful evangelists (Yolo). Every day he teaches his children in their home. Little wonder that Jacque learned to love the Lord at such an early age, and accepted him as his personal Savior. He is not ashamed to tell others, that the Lord has washed his heart from sin. After Jacque gave his heart to the Lord, he did not forget him as so many of our boys do in Africa, but every day he lives just like every Christian boy should live. He never fails to attend the morning services and Sunday school.

Early in the morning when the roosters begin to crow, before his father and mother are awake, Jacque is up and on his knees praying. He prays for all the missionaries, for his sisters and his parents, for his relatives who are yet unsaved, that they will give their hearts to the Lord. Then he prays for all the natives who are hiding in the tall grass, that the Lord will wash their hearts, so that they too will be able to walk the way of God; and for the boys in the Homeland, that they will come to Africa to tell the affair of God. His father said, "That many times during the day when they miss Jacque, upon searching for him, they invariably find him in some corner on his knees praying." He is too bashful to pray in church or Sunday school, but he makes up for it when he is alone with the Lord. No matter how hungry he may be, he never touches the food until his father has returned thanks for all that the Lord has supplied for them.

Last week one day his mother missed some fruit, so she called Jacque and asked him "Whether he had eaten it." He instantly replied, "I am a child of God, I do not steal." We wonder how many boys at that age in America can say the same thing? We also wonder how many of the children who will be reading this letter about Jacque are as great a testimony for the Lord, as this little fellow is, who until a few years ago was a heathen, who had never heard the name of the Lord Jesus.

When Miss Emmert opened school for the Fall term, Jacque wanted to learn how to read and write. Miss Emmert realized that he was too small, but because he was so anxious she admitted him. But he was not used to studying long hours, and used to get so sleepy that he would fall asleep at his desk. He finally realized that he was not yet strong enough for such hard work and promised to wait another year. Will you pray for him, that the Lord will guard him well, and that Jacque will always be true to his Lord and become very useful in his service. And that in answer to his prayers many of our evangelist's boys will come to Africa when they grow to be men.

the Lord Jesus Christ shall never be put to shame, because in him we have found One who is "over all God blessed forever." He alone makes no mistakes. With him there are no accidents.

THE "Raft" of Human Notions

In all the history of human gropings for some hope concerning life after death, there is no more pathetic expression than that of Simmias in his argument with Socrates about the immortality of the soul. "I dare say," he says, "that you, Socrates, feel as I do how hard and almost impossible is the attainment of any certainty about questions such as these in the present life. And yet I should deem him a coward who did not prove what is said about them to the uttermost, or whose heart failed him before he had examined them on every side. For he should persevere until he has attained one of two things: either he should discover or learn the truth about them; or if this is impossible I would have him take the best and most irrefragable of human notions, and let this be the raft upon which he sails through life—not without some risk, as I admit, if he cannot find some word of God which will more surely and safely carry him."

Our heart goes out in pity for this pagan Greek who lived before Christ had brought "life and immortality to light." Longing for some sure "word of God" in this matter, but having none, Simmias turns to the rickety "raft" of human notions; and yet he feels keenly the "risk" of such a course.

What shall we say then of those men today to whom has been spoken the sure Word of God, and who choose rather to set sail upon the raft of human opinion? It will be more tolerable for Simmias in the Day of Judgment. "God hath spoken to us." How, then, shall men escape if they neglect? (Heb. 1:2, 2:3).

KNOWING more than Einstein

Professor Einstein, noted physicist, is hailed as the "Moses of Science" in recognition of his latest theory. This theory, recently published, is expressed in a series of mathematical formulas covering only six pages, and yet it is said by a famous German professor that "There are only a dozen men in the world who will be able to understand it, and it will take from two to five years for them to work it out and verify it."

One of the great aims of science has been to discover a synthesis of things which are apparently unrelated, to find one law that will explain all the other laws of the Universe. For a long time the scientists have been trying to bring under one formula the two great basic forces of the world, gravitation and electricity, but they could find no "key" to the problem. Professor Einstein's new theory, it is said by those who claim to understand it, solves the problem in his mathematical formulae he has set forth a single law from which all other physical laws may be derived.

It will require many years, doubtless, to test fully the Einstein theory, but if it should finally be verified, the achievement will constitute a most remarkable one in the field of physics.

There is great interest in all this to the thoughtful Christian. The Scriptures teach clearly that behind all the apparently divergent forces of the world there stands one ultimate Force, and behind all the laws of science there is one supreme Law. It begins to look as if science were on the road to discover this much. Scientists have always assumed this, but had never been able to demonstrate it.

But beyond this point science cannot go. Science may find there is one great ultimate law, it might even conceivably be able to express that law in a mathematical formula, but science can never by its own methods find the Lawgiver—the God of whose will the law of the universe is an expression.

God cannot be found out by theoretical science, neither can he be expressed by any mathematical formula. And yet he is "not far from every one of us; for in him we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17:27-28). Science should be able to find that there is a God. The very "heavens declare his glory." But science cannot find God. To find God and know him we must come to Jesus Christ.

The average Christian probably could not read any part of the Einstein theory with understanding. Yet such a Christian, in the matter of ultimate solutions of the problem of the universe, knows more than Einstein ever knew. In Jesus Christ the Son, we have come to know that God out from whose eternal bosom all the powers and laws of the universe issue and are sustained.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." But "No man hath seen God at any time"—telescopes, microscopes, test-tubes and mathematical formulae have never found him. "The only-begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." (Gen. 1:1, John 1:18).

SMOKING for Adolescents

Ruth F. Wadsworth, M. D., writing in Colliers on the subject of the "Adolescent Age," discusses the "advisability of smoking for the young." Her views are rather startling.

There was a time, this Doctor writes, when it was thought that smoking "stunted growth, injured the lungs, and deteriorated the moral character." But nowadays, the Doctor informs the reader, both mother and the children are smoking and yet "the race continues to maintain its average height, with a gradual reduction in lung trouble and no provable deterioration of the moral tone."

These sweeping conclusions of the Doctor are what the logicians would call a case of "hasty generalization." As every one knows, the wide use of tobacco among mothers and extremely young people began only a few years ago. And already serious results are seen by some reputable physicians. But what the ultimate results will

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

20. Don't you think the Revised Version of the Bible is wrong when it adds to and takes from the Bible? The St. James Version was translated by him and forty-seven others and God. J. M. H.

The account of the translations of the Holy Writings into the numerous languages of the earth is a long one. Even to trace in barest outline just how we got our English Bible would require a volume. There are many mistaken and ill-founded notions about the origin and relative values of such translations. The essential facts are the following:

(1) None of the original Manuscripts of the New Testament are any longer extant.

(2) Accordingly, the most ancient and best attested Manuscripts are themselves copies or translations of older texts. Only Greek manuscripts are employed as primary witnesses for the Greek New Testament text. The earliest of these is probably from about the middle of the fourth century. Only one Uncial (Capital letter text), the Sinaitic contains the New Testament entire. Scholars now list almost 4100 Greek manuscripts. In addition to this vast number of manuscripts we have also an even larger number of Latin Vulgate manuscripts and a third class of sources includes about 1000 copies of various ancient versions. So altogether we have some twelve or thirteen thousand manuscript copies of portions of the New Testament.

(3) When the King James Version was made none of the Great Texts was known and a vast number of the lesser manuscripts was equally unknown. The King James Version, which we know as the Authorized Version, was itself only a revision of the Bishops' Bible. The King's decree named fifty-four scholars who were to make this Revision. This Bishops' Bible was in turn only a hasty revision of the Authorized Version of 1539. But this is enough to show the source of our Authorized or King James Version.

(4) No one could, even if he would, be able to detract from the splendor of this magnificent translation and revision. The Authorized Version of the Bible stands a glorious monument of the English tongue and perhaps the greatest single factor in the making of the language. But there is no more divine authority back of it nor had it any more the help of God in its formation than any other earlier or later great translation.

In the light of the knowledge of our day, and I will speak only of the New Testament, I do not hesitate to say that it is my firm conviction that we now have the BEST TEXT OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, and what is more significant, A TEXT THAT APPROACHES THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPTS MORE NEARLY, than any generation before us had since the originals disappeared. All this debt we owe to the patient and devout scholarship of New Testament textual critics.

I will close by saying only this, that the Revised Version of the New Testament represents the best we know in the form of the Original Text restored translated into our present day English. I am personally constantly using it and am strongly committed to its use. Not because it is perfect but because it represents in numerous instances the Mind of the Spirit as revealed in the Greek Texts at our command far better than the Authorized Version. It does this in several ways. First, many English words of the Authorized Version do not mean in 1928 what they did in 1611. Second, many passages in the Revised Version are clarified and express therefore the meaning of the original far better than the Revised Version. Third, the Revised Version discloses some additions and some rejections when compared with the Authorized version. These I believe are for the most part justifiable in the light of our knowledge and can easily be defended in most cases. So that on the whole even this point makes for the truth of the Revised Version. I BELIEVE THE REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, WHICH FAITHFULLY TRANSLATES THE BEST IN GREEK TEXTS INTO ENGLISH, APPROACHES THE ORIGINAL AUTOGRAPH NEW TESTAMENT.

Some Easter Texts and Suggestions

Rather than confine ourselves to the treatment of one specific Easter theme, we are trying the experiment of presenting a number of helpful and timely texts with a few thoughts related to each.

No season in the year is more sobering than is Easter, and at no other time are the great problems of life and death more on the minds of people. It is most natural, for it is with such problems that Easter deals primarily. It was to meet such problems and to settle them satisfactorily that Easter was given. Men have been troubled from time immemorial with the thought of death and have anxiously inquired whether there be another life after death, but not until Jesus died and rose again was the world given a satisfying answer.

"If a man die, shall he live again" (Job 14:14)?

Men are still asking that question, as they have through many centuries, but to ask it in the light of the knowledge of the Gospel is to refresh the heart with a great hope. Encouragement has come from many sources, as men have thought on the question. From a purely scientific point of view, immortality has seemed reasonable. For, since it is claimed that no matter can ever be destroyed and none of the original force of the earth can ever be diminished, it is argued, "How much more shall not the spirit of which matter is but the servant and slave be indestructible and immortal." Nature raises her hand in approval of the resurrection hope by the fading and reviving of forest, field and flower. The fact that the desire for immortality is found in the human breast makes us believe it was planted there for a purpose, and not to taunt us with a lie. Hearts may bleed, but love remains unbroken by death and refuses to believe that it must be separated forever from the object of its affection. The incompleteness of life tasks and the inestimable loss occasioned by the cutting down of men richly endowed and carefully trained argue for the continuance of life after death. All these lend strength to our hope, but they do not give assurance. That comes only from the doctrine of immortality as set forth in the Gospel of the Son of God. This blessed assurance of the continuance of life carries with it a serious strain, for whether the future life shall be happy or wretched depends on how the life is lived here and now.

"He preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection" (Acts 17:18).

Jesus and his resurrection is the heart of the Gospel, and well did the chief of apostolic missionaries select this as the theme of his sermon to the Athenians. Wherever he went he stressed that truth. He had no message without it, and neither have preachers today. On the faithful setting forth of that fact hangs the faith of the people in the divinity and Messiahship of Jesus. That fact guarantees the efficacy of the atonement, the genuineness and worth of the new birth, the pledge of the resurrection of the dead, the hope of heaven and the trustworthiness of the Word of God. Jesus Christ as the Son of God and Savior of the world has no convincing credentials apart from the empty tomb.

"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (1 Cor. 15:55).

Death is universally feared; it is the dread enemy of mankind everywhere, except among two classes,—namely, those who have steeled their souls beyond reason against fear, and Christians for whom the resurrection of Jesus Christ has taken away the "sting of death." Tombs and monuments in an old Greek cemetery in Athens carry bas-relief figures of the departed, with scarcely a shade of grief on the face. This well illustrates the nonchalant attitude of Greek philosophy toward death two thousand years ago. "Good-by," said heathenism, "I am going away. We must all travel the same road. There is nothing beyond. There is no cause for grief or exultation. I have simply got to the end of the journey of life. Farewell." Paul looked beyond these stones and saw more, infinitely more. To him death was a serious, significant thing. It was a release of the soul, a revealer of glory and joy. The tomb was an open door. Death to him was not a time of defeat, but of triumph. With ecstasy he calls out the words of our text. And other similar expressions we have. "To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." This "corruption must put on incorruption." "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." To him death offered, as it does to all Christians everywhere, not hopelessness or despair, but joy, exaltation, victory, heaven. "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25).

In rising from the dead Jesus opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers, and freed them from the dominion of death. But why the double term, "Resurrection and life?" It indicates that he both raises them from the dead, and bestows upon them the life that is eternal. There is no death to them who believe in Jesus. Death has been conquered. The death of the body is merely an incident in our life which is eternal. The great thing now is to be in Christ, to take him as our Savior, then we shall never see death.

"That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection" (Phil. 3:10).

Here is expressed an overmastering ambition of the Apostle Paul. Possibly he had never seen Jesus in the flesh, but he thought of him as being very real and truly alive. He had had a great experience with him. He had met him in the exalted spirituality of his being. He had been struck down by the brightness of his glory, and had been moved by the commanding power of his voice. He became passive in the presence of such power, and was not disobedient unto that heavenly vision. That experience was a turning point in his life. From then on he was not the same man; he was a new creature. He had become dead to the old life, to the Jewish law, and to self-righteousness. He had been born again into the kingdom of grace, and into the Christian church, as one born out of due time. He had met the exalted One, had been thrilled by his transforming power, and had been subdued by his renewing grace. A new purpose had emerged in his consciousness, a new life aim had taken possession of him, a new passion had gripped his soul. He was not satisfied to be merely the recipient of divine grace, he wanted to be its channel. As Dr. C. C. Albertson says, "He would make his death to self and sin a birth to life that is life indeed. Even as Jesus' universal ministry began only after his death, Paul looks for an experience in his Christian life that shall be a continual evidence of Christ's resurrection in him, and of his own resurrection in Christ." He would incarnate the spirit and passion, the power of life and the sacrificing, self-denying service of him who had shown such power over death. That is what he means by the words, "that I may know ... the power of his resurrection."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Send your Easter offering to Dr. Louis S. Bauman, 1925 East Fifth Street, Long Beach, California. We are sure the treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Society will appreciate your prompt response. Make the size of your gift a matter of prayer.

Brother Quinter M. Lyon, under a new heading which we may find advisable to use occasionally, speaks of the kind of criticism that helps. "There are two kinds of criticism," he says. And his comments are applicable to other kinds of church work than editorial, as pastors and other church leaders can testify.

To one who had had such a transforming experience with Christ as Paul on the Damascus road, Jesus could not be dead and in the tomb, but alive, a living Christ. To such an one the resurrection of the Lord Jesus was, and is, a certainty; he knows, because he feels the throb of the abundant life and the warmth of infinite love.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, of South Bend, Indiana, writes of the attractiveness of Shipshewana Lake, as a conference meeting place, as a location for a camp for young people and as "a Christian playground." We are glad to give it this publicity because it is not a purely commercial enterprise, but is set for the service of the church.

Brother L. G. Wood reports nine confessions in a revival meeting recently conducted in his church with Brother and Sister H. H. Rowsey leading as preacher and song leader respectively. Their services were highly appreciated by the pastor and his people. Brother Wood is encouraged over the prospects of the work at that place, having experienced a gradual increase in attendance at all the regular services.

PRAYER REQUESTS THIS WEEK—Pray for our African Mission work. Brother Foster writes: "We appreciate your prayers for us and the work, if the Lord lays it upon your hearts. We are passing through very trying times."

Pray for God's guidance in and blessing upon the work in Argentina.

Pray for the College Endowment Campaign.

The Business Manager makes a report of Publication Day Offering receipts and also publishes the revised Evangelist Honor Roll. We are pleased to welcome Louisville, Ohio and New Enterprise, Pennsylvania back on the Honor Roll, and we congratulate Brother A. E. Whitted of Louisville and Brother E. M. Keck of New Enterprise church for leading their people into a revival of interest in the Evangelist. We would be delighted to welcome the return of others.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us an installment of college news which is full of interest by its recital of the activities of organizations and individuals connected with the school. A recent special feature was the annual school election which determines "Who's Who" among the elite of the student body. Among the more serious special student activities worthy of mention are the Gospel Team work and intercollegiate debating. The college representatives in these activities have brought credit to the school.

Brother Thoburn C. Lyon takes over the "Worship Program" with this issue and we hope those who have not gotten so far away from the ancient landmarks that they have no time or inclination for daily worship will make use of the splendid suggestions which we are sure he will make from week to week. We are grateful to Brother Lyon for this valued service. If you want to drop him a line of appreciation some time, you will find him at 337 Oak Street, Elmhurst, Illinois.

Dr. W. S. Bell recently made his canvass for College Endowment funds in the church at Leon, Iowa, where Brother Claud Studebaker is the sacrificing and successful pastor. He finds here a church with a splendid field and some excellent people. But they have suffered greatly along with many others of our mid-western churches during the "financial storm" that swept the agricultural states. Their gift was $307.00 and Brother Bell feels that it showed a commendable interest, considering their condition. The total of the Endowment Fund is now $202,878.20.

Early Sunday morning, March 24th, Dr. J. C. Mackey, long connected with the church, both as pastor and teacher in the college, passed to his reward, from his home in Ashland, Ohio. For a number of years Brother Mackey has been engaged as an optician in Ashland and has done supply preaching as opportunity offered. Those of us who were well acquainted with Brother Mackey, knew him as a very kindly spirited man, and as a preacher he was both forceful and thoughtful. Evangelist readers will recall that the first Mrs. Mackey preceded him to the spirit world about three and one half years ago. Our sympathies got out to the widow who mourns his departure.

Another aged Elder of the church has passed to his heavenly reward and in his departure the Second church of Los Angeles feels the loss of one who has been "a spiritual pillar" since his connection with that church, as the pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmell, remarks in this issue. He has been an occasional correspondent to the Evangelist and now and then has encouraged the editor by a line of appreciation. The church in general feels the loss of men of his kindness and spirituality.

Dr. Charles A. Bame reports a successful campaign held at Masontown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Herman Koontz is the faithful pastor. We are not informed definitely the number of converts. Possibly the pastor will give us that information later. But we understand some good material was added to the church; some already in the church, but indifferent, were revived; and all were strengthened and enthused for the work. Brother Bame has great hopes for the future of this church, but says they have need of larger equipment. We have rejoiced to observe the progress of this splendid church since the days we served them, and under the consecrated leadership of Brother and Sister Koontz they are continuing their advancement. One of the secrets of their success is the fact that they know how to support their pastor.

We have an interesting letter this week from Sister Hattie Cope Sheldon, who tells of a White Gift Christmas service held in their mission station, the Bellevue, at Bossangoa, Africa. Their offering of three dollars is a splendid one considering their conditions, and it was contributed to mission work outside their own station. Mrs. Sheldon says the native Christians find it difficult to give up completely their superstitious ideas and that sometimes a convert returns to his former heathenish practices. Of course it is to be deplored, but it is not greatly to be wondered at, when we consider on the one hand how they are utterly steeped in an age-long superstition, and on the other how slow we are even in enlightened America to give up our pet superstitions. If we were placed in their situation, with their background, we would not likely do any better. There is much falling away on the part of American Christians with all their advantages.

Prof. McClain's and Dean Miller's departments on page two continue to grow in interest. Brother McClain's timely comments and interpretations give evidence of being widely appreciated. Brother Miller's answers to questions are informing, and that they are coming to have a wider reading and gaining in interest is shown by an increase in the number of questions that are coming in. We call special attention to his discussion this week of the origin of the various versions and the comparative merits of the American Revised Version. That such instruction is necessary is evidenced by the question of the good brother who had the mistaken notion that the so-called "Authorized Version" was "translated by St. James" and others. And we have other inquiries that indicate a similar point of view. Of course Dr. Miller could only touch on the problems involved in the space at his command in a single issue. But perhaps he can find time on some later occasion to treat the subject more fully. If so, we shall be only too glad to give him the required space. Laymen and ministers alike are invited to send their questions.

A sample of each of the new quarterlies for the second quarter have been placed on the Evangelist's desk and we are informed that they have been mailed to the various Sunday schools whose orders are in, and as we write this note there are two Sundays yet in March. After glancing hastily through the Bible Class Quarterly, we wish to say that it looks good and worthy of the loyal patronage of our people. We think our co-worker, Brother Lyon, will not object to our saying that we believe he is improving in his lesson writing, which is a thing naturally to be expected with experience, of course. Word came to us the other day that one of our outstanding church leaders, not connected with the Publishing House in any way, said to another church leader: "This quarterly (meaning the Bible Class Quarterly for the first quarter) is the best one Brother Lyon has yet written." It is our expectation that the new quarterly just out will be found equally satisfactory, though the lessons are more difficult of treatment. And besides, on general principles, and irrespective of our connection with the Publishing interests, we believe in the use of Brethren publications by Brethren people, and for them it is our opinion that there are none better.

The Resurrection of Jesus Christ--Acts 10:37:43

By R. P. Miller

There are just two parts to the gospel: The death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. 1 Corinthians 15:1 to 3. Without the resurrection the death of Christ loses its significance. In view of the much criticism and questioning as well as denial of the doctrine of Christ's bodily resurrection from the dead, it is stimulating to know the abundance of proof, both of internal and circumstantial, substantiating it.

The importance of the resurrection of Jesus Christ is paramount. It is the keystone to the whole of Christian doctrine. With it every Christian's hope and expectation stands or falls. The atoning death of Christ is vain except for the resurrection. What virtue is there in being forgiven our sins if we never live again? If the grave is our goal why fear the judgment? "If only in this life we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Our faith is vain without the resurrection. In 1 Corinthians 15:12 to 19 we read that the final glorious hope of the Christian, is to live again in bodies that neither know nor experience corruption. The Christian's faith finds its greatest possession to be, not in this world, but in the world to come. The endless life in the presence of God, the joys of freedom from death, from suffering, from sorrow, from fear, and all the things that make this life unhappy, all hinge upon the condition of resurrection from the dead. Therefore if there be no resurrection these promises lose their value.

If there be no resurrection from the dead, we may throw the Bible to the winds, forsake the righteous life, and give ourselves up to eating, drinking and being merry, for tomorrow we die. Take away the hope of the resurrection from mankind and in a very short time neither life nor property would be safe anywhere. It is not fear of man's law alone that prevents crime. It is the fear of the results of the resurrection! Without it there would be little incentive to do good. The churches might as well be turned into movies, saloons and pool halls. The W. C. T. U. may as well go out of business. There need be no more giving to the Lord, for what would be the use if the Lord were dead? Let him who scoffs at the resurrection consider the world without the resurrection hope. He is living under the benefits of such a faith, while he is yet denying it. It is like biting the hand that feeds him.

The Christian church is built upon the fact of the resurrection. Every Lord's Day church bells ring as a testimony to the resurrection, and that it is the basic doctrine of the church.

There is just one place where there is no hope of resurrection, and that is Hell. Take away the hope of resurrection from the world today and you would have the nearest thing to Hell possible on earth!

The resurrection however, is not a question, it is the greatest and most monumental fact of all history. Let us consider the testimony of those who witnessed it.

Notice the number of witnesses. The fact of the resurrection was not hid in a corner, for it has been attested to by hundreds. Jesus first appeared to the women, then to the twelve apostles, then to over five hundred brethren "at once," and finally to Paul the apostle. This is the testimony of a multitude. You might well believe that one or two highly imaginative minds wrought to a pitch of taut nerves by their strenuous experience during the day of Jesus' trial and death might have had a hallucination and think that they saw a supernatural sight, but it is hard to believe that five hundred people would have it at the same time!

Now, the character and the attitude of these witnesses is of value. There were the soldiers, who were openly among his enemies, who had helped to crucify him shortly before. They were accomplices of the High Priest. It would have been to their credit to prevent the resurrection if possible. Matthew 28:2 to 4 and 11 to 15. Yet what was their testimony? THEY BELIEVED THAT HE AROSE! They told the chief priests so. They had to be bribed to tell the lie that the disciples stole the body while they themselves slept. It took large money to arrange this, for it was sure death for a Roman soldier to be found asleep on duty. Then again, what would they know of what was going on while they were asleep? How could they prove the disciples stole the body if they themselves were sleeping? What folly it would be to think that those cowering, fear-stricken disciples, could overpower the bristling Roman guards! The facts are

Why I Believe in Immortality

BY ROBERT E. SPEER

I believe in conscious personal immortality because I want to and because I think so strong a want, so attested by the effects which flow from it in life, is its own warrant.

I believe in it because I believe in the permanence and persistence of personality and of the capacity for self-sacrifice.

I believe in it because of love and the unity of love and the conviction that love is stronger than death.

I believe in it because of the significance of the sense of memory, the conscious continuity of life and the principle of responsibility.

I believe in it because I think the idea is veracious.

I believe in it because I think it is a primitive, human instinct, enriched and assured by the best and truest development and verification, in life and fruitage, of our primitive ideas.

I believe in it because I see values in human souls that I believe are indestructible and that I do not see perpetuated in the mere continuance of the human race.

I believe in it most of all because I believe in Christ; in what he had to say about duty and destiny, about God and the human soul; and because I believe in his resurrection and in all that his resurrection signified and signifies forever.

that the soldiers became as dead men before the power of Almighty God in the resurrection. In short, the very guard which was placed to prevent the resurrection but more firmly established it!

Now let us look at the disciples who were his friends, and their testimony. Until this time they had lived, honest, open lives before all. There was no ground for questioning their veracity. Therefore their testimony should be accepted at its face value. The women did not believe he would arise from the dead for they came bringing spices to embalm his body on the first day of the week. Mark 16:1 and 2. The disciples did not believe he would arise for they would not believe the Women's testimony. Mark 16:10 and 11. In other words they all thought he was dead! Dead to stay! Dead until the last resurrection.

Why then did they preach the resurrection of Christ as the very pillar and ground of Christian faith? BECAUSE THEY WERE WITNESSES OF A MIGHTY FACT WHICH CHANGED THEIR MINDS! Renan, the infidel, wrote: "The passion of a hallucinated woman gives to the world a resurrected God." It would take more than a hallucination to convince Thomas, the stubborn unbeliever, and Matthew, the Jew tax gatherer, and Saul of Tarsus, a fierce and conscientious enemy, besides a whole company of Roman guards, who themselves were pagans. The conversion of Saul alone, is enough to prove the fact that Jesus Christ arose from the dead. We are not worshipping a dead God but a resurrected and living Lord! One whom it was impossible for death to hold. In vain was the Roman seal, in vain was the Roman watch, the guard, in vain was the power of the tomb, for with irresistible resurrection power he burst asunder the bonds of death and Hades and arose the victor over all, the Captain of our salvation.

In every cemetery you may see at the headstone of many graves the epitaph which reads, "Here lies," and then the name of the one who once lived. But it is not so with Christ. Visit his tomb and his epitaph is not written in letters of fire, or gold, or stone, but spoken from the lips of an angel. "He is not here, he is risen." Friends, he lives, he lives! Buddha is dead, Mohammed is dead, Confucius is dead, but Jesus Christ is not dead! He is alive and lives for evermore! He lives to give every soul life and victory over sin. Here is the glorious proclamation of all. "Behold, I am he that was dead, but am now alive for evermore."

Christ's resurrection secures the resurrection of every true believer. II Corinthians 4:14 declares, "Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise us up also by Jesus." We know that God will raise us up who believe, because he raised up Jesus Christ! We who are united to Christ by faith become one with him in his death and one with him in his resurrection. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that everyone which seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:40).

I can add nothing to the assurance of God's Word. Receive the Lord Jesus and God will raise you at the last day. The body will be raised up. Romans 8:23. It is not merely a spiritual resurrection as some would have us believe. The Spirit cannot be raised from the dead, for the Spirit does not die as does the body. It departs to be with Christ in paradise. It is the body which shall be raised, and at that time the Spirit will re-enter the glorified body for the eternal state. It shall not be the same body but it will retain its identity. I Corinthians 15:35 to 38 describes this. "Thou sowest not that body which shall be," says the Word. "But God giveth us a body as it pleaseth him." The one thing kept of the old body is the identity. On the Mount of Transfiguration, Moses and Elijah were quickly recognized by the disciples, which reveals that after centuries those that die in the Lord are still known for what they were in the flesh. Jesus did not lose his identity after his resurrection, but was quickly recognized by the disciples.

While the resurrected body will not be the former, and while it retains its identity of the former, it will be like the glorified body of Jesus Christ, "For our citizenship is in Heaven from whence we look for the Savior, who shall change the body of our humiliation that it might be fashioned like unto his glorious body." In his glorified body Jesus walked and talked and ate and enjoyed fellowship with those he loved, AND SO SHALL WE. We shall recognize HIM with those five wounds in his hands and shall eat with him at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

God hath so spoken! Amen!

Things By the Way: XIX. Easter Thoughts

By Dr. A. D. Gnagey

The Charm of the Cross

In a humble church, not widely known, in a foreign land, the pulpit desk is ingeniously arranged, so that the minister standing behind it, can not be heard unless he faces a crucifix in the rear of the church. When he speaks to that, his words fall distinctly and melodiously upon the assembled people. But, if he turns his face from the cross, the words fall deadly soundless, and, no matter how eloquent or persuasive, are lost. "Christ and him crucified," is the church's only source of strength, power and influence. And yet, if all ended on Calvary or in the closed tomb, the cross would not only lose all its charms but its power also. History has no record of a sadder day than "Good Friday." And it would have remained that but for what followed. The power of the gospel is not in a dead, but a LIVING Christ.

The Power That Never Dies

There is a tradition that the news of the battle of Waterloo first came by a sailing ship to the south coast of England and by signal flags was wigwagged to London. When the message reached Winchester, the signals on top of the cathedral began to spell the message, "W-e-l-l-i-n-g-t-o-n d-e-f-e-a-t-e-d," and then fog descended and hid the signals. The whole country was in despair. But after awhile the fog lifted and the signals on the Winchester cathedral were still at work spelling out the complete sentence, "W-e-l-l-i-n-g-t-o-n d-e-f-e-a-t-e-d t-h-e c-n-e-m-y." The thrilling news raced across the land and lifted all hearts out of the gloom into joy. The heavy gloom of Calvary cast the world into despair, and it would be there yet but for the resurrection which followed. The thrilling news of the empty tomb spread rapidly; the friends of Jesus met and passed each other with the greeting, "Christ is risen." And that has been the message of hope ever since. Standing alone the cross is the signal of defeat and despair; in the light of the resurrection it is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. It is the resurrection that puts the seal of reality on the great central truth of Jesus—that we are children of God, with a personal, eternal value for him which shall never be lost. The charms of the cross, and the attractions of the cross, have their source in the LIVING Christ.

"I Would Have Told You"

It would seem that the perfection of all the promises of the Bible are written in John 14:1-3. Please read those words once again. They were spoken on the night of the betrayal. The little company of friends was grouped about him. For them he had been stay and support and inspiration in the thrilling months of their companionship. They had leaned on him, and he knew they leaned on him; he knew, too, that their trying hour was approaching when more than ever they needed the inspiration of his companionship. But those days of fellowship with the visible Christ were drawing to a close. It would be most difficult for the disciples to adjust themselves to a fellowship other than that to which they were accustomed. The cross awaited him; death would part them on the morrow. The question which man has asked himself since first he stood, blindly brushing away the tears, beside an open grave, was pressing for solution—"What lies beyond?" It was then and there that Jesus spoke the assuring word which has brought comfort to millions of human hearts in moments of their deepest sorrow: "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . Let not your heart be troubled." A cure for trouble? Yes, the only cure,—faith in God and in his Christ. Then came those reassuring words, "If it were not so I would have told you." No, Christ will not deceive his disciples and us with the promise of the Father's house, its wide halls and its many dwelling places, where broken circles are reunited, where all heartbreaks and wounds are forever healed. Let us take Jesus at his word, "If it were not so, I would have told you." If there were no Father's house other than this world, if there were no certain immortality, if death ended all, if life had no hope but heartbreak, if doubt were dearer and more true than faith, if this were an eternal separation, "I would have told you." To Jesus immortality was a reality; he took it for granted; it needed no proof, "If it were not so I would have told you." The Father in whom Jesus trusted is our Father also; if it were not so he would have told us. In this world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, there is another world, the Father's many mansions where there will be no tribulation, and no pain, and no sorrow, and no sickness, and no crying, and no tears, and no DEATH: "if it were not so I would have told you." But just because it IS so, he did not tell us. He offered no proof. Immortality is a truth which cannot be proved; neither can it be disproved. Science has no evidence to show that the spirit does not survive the death of the body; it is an instinctive belief which has existed in all centuries and in all parts of the world. It is a part of man's natural equipment. Jesus believed in immortality and practiced it. "If it were not so he would have told us." His silence is sufficient for the man who does not think he was made to die eternally.

Its Practical Value

What is the practical value of belief in immortality? Has it any? Do we live like immortals? Paul wrote a masterpiece on the resurrection of Jesus, and on our resurrection. 1 Corinthians 15. It is a theological treatise. He labored long and hard in an effort to prove his point. The chapter closes with a triumphant note: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" But the practical part of the whole argument is summed up in verse 58: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Are we steadfast and unmovable in our faith? Do we always abound in the work of the Lord? Unless our faith in the resurrection and in immortality leads to this practical conclusion, then we have believed in vain.

Future Life

By Samuel Kiehl

Hear Job's question: If a man die, shall he live again?" (Job 14:14). Jesus' answer is: God is not the God of the dead but of the living (Matt. 22:32); for all live unto him (Luke 20:38). I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die (John 11:25, 26). Very good for true believers. But those who know not God as their heavenly Father, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ are not so fortunate; they, according to Second Thessalonians 1:8, 9, shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. Sad indeed for those that belong to that class! Let us not forget that now is the accepted time to believe in Christ Jesus, and to receive him as our personal Savior and Lord; that it may be well with us here, and hereafter.

We have had (very dear) fathers of our flesh that corrected us, and we gave them reverence; shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? for they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness (Heb. 12:9). Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come (1 Tim. 4:8).

Several theories are advanced concerning our condition after death. Let us name three. First, Immediately after the dissolution of the spirit and the body, (purgatory), heaven, or hell. Second, An intermediate place, or state until the resurrection. Third, From Adam until the present, spirit, soul and body of all that have died are in an unconscious condition in the grave or elsewhere until the resurrection of the body. What does the word of God teach concerning the future life? It is written, Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation (John 5:28, 29). To the former that have lived the godly life, it shall be said, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world (Matt. 25:34). To the latter, Depart from me, ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels (Matt. 25:41). These shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal (Matt. 25:46).

Paul and Timothy, unto the members of the church of God at Corinth, say, We are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord, we are confident, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him (2 Cor. 5:6-9). Paul to the Philippians says, I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ (Phil. 1:23). The spirit being unconscious with the body in the grave is not with Christ; who, according to 1 Peter 3:22, is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; our great high priest (Heb. 4:14), who also maketh intercession for us (Rom. 8:34). He ever liveth to make intercession for them that come unto God by him (Heb. 7:25), safety for faithful believers both in the present, and the future life.

We take it for granted that, what is true concerning the brethren in First Thessalonians 5:14-23 is also true of the individual brother. Paul, addressing the brethren collectively and individually, verses 14 and 23, says, I pray God your whole spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless until the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Here is a trinity—Spirit, soul, and body; universally true of the church; individually true of every human being. Unto us Jesus saith, fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell (Matt. 10:28). Hebrews (4:12) says, The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit. Spiritual men and women (Gal. 6:1) when under unfavorable conditions (Matt. 26:40) cannot glorify the Father. Of such the Son saith, the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak (Matt. 26:41). Nevertheless Jesus saith to every true believer, Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life (Rev. 2:10).

It is written; The day of one's death (is better) than the day of one's birth (Eccl. 7:1). Then (after death) shall the dust (Gen. 2:7) return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it (Eccl. 12:7). Accordingly Jesus on the cross saith, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit (Luke 23:46). Likewise, Stephen while being stoned, is calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit (Acts 7:59). Our heavenly Father, in that surely coming ordeal (death), may thy Holy Spirit's presence be with us, enabling every one to say, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.

In that future life, those of us who have been true and faithful unto the Father and the Son shall then as never before realize that, unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood (Rev. 1:5) be all the praise and the glory in ages without end. Be it so! In Jesus' name.

A Sublime Scripture---III

By Dr. G. W. Rench

"God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom also he made the worlds; who being the effulgence of his glory, and the very image of his substance,"...

Let us pause a moment and ponder this last clause in this quotation. Forcing itself upon the attention, is that word, "effulgence," as used by the Revised Version. The Authorized Version uses the word, "brightness," evidently just as meaningful. Moffat puts it, "He, reflecting God's bright glory." Hence, in the seven words of this clause, Jesus as THE great prophet is set forth. If the prophets of "old time," were the refulgence—reflected glory—Jesus was the "effulgence," the direct shining of the Father, yea, the very light itself. For, had he not said while in the days of his flesh, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John 8:12)? It has been said, "Who is so senseless as to doubt concerning the eternal being of the Son? For when has one seen light without effulgence? The sun is never seen without effulgence, nor the Father without the Son."

"The Sun of God in glory beams
Too bright for us to scan;
But we can face the light that streams
From the mild Son of man."

Did Jesus tell the truth? Then listen: "All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither any man knoweth the Father, save the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him" (Matt. 11:27). Why, it is through Christ alone that we can know God. "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me," says Jesus. It was Bishop Westcott who said, "The knowledge of God which Christ had as God, he set forth to man as Man." John says, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." (1 John 5:10, 12). And Hebrews declares in our study, "God hath spoken in his Son."

It would seem from such statements, that God had tried to settle some things for all time; and he has, for people who will let him have his way. The dodgers and quibblers simply will not have it that way. Their self-importance bulks large. They pipe up with the ever-ready alibi, "Well, you know, there are different interpretations put on Scriptures." As though a plain English statement just had to be interpreted; as though the interpretation were of more importance than the fact stated. God, the Father, had conclusively established the authority of the Son to speak for him long before this statement in Hebrews was written. At the surpassing scene of the Transfiguration, as if to settle the question as to whether Moses and Elias were still to be his spokesmen, as they once were in a former dispensation, he says—GOD SAYS—not an angel; not even Jesus, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him" (Matt. 17:5). Yet, after 2000 years of light and Bible teaching, many would-be teachers continue to put a question mark after the teaching of Jesus, although professing to admire his wonderful life; as though a man's character may be beautiful, if he does tell lies about himself. To my way of thinking, beautiful characters and shining examples grow out of truthful teaching. What was wrong with Robert J. Ingersoll? His private life was clean. His miserable teaching spoiled everything.

"These things have I written unto you," says John, "that ye may"—may what? Have a wonderful experience, even without knowledge of the sayings of the Son of God? That you may revel in your feelings? Not these; but, "that ye may know that ye have eternal life" (1 John 5:13). Don't miss the point: "These things I have written unto you, that ye may KNOW." Things written is the way to know. I quote: "But let us not deceive ourselves in this matter. We must believe and receive the Christ of the Gospels, and not a fictitious Christ. Today within the visible church, it is becoming the fashion to ignore sin. Even among the clergy of all denominations there are those who speak and write scornfully or disdainfully of the "sin-obsession," as they are pleased to call it. They profess abhorrence of the shedding of blood, whether of bulls and goats, or of "the precious blood of Christ." Yet they have great reverence, they say, for our Lord as a "perfect Example." Such men seem to count the blood of the covenant as an unnecessary thing, even if they do not go so far as to term it an "unholy thing." Yes, and a bad theory leads to bad practice; and a bad practice leads to a bad life; and a bad life leads to ruin. The Hebrew letter recognizes and meets just such bad theories. Study chapter 10, at verse 29: "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" Then, read verse 20, of chapter 13: "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen." The fact of sin, the shame of sin, the guilt of sin, can not be dealt with by ignoring the experiences through which the race is passing, neither by a little sarcasm about "sin-obsession." Its deadly scars can only be covered up by the crimson stain of the "everlasting covenant," as planned in the courts of high heaven. That plan has God for its Author; Jesus, God's dear Son, whose blood soaked the clods on Calvary the great Sacrifice; and the Holy Spirit, who revealed that plan to man. Is it effective? "Come, and see."

Essentials for a Successful Song Service

By Leo Polman

IV—The Choir

Is the choir the war department of the church? Some would say it is without hesitating. That is disgusting. Dear reader, let me say right here. you can make the choir, or any other department of the church for that matter, the war department. It has been my experience, that when one is looking for trouble, they need not go very far to find it. And usually they get more than they expect to find. My sympathy goes out to members of the choir when they are made the target of some disgusting, disgruntled, eccentric person or persons.

The choir can be one of the great essentials for a successful song service, and is, where it is used for the glory of God. So many times this service for the Lord, is no more than the displaying of talent, rather than humble consecrated service. Singing is like preaching, it must be of the right sort to be helpful in bringing souls to Christ. May we have consecrated, born-again, Spirit-filled, willing singers in the choir. With a Spirit-filled individual at the instrument, with a leader led by the Holy Spirit, with an audience sympathetic and having the burden of lost souls, and with a consecrated choir; how can there be strife and disagreement? May God take that criticizing, fault-finding spirit out of our hearts. If we must use a hammer, let us be careful to build something.

MRS. EDDY EMPLOYED PHYSICIANS

A notable piece of information is becoming current to the effect that Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, mother of "Christian Science," "employed physicians occasionally, and took drugs on numerous occasions during the last ten years of her life." Her course in doing so was probably guided by good sense, but what a crushing renunciation of the fundamental teaching of "Christian Science!" It places her followers in a position where some explaining would seem to be in order.—The Baptist.

Daily Readings and Comments

INTRODUCTION

I have chosen to begin my contributions for this column with a series of devotional studies from the book of Ezekiel. In these studies we shall be but little concerned with the interpretation of the mystic and prophetic symbology which Ezekiel, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, has employed; in this column let us rather consider only the deep devotional themes underlying the prophet's message.—T. C. Lyon.

MONDAY

The heavens opened—read Ezek. 1, entire chapter. Note especially v. 1: "The heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God." Among the papers of an old German, whose work the writer once took over, I found this hymn of despair:

"Forth into life you bid us go,
And into guilt you let us fall,
Then leave us to endure the woe
It brings unfailingly to all."

Thanks be to God, he has not left us to endure the woe, but has opened unto us the heavens, and in the person of Jesus Christ has brought to every man visions of God.

TUESDAY

Visions of God—v. 1; read also Prov. 29:18. A vision of God has been at the very beginning of every life of very great spiritual service. Visions of God are everywhere about us today: in the God-breathed scriptures, in the work of the Holy Spirit, in nature and the history of nations. God grant us open eyes instead of blindness (cf. 2 Cor. 4:3, 4)!

WEDNESDAY

The Word of God—v. 3; read Ps. 119:89-96. The vision heeded, God grants us greater vision. The revelation of God through the ages has been gradual, depending upon man's ability to receive it. This same evolution takes place in the experience of every believer: after the visions, the word of the Lord! We thank thee, Father, for the Living Word!

THURSDAY

Hearing the Word—Jer. 13:15; Matt. 17:5. Down the streets of Chicago at the crowded noon hour, under a scorching summer sun, a coatless man made his way, holding aloft a Bible and crying out, like the prophets of old: "Hear ye the word of the Lord!" To many he must have seemed as uncouth as John the Baptist had seemed in his day. Twice I saw and heard him, and each time breathed a prayer that God would bless his ministry, for this was truly his own message to the world.

FRIDAY

Personal—v. 3. "Expressly unto Ezekiel." Always and ever, in our devotions, let us heed God's message as expressly unto ourselves. Too often we rob ourselves of God's choicest words by saying: "This is expressly for the Jews!"—"This is for the kingdom age!"—"This is for that old gossiper," etc. It may be for them, but it also has its message expressly for us. May we heed all its warnings and rejoice in its promises!

SATURDAY

Effect of the Word—v. 2; read also Isaiah 55. The word of God is never without its effect. Things happen definitely when we hear (heed), his word: Ezekiel knew the exact time and place. Like Mel Trotter, he "was there when it happened." God's word comforts and strengthens; it sends his children to the heat of Africa, to Argentina, to China, and to the uttermost parts of the earth, that others may hear his word (Ezek. 2:4).

SUNDAY

Worship—v. 28; read Ps. 95. The living creatures, their motions, the noise of their wings, the fire—all these the feeble effort of a mortal, inspired though he was, to describe in human words things immortal (2 Cor. 12:3, 4). But through them all there shone forth the vision of God, his throne, and the brightness of his glory, and Ezekiel fell on his face and heard. On this day, which the Lord hath made, let us worship and bow down before the brightness of his glory, and hear him!

The Cradle Roll

How Even the Weakest Church Can Have and Efficiently Operate a Successful Cradle Roll

By Phebe A. Curtiss

The Glory of the Parent

"I NEVER understood," said a young mother, "how wonderful it would seem to hold my own baby in my arms!" Her first-born baby was held close to her breast, and in her eyes was the soft, dreamy look which is never in a woman's eyes until she feels the mother-love in her heart. "It makes you feel as if you want to be much better than you have ever been before, doesn't it?"

And a young father said recently: "Isn't it queer how different you feel about a baby when he is really your own? I never wanted to touch a baby before! I was afraid I would drop it, or that I would break it somewhere. I just never dared to hold one; but from the minute I first looked at 'Jim,' I felt so differently about it. Why, I can hold him, feed him and dress him! I can just do anything there is to do for him, and I don't mind it a bit. I like it!"

Those two people had come to have "a little bit of heaven" in their lives, which would never have been theirs if they had not experienced the miracle of motherhood and fatherhood.

When the Bible School Claims the Child

How like that is to the Bible school! It never really understands the fullest joy until it has made a plan by which it reaches out and claims for itself all of the babies which are connected in any way with the church and congregation and the community where it is.

It is possible for every school to do this through the Cradle Roll department. It doesn't matter whether the school is located in city, town, village or open country. It doesn't matter whether the school be graded or ungraded, or whether it is a fine, well-equipped building, in which it meets, or a country schoolhouse, with little or no equipment.

There is one thing that every school can have, and that is a Cradle Roll. No school is so small or so poor or so isolated as to be without babies, and most schools are rich in them. The Cradle Roll is one department which may be conducted according to the facilities at hand. The most elaborate plans may be carried out or the work may be done on a very modest scale, and it may be done anywhere.

Most of us would be greatly surprised if we knew what a large proportion of our boys and girls under twelve years of age are growing up entirely without any form of religious education. Armies of them in every community live day after day and week after week with never an influence which leads them to know the heavenly Father or even to think of him; who never read his Book, and who never talk to him, unless it may be in a purely mechanical, unthinking way, which means very little to them in their daily conduct.

A Great Opportunity

It should be the task of every school to remedy this by planning to reach out and touch those young lives which are within the border of the community where it exists. There is no time when it is so easy to begin doing this as when the baby is just starting out on its journey through this "great, wide, wonderful, beautiful world which God has made," and in which he is to live.

There is no influence outside of the home which can have so much to do with determining whether that little life shall make for good or bad as this same school, and the degree to which it lives up to its opportunities depends upon how early it claims its privilege and how earnestly it pursues it. The sooner the school reaches out after the little life begins, the better. There is an atmosphere in every home, be it Christian or unchristian, which is just a bit different when a little life is starting in it, from what it is at any other time. Even families which are not serious-minded are sure to feel the softening touch of a little new life—a little, tender, helpless life which is so dependent upon the family.

Therefore, it is the psychological moment in which to express an interest in the home and establish a point of contact between it and the school.

Starting the Cradle Roll

The Cradle Roll department may be started in the very simplest fashion, letting the babies under four years of age in all the families of the church and congregation be the nucleus for the department. A superintendent must be chosen, and this should be a woman who has the interest of little children at heart. She must love little children, not with just a sentimental feeling, which finds its expression in "gush," but a deep-seated love which will lead her to sacrifice self and comfort enough to enable her to promote the work in every way. She must be interested, too, in people, and have a way of showing it which is never patronizing or condescending.

She must be endowed with a full measure of courtesy and tact. She should be one who is not already loaded down with responsibilities, for this work demands the concentrated thought and undivided attention of the one who conducts it.

If she starts the work with a large number of babies, she should have the necessary number of helpers; but usually she can begin and secure these helpers as the field expands.

After the babies in the church and congregation and school are enrolled, the whole community may be visited and the babies' names secured.

Certificates

Plans must be made for the recognition of this new relationship. It is a good thing to leave some little reminder in each home when a baby becomes a member of the Cradle Roll. Every denominational publisher and every firm which deals with Sunday school supplies will furnish certificates which may be used. The superintendent should send to her own denomination for a catalog or samples of these certificates and other supplies.

The certificate states that the baby has been enrolled upon the Cradle Roll, and the date of the birth and the date of enrollment are given. It also contains the names of the parents, the superintendent of the school and the Cradle Roll superintendent. There is an endless variety of these certificates—some in black and white, some in colors, some simple in design, others more elaborate. Often some Biblical setting is used. They are usually very inexpensive, so that any school will be able to use them.

In many homes these certificates are framed and preserved among the treasures of the family.

Another plan is to give to the mother of the baby a "Baby Book," which enables her to record many interesting facts about the baby as he grows. A very dainty one, which is also very inexpensive, is put on the market by The Standard Publishing Company. It was arranged by Miss Lillie A. Paris. It has a birthday record, a place for family pictures, a record of the weight from week to week; "glad days," such as the day when the baby had his first tooth, took his first step, wore his first short clothes, and when he spoke his first word, etc. His favorite lullaby, his first playmates, his first party, and all such interesting facts about him, find places in the record, and the whole book is interspersed with beautiful and appropriate quotations and poems.

Some superintendents, when they send congratulations upon the birth of a baby, or when they go to make the first call, send or take a potted plant to the mother.

On the birthday of the baby some token should find its way into the home. It may be a pretty birthday card, given to the baby, if he is brought into the school, on the nearest Sunday to his birthday, sent to the house, or, better still, carried there, if the superintendent follows the plan of calling upon each baby upon his birthday. Some workers prefer to write a personal birthday message to each one.

Rolls

There should also be a plan for recognition in the school. A roll should hang upon the wall, containing the names of the Cradle Roll babies. There is a great variety of wall-rolls. Some of them are made of celluloid, some of cardboard, some are framed and some are not. In some cases there are little slips, upon which to write the names, and these slips are then inserted in the roll, and, in some cases, the names are simply written upon the cardboard.

Some schools have a large frame made, and in that the pictures of the babies are placed, with the date of birth.

Some superintendents prefer to make their own rolls, and many very attractive ones have been shown. One skilled in the use of water colors can make very beautiful ones, and a great deal of ingenuity has been shown in those which are made by pasting fancy pictures of babies, flowers and the like upon cardboard, and writing or printing in the names.

These home-made rolls are very satisfactory to use when the school is small and there are not many names to enroll. In one school in Atlanta, Georgia, the Cradle Roll superintendent had a small tree, and for each baby there was a little blue bird perched upon the tree bearing the name of the baby.

In "How to Conduct a Cradle Roll," by the writer of this article, it is suggested that another roll be kept which shall have the names of those babies who have gone to the heavenly home. A simple garland of flowers may be painted or pasted upon cardboard, and these lines printed or written below:

"The baby wept—
The mother took it from the nurse's arms,
And soothed its grief and stilled its vain alarms,
And baby slept.
"Again the baby weeps,
And God doth take it from the mother's arms,
From present pain and future unknown harms,
And baby sleeps."—Samuel Hinds.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

I. The Ministry of Isaiah

(Lesson for April 7)

Scripture Lesson—Isaiah 6:1-13; 7:1-17; 20:1-6; 38:1-22.

Printed Text—Isaiah 6:1-8; 20:1, 2; 38:1-5.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 116:12-19.

Golden Text—"Then I said, Here am I; send me."—Isaiah 6:8.

Introductory Note

For six months we are to study the prophetic teaching and leadership of Judah, from the time Isaiah began his mission to the end of the Old Testament period. This particular quarter ends with the exile of the people of Judah.

The aim of this course is "To lead the pupils in discovering and appreciating how God, through prophets and other leaders, gave help and guidance to the people of Judah, in order that the pupils may come to see the hand of God in their own lives and in all human affairs."

The call of Isaiah to his mission differs in details and dramatic experience from, but in principle has much in common with, every Christian's call to the service of God, and so bears wisdom, strength, guidance and comfort for us all.

Isaiah was the first of Hebrew prophets, though fifth in order of time. Those prophets before the captivity were Jonah to Nineveh; to the 10 tribes of Israel were Amos, Hosea, Obadiah, Joel. Isaiah was for Judah. He lived in Jerusalem and belonged specially to the kingdom of Judah. Isaiah was the son of Amoz, and probably of royal blood, Is. 1:1. He lived in the eighth century before Christ; began to prophesy 757 and died by martyrdom probably 697 B. C.

Isaiah's Times

Isaiah began his ministry after half a century of great outward prosperity, "but a prosperity which brought the people into perilous relations with the idolatrous tribes of the East. Both on the part of the king and the nation there followed that overweening confidence in human resources success so often brings about." Assyria was again coming into prominence, a power under Tiglath-Pileser, and had already attacked the northern kingdom and was hastening it to its end. "The great issues of the world's secular history were then being fought out by three great world-powers—Assyria, Babylon, and Egypt." Midway between these powers on the northeast and southwest, in a narrow region, lay Palestine. Its only hope of safety lay in neutrality, which Isaiah urged.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Isaiah's activities were so many, his interests so varied, that he had the broadest possible view of the world of his day. "Isaiah was a patient and painstaking teacher of religious truth, a bold and fearless preacher of righteousness, a sane and courageous reformer, a keen and far-seeing statesman, a large-hearted champion of the rights of the people, and a divinely enlightened seer penetrating the veil hiding the future and anticipating the glorious era when the kingdom of God, a kingdom of peace and righteousness, would be established upon earth."—Prof. Frederick Carl Eiselen.

God's Calls

We are apt to think that if calls came to us with the distinctness with which they came to men of the olden time we should readily and gladly respond. If anything as dramatic as the vision Isaiah had could be duplicated in our experience we, too, would be overwhelmed with a sense of God's presence and of our own unworthiness to be commissioned by him. If, again, as we were pursuing our commonplace avocations, a majestic and gracious person should appear beside our boats, our counters, close to our office desks, we, too, would eagerly respond to his call, and rise up and follow him. But are we right in thinking that Jesus does not in fact impress himself upon our lives today, that the Son of Man is not with us as truly as when in human form he walked up and down the highway of Galilee? There is a celebrated picture in the National Gallery in London which represents St. Augustine sitting with his hand in that of his mother, Monica. The rapt expression on both faces shows that they have risen above earthly things. The tradition is that at this moment St. Augustine said: "O that God would speak to us!" His noble mother replied: "My son, perhaps he is speaking to us." If, instead of looking for such extraordinary tokens of God's presence, we should keep quiet long enough and our spirits humble enough, perhaps we should learn that God is speaking to us all the time.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Our Call and Answer

"The work of the Hebrew prophet was not infrequently inaugurated by a consecration-vision—a theophany in which the prophet is summoned to his life-work Moses (Ex. 3), Samuel (1 Sam. 3) and Ezekiel (Ezek. 1, 2), were each called to his prophetic function by a remarkable and vivid manifestation of God's presence. But to other prophets God fulfils himself in other and more normal ways. And it is through these normal ways 'the word of the Lord came' unto Hosea (through the domestic tragedy of his life), Amos, Micah, Jeremiah and other prophets. It is one of the most mischievous delusions of religious life to unduly exalt the abnormal."

"If ever a man ought to be all there, it is when he is called to the service of God. He should marshal all his faculties, and every faculty should reply, 'Here am I.' The whole of a living man is something worth having, but a fragment is only fit to be buried."—Spurgeon.

Our Readiness for God's Work

"When war comes to any country, there are rich men who give money, millions of it, that the war chest may be full. But the only men who give what Lincoln called at Gettysburg 'the last full measure of devotion' are the men who give themselves. 'Here am I, send me'—nothing can take the place of that! In that sterner war there is no discharge, in that age-long, world-wide fight against the evils of earth this same sound principle holds. Money is needed; counsel is needed; organization and administrative ability are needed. The bringing in of that kingdom which is not meat and drink, nor shot and shell, but righteousness and peace and joy in the divine Spirit, requires all these fine forms of effort. But nothing can ever take the place of that personal consecration of each man's own soul to the service of the living God."—Dean Charles R. Brown.

"It has ever been so along the Biblical line: when men have had an interview with God they have been prepared to risk anything and everything in his strength and grace. It is because we have not seen God that we do not serve him; it is because we have no transporting, transforming vision that when we are asked to work in the church we tell lies, we grieve the Spirit with mocking excuses."—Joseph Parker.

Warsaw Intermediates Organize

Impelled by the urge for self expression, which comes to all young people when they reach the age of logical reasoning, a group of boys and girls of the Brethren church of Warsaw, Indiana, met on Sunday evening, October 14th and decided that they needed an Intermediate Society of Christian Endeavor.

The following Sunday evening a society was formally organized, with John Vanator as president, and Nellie Killian, counselor. Within a few weeks the executive committee adopted a constitution which will be studied and enlarged upon as the need may require.

Interest was intensified by a Hallowe'en party held at Winona Lake where at that season, deserted houses give the proper atmosphere for such an event. As to their regular Sunday evening study, the topics outlined in the Christian Endeavor World are augmented by Bible memory work assigned by the counsellor.

These Intermediates have not abandoned a single service, despite the cold weather and "flu." Moreover on January 13th a contest was inaugurated with points very cleverly worked out by the President, who takes a splendid interest in the work of the society and is planning better things for the future.

The Counsellor, Miss Killian.

Christian Endeavor Tithing Contest

Several weeks ago, Mrs. Louis P. Clapper, who is superintendent of the Tenth Legion department of the Christian Endeavor society at Louisville, Ohio, conducted a contest among the members, who were to give their ideas on WHY A CHRISTIAN SHOULD TITHE. As a reward she gave the winner of the first and of the second prize a gold "C. E." pin. Following are the reasons as set forth by the first and second prize winners. They are worthy of serious thought. We commend both the writers and Mrs. Clapper, who conducted the contest. There is need of more widespread instruction along these lines.—EDITOR.

Eight Reasons Why We Should Tithe (First Prize)

WE SHOULD TITHE:

1. Because God has done so much for us and we should be glad to give him at least a tenth for the carrying on of his work.
2. Because everything we have belongs to God and we should give our material support to his great enterprise.
3. For God has promised to bless all who bring their tithe into the storehouse. Mal. 3:19.
4. Because God has asked us to prove him by bringing in our tithe. Mal. 3:19.
5. Because Jesus commanded us to lay aside on the first day of each week as God has prospered us and the common amount is the tenth.

6. Because our tithe is necessary to evangelize the world, which is our duty to him.

7. Because if we love him we must tithe to carry on the work that he wants done.

8. Because God in former times commanded his people to tithe and as we have more blessings we should be willing to give more.

HOMER HANKEY.

Reasons Why We Should Tithe—Because: (Second Prize)

1. It is one of God's commands given to us through the "Divine Guide", the Bible.
2. Of the blessing we receive by "Tithing."
3. In tithing we are honoring God.
4. Would we rob God? Yet that is just what we are doing when we withhold his tithe.
5. All good things come from God's hands, should not we be willing to give one-tenth to God?
6. Of the help we can give to the great need of our churches, through even our one-tenth.
7. Through our tithes, our love and obedience are shown to God. RUTH LILLIE.

an died who had accepted the Gospel here and returned to her village for the medicine men to take care of her.

The dispensary is nearing completion. It is such a need and we trust there will be a medical worker raised up for this station. The storehouse also will soon be completed. This building is also a necessity. The tools must have a place, and when the missionaries go home on furlough they must have a place to store their household effects away from the white ants and other destructive agents.

The Foreign Board has authorized our furlough and we will leave here March 1st, D. V. for our first furlough. No doubt we shall be on our way when you read this and we covet the prayers of the brotherhood for a safe journey and a useful furlough spent in the homeland.

In His Name,

MISFIT CLOTHING MISSION SYSTEM NOW CHANGED TO "BIG BUSINESS"

The "penny and misfit clothes" system of supplying the foreign missions of American churches has now been changed into "big business," according to statements of various organizations outlining the work now being done abroad.

Within the past few years, by the introduction of genuine business methods into the process of civilizing the heathen and helping unfortunate races, the combined American missionary fund has increased from $9,000,000 a year to $50,000,000 annually and the number of missionaries from less than 6,000 to more than 16,000. Modern efficiency methods have become necessary to meet the increased demand, it was found through a survey of the situation the results of which appear in the April number of Woman's Home Companion.

In the old days, declares the article, the potato barrels of the community were carefully saved and on Mission Saturdays, zealous church women cleared their attics and confiscated their husbands' wearing apparel—even the toys of the children—and packed them in barrels to be sent to foreign lands. "Usually the chiffon underwear went to the cold climates and the sleds and skates to tropical countries," says the article. The missionaries were forced to clothe themselves, their families and natives from the misfit garments that went abroad.

"Then," the writer continues, "men of affairs got together and decided to do a little missionary work on their own account. They came home after dealing with enterprises involving hundreds of thousands of dollars to find their wives and daughters trying to raise some missionary money by peddling on a lawn three oysters and a quarter of a tablespoonful of ice cream and strawberries for fifteen cents. But once they were aroused they did a mighty good job.

"Now a modern warehouse for supplying foreign missions has all the aspects of a big exporting house. The Rev. Smithson, in some far away jungle, used to live a life of uncertainty. One year he would get eight derby hats, six woolen mufflers and as many boiled shirts as a bride gets saltcellars. Under the new system he asks for what he needs and gets it.

"One sample modern requisition asked for winnowing machines, pumps, windmills, maps, globes, kindergarten material, medicines, plows, seeds, motorcycles, plumb-

From Bellevue African Mission Station

Bellevue par Bossangoa,
January 9, 1929.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been some time, I believe, since you have heard from Bellevue station. The work continues to prosper and bring forth fruit although we have many difficulties.

Christmas and New Year's day passed without much notice out here. Can you realize being in a land where there is no Christmas or Easter? Of course both of these days are associated with our Lord Jesus, and have their origin in him, so where he is not known they also are unknown. Yet it does seem strange to see none of the familiar Christmas signs, such as decorated stores, Christmas trees, etc. We had a little program in the church the Sunday previous to Christmas, a representative from each class told the Christmas story. It was the first time we had been able to persuade the women to appear in public. The children repeated Bible verses in French, afterwards explaining the meaning in Sango. There was special music. The White Gift Offering from the natives was 72 francs (almost $3.00). They are contributing it towards the building of a Chapel in one of the villages which is about a day's run from here. Our Sunday school attendance for the last quarter has averaged 314.

A few weeks ago we had a visit from Mr. and Mrs. Glover, an English couple who are doing research work for the British museum. They were trying to find a certain kind of gorilla—perhaps the "Missing Link," who knows? They were people of the world and we didn't have much Christian fellowship with them, yet we did enjoy speaking English with them.

Many of our Christians are standing true and we do praise the Lord for them. Two are out preaching the Gospel at this time. On the other hand there are many who from their fruits could not be judged as remaining faithful. The native is a happy-go-lucky being, and all is well so long as trials do not come his way. But let him, or his wife, or his baby get sick and immediately he begins to wonder who has the evil spirit that causes this sickness, for no one gets sick for nothing. Then he goes to the medicine man and has him cast lots to see who is the guilty woman—for it is always a woman. Then they whip her; put pepper in her eyes; put her hand in boiling water or make her drink poison, according to the offense. I am sorry to say that three or four of our Christians have participated in this heathen practice. Just today a woming materials, a seismograph, a grave stone and a glass eye. Thus, all the romance has not gone out of missionary work. The grave stone made that plain, as did the glass eye. Both told the story of life and death in the foreign field as effectively as the orators of the old days of 'packing-bees' told it.

"One thing is certain; if we are going to have missionaries, we should feed and clothe them properly. These Smithsons and Mrs. Smithsons stand not only for the Christian religion but for Christian America in the eyes of hundreds of thousands of people who have no other standards by which to judge us. And, human nature being what it is, even in darkest Africa, they are all too apt to judge God's work and God's own country by the fit of Smithson's hat.

"The mission barrel is being packed today by organizations composed of well-educated, sincerely devoted, high-grade men and women and their efforts are already reaping surprising and unhopied-for results. Under the old happy-go-lucky penny and underwear system, we had succeeded in the course of nearly two thousand years, in working up a force of about five thousand under-fed, over-dressed and heavily handicapped foreign missionaries. Under the new system, in less than two decades, we have tripled their numbers and quintupled their efficiency."—Condensed from April Woman's Home Companion.

Professor Anspach attended the annual meeting of the North Central Association of Colleges this past week in Chicago. He brought back news of the utmost importance to such schools as ours.

Professor Mason, who is now at Ohio State, called one day last week. He is making good progress there. Also, Mr. Essig, graduate of last year, who now has an assistantship at State, called on the College.

The Boys' Glee Club plans to leave for our Pennsylvania churches April 5th, returning April 15th. They will go as far east as Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Wilcox of Pittsburgh and Mr. John Rishel paid the College a visit recently. They are much interested in the progress of the College.

It is known by all readers of this paper that Mr. E. L. Kilhefner, president of the Board of Trustees, passed away recently. Elsewhere in the Evangelist due account of this will be given.

The meeting of the College Board will be held here April 16th. A full attendance is most important.

Recently the students held an election, the results of which are as follows: Miss Opal Rupert of Polk, Ohio, was elected May Queen. Mr. Phillip Lersch of Ashland, senior and star basketball forward, was admitted to the degree of Master of Manliness. Miss Dorcas Bame of Ashland, was voted the degree of Bachelor of Beauty, while Miss Nina Jesson, of Ashland, was voted the degree of Doctor of Deeds. All of these but the May Queen were limited to the Senior class, the former to the girls of the Junior class. Each degree indicated on what the decision was voted. Only a bit of play in honoring certain types of accomplishment.

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

LEON, IOWA

This church is located not far from the Missouri boundary, about one hundred miles south of Des Moines.

The work here was established by Brother George Ronk and has grown to a good sized membership. This was not visited in the former campaign on account of it being in the process of development.

Leon is the county seat and offers a good field to our church. Brother Claud Studebaker has been pastor here for several years and has had some wonderful gatherings. Brother Studebaker and his wife have sacrificed, labored and done a great piece of work here.

I came into this place over frozen ice and blockaded roads, the worst Iowa has had for twenty years. Most of the roads were impassable so that the members in the country were unable to get to the church and impossible for me to get to see some of them.

Brother Studebaker gave me every aid, was patient with my impatience and extended every kindness and encouragement.

Leon like many of Iowa towns and cities was caught in the financial storm that wrecked a large portion of the banks in the State. Both of the banks here failed and brought almost a financial collapse to the community. No one can realize what the aftermath of high finance and war standards has done to these central agricultural states without being there.

Leon gives promise of making a good strong, permanent church. I only regret that I was unable to meet more of the people.

The gift here was not large, but under the financial stringency, the local needs and with no wealth, it represents an interest in the college and real sacrifice by those who gave. Their gift was $307.00.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Easter vacation this year will be only over Friday and the following Monday. The college must be in session 180 days in order to make good our work.

Professors Horn and Stuckey attended the inauguration of the president of Kent State Normal last Friday. They report an interesting time.

We are bringing off the press a spring number of the College Bulletin called the Student Activity Number. A postcard will bring it to you.

Prospects for the Summer School are good. We ought to have the usual number, around 300.

evangelistic services at Masontown, Pennsylvania, has returned.

One of the Girls' Gospel Teams of the College conducted the services last Sunday evening in our Park Street church. The program was exceptionally well given. The team consisted of Mrs. Virden Kirby Taber, Miss Monroe, and Miss Mabel Crawford. We may well be proud of these girls.

Our students are called out over a wide range of territory here as substitute teachers in the various high and grade schools. It is good practice for prospective teachers.

Recently a Men's Gospel Team visited Riverside and Krypton, Kentucky. They report an interesting and profitable time. The team consisted of Messrs. Delbert Flora, Raymond Gingrich, and Ray Klingensmith.

The College recently debated with Baldwin-Wallace and Hillsdale in our Chapel. The question was whether the jury system should be abolished. We lost to the former team, and in the case of the latter no decision was given. The team consisted of Messrs. Miles Taber, Tyrol Noble, Raymond Gingrich, and Herman Hoyt.

Dr. Bell returned from his western trip and is now in Pennsylvania where he is looking after some gifts.

JOHN H. PECK

John H. Peck was born June 5th, in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. His early years were not much different from those of other boys of his day. While yet young in years he publicly acknowledged his acceptance of Jesus Christ as Lord and became a member of the Church of the Brethren. March 26th, 1870 he was married to Mary Meek and they journeyed together in unbroken companionship until a little less than a year ago when we gathered here to pay our last respects to the remains of Sister Peck. The five children survive them: Mrs. Ida Morrisson, with whom they made their home in Los Angeles, Mrs. Laura Fishback of Nebraska; Porter Peck also of Nebraska; Mrs. Wilda Stutzman of Illinois and Mrs. Georgia Rundall of Texas.

Brother Peck was called to the Eldership in the Church of the Brethren, then known as the German Baptist Brethren. His most prominent official connection with that church being that of Treasurer of McPherson College at McPherson, Kansas. Because of ill health he gave up this position and moved to Manvel, Texas. It was at this place where he became the Elder and pastor of a group of Brethren members and he served them as leader for something over five years. Still seeking better health conditions he came to California about ten years ago and lived to the age of 81 years, 9 months and 2 days.

On coming to this state he identified himself with this church and has been a spiritual pillar in it all the while. His age did not retard his activity and he was ready to give his influence to any movement that appeared to advance the cause of Christ and his church. Perhaps the place where his efforts counted for the most was in his prayer life, for he knew how to get the bar of God in prevailing prayer and was very faithful in the exercise of this Christian grace. Unless others of this church will step into the gap and advance in the ministry of prayer, the departure of Brother and Sister Peck within a little less than a year will be a loss beyond our ability to estimate. However we are expecting that these godly lives have so inspired others that many will serve where two have fallen. The services were conducted from the Second Brethren church of Los Angeles, Monday, March 11, 1929. Elders Cover, Mayes and Lienhard assisting the pastor in the service.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

An evangelistic campaign closed here Sunday, March 17th with nine confessions, six of which have been received by baptism and three await the rite.

We expect to institute a "follow up" campaign, and remove some obstacles and receive the other three, and others in the near future. Brother H. H. Rowsey and wife of Falls City, Nebraska, led us in this campaign and they did a fine piece of work. It had to be a brief campaign so we made it an intensive one.

The Bible was presented, in song, pictures and message each evening, and the attendance was good throughout the meeting. Brother Rowsey's pictures and messages were excellent, and the people came out in fine style to see and to hear them. Mrs. Rowsey's conduct of the singing and her solos, filled no small place in the success of the meeting. Apart from the confessions received, the membership was strengthened in the faith, and inspired with helpfulness.

This was also a time of seed sowing, which will bear fruit in due season, and we hope to make the most possible of the harvest.

It was a very great pleasure to have Brother and Sister Rowsey with us in this campaign and the fellowship could not have been better, and we hereby extend our thanks to the Falls City church for loaning them to us for this meeting. There is plenty of hard work yet to be done here, but the prospects are growing brighter day by day. We are now experiencing a gradual increase in attendance at all regular services, and hope to continue so.

Remember this part of the Lord's field when you pray.

SHIPSHEWANA LAKE

Brethren Retreat has become one of the institutions of the Brethren church. Like other organizations in our church it is developed to meet a need in our constituency. The favorable results of this project already justifies the interests of its first promoters as well as the backing of the Indiana District Conference.

This is a good place for a boys' and a girls' camp. Who can tell the good that may be done around the camp fire where the young have their hearts opened with the delightful setting, and a leader who knows his opportunity. The Lodge offers splendid opportunity for boys and girls groups. The Training school for young people meets a very definite need in each of our churches. The Bible Conference idea is not a new thing. Brethren Retreat provides a pleasant place for this conference.

As a Christian playground it is unequalled. There is boating, fishing and swimming. The bathing beach has just been given a new coat of sand. There is abundant shade with numerous park benches, tables and grass plots. There is quiet and rest for all. There are places for all kinds of games and sports for young and old consistent with the Christian atmosphere maintained here. The property being owned by the Brethren in the main there is no chance for any dance hall or development of public nuisances. Numerous private cottages now grace the grounds. What more could one ask for?

TRAVEL FLASHES

Masontown, Pennsylvania

It has been my privilege during the last three weeks to enjoy a revival meeting at the above place. In the heart of the coke region, it is the smokiest place I have ever lived so long. With the underground treasures so rich, the good farm land that once was, is being devastated and ruined for the coal. Too bad, too, that they are burning the coke in open ovens and wasting more than they are saving, since the newer processes get more value out of the by-products than out of the coke; another sample of the wastefulness of this generation, with the things that would serve coming generations.

Masontown Brethren seem unafraid of the younger preachers. Koontz the present pastor is the third graduate of the seminary they have broken in. They seem to know how to do it, too, for their pastorates continue until each does a work of which they can speak well; this is true of both Editor Baer, and J. L. Gingrich, along with the unfinished task of Herman Koontz. In the meantime, they had the fatherly care of Dr. Martin Shively, who is affectionately remembered, for the solid building he did among them.

The expectation for this meeting, I noted was very high. Last year, they had had a great ingathering, and I believe that some thought it could be repeated—a thing hardly to be expected, since it does not often happen. Yet, the "prospects" were there; the main difficulty being that many of them have been there for a long time and have been prayed for and solicited so often that they have become adepts at resistance. I sensed at once that the main work of this meeting was to be, "establishing all the disciples" (Acts 18:23). So, I hammered at sin in the church and out, and tried to hold up the heroism of our forbears and the ideals of our Lord for his disciples, and to some it sounded harsh; to others, good; and to others, still, alas! unnecessary. To encourage us, some began to accept the gospel from the start and others decided to return from the far country of sin. The crowds continued and the church remained loyal and prayerful. A number of new families were reached, a number of young men and women and more children came and at the end, we were satisfied that the work had been blest of the Lord. Masontown needs more room. Their accommodations are such as no member would want to accept for his home or his business. The Sunday school soared above the 300 mark during our meeting and the best work could not, and can not be done until they have better rooms for classes. A big Teacher-Training class, a number of Bible study classes, a large group of young families all give great hopes for the future of this place in Brethren growth. The one next thing to get is an enlarged plant to make use of their opportunity and fulfill their task under God.

Their arrangements for my comfort were almost perfect. Noon meals out; home with Herman and Myra (the pastor and wife), suppers (very light) at the restaurant, kept me in trim for the hardest and swiftest game of evangelism I have had for many moons. It was a pleasant side-trip on the journey of life which will remain a happy memory. The faithfulness of the prayer-group and the pianist, Mrs. Sally Dugan, nee Griffith, capable pianist are not forgotten.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

be, in terms of "stunted growth" for the race, will be known better in fifty years from now. The human organism resists abuse in a remarkable way. Only years of mistreatment will break down its resistance. But the "harvest" will come at last, in spite of the glib assurances of "journalistic doctors."

The most serious thing about Dr. Wadsworth's article is the possible influence of her expressed views on smoking by "adolescents." She thinks parents should be "tolerant" in the matter, and discourages the policy of "complete prohibition." There is only one absolute rule, she says,—adolescents should not smoke before meals! And earlier in the article she sets the adolescent age as between eight and twelve!

Here, then, is some more of our twentieth-century "progress." A supposedly reputable physician, writing for a supposedly respectable magazine whose circulation reaches almost two million copies every week, gravely teaches that only one rule should be imposed upon child smokers between the ages of eight and twelve, and that rule is: no smoking before meals!

It is sufficiently startling that a doctor should express such views, but the most amazing aspect of the matter is that a nationally read magazine could feel safe in passing on these views to its millions of readers. Magazines are not philanthropic affairs; they do not as a rule print what may injure their subscription lists. The ultimate blame, therefore, rests upon the reading public.

The world is not improving in some ways, at least.

MORE WISDOM

"The teeth should not be brushed across or up and down both ways, as is usually done."—Another health hint, from a lecture in London.)

My child, if you would shine today,
Attend with care to what I say.

The modern rule for health and bliss
May briefly be described as this:

Whatever you have ever done
Assume that it is wrong, my son;

Whatever you have done before,
You must not do it any more.

Don't brush your teeth across or down,
Or up, it makes the expert frown.

(To keep them fit as any fiddle, Brush back and part them in the middle.)

Rich foods internal ills provoke;
Lunch lightly off some well-boiled coke.

Avoid the soap-and-water trick;
Just scrub yourself with powdered brick.

An upright posture strains the head;
Try walking on the hands instead.

When influenza reappears
Try breathing deeply through the ears.

Thus every day and every way
Give modern methods fuller play.

Try writing letters with your toes
And hearing through your eyes and nose.

But, more important far than that,
Oh, keep on talking through your hat!

—Lucio, in the "Manchester Guardian."

CRITICISM AND HELPS

There are two kinds of criticism. The first is the kind that helps and the second is the kind that does not help.

I feel like quoting a letter of criticism recently received. I have received a number of such letters from the individual about to be quoted, and I wish that many others would write as he does,—always in a kindly spirit, pointing out the things which are particularly worth while, in order that the editor may know how to write most helpfully in the future. My critic emphasizes the things which he likes rather than the things which he does not like. Do you not realize that such criticism accomplishes more than the other kind? Try it on your pastor and friends.

The letter follows:

Dear Brother Lyon:

Again I would like to write to you concerning a Sunday school lesson. This time March 10.

I want to say that I am glad for your POSITIVE stand. It is true that we are saved by faith in the blood of Christ and we must accept that individually. Baptism symbolizes the burial of the old man and the resurrection of the new.

I also feel as you do—By their fruits you shall know them—people in other denominations have the "fruits" just as well as those in our own. However I do feel that an unprejudiced mind could not help seeing immersion—but there are MANY commands in the Bible and we come short as well as others. I am glad for the statement "The symbol of baptism emphasizes the sharp cleavage which should exist between the old life and the new."

May the Lord mightily bless you,

Sincerely,

R. I. H.

In order to conform with my own ideals of criticism I shall refrain from criticizing other types of critics, and merely commend this one.

When I entered the editorial office at Ashland I expected criticism. No man can escape it if he holds a position of any notice. My expectations have been realized, I assure you. But all that a man can do is his best, and then he can hope that his critics will have the true constructive Christian spirit, such as is displayed in the letter which I have quoted. I do get letters like this occasionally. I wish that they all might be like it.

QUINTER M. LYON,
Sunday School Editor.

Business Manager's Corner

"In Honor Preferring One Another"

For a number of weeks we have been waiting a proper opportunity to occupy our

"corner" once again and to present a couple of interesting reports; but we learned long ago that to render the most satisfactory service it is necessary to submerge our own interests in promoting the interests of others. So for years we have been pushing and promoting the work of the College, of Home Missions and of Foreign Missions, content to hold in check our own plans for the sake of these other interests that necessarily must make strong and urgent appeals to the brotherhood for financial support.

For the last month we have given over this page of the Evangelist to the Foreign Missionary Society to enable it to adequately present its appeal to the church for the annual Easter offering, but now that this is out of the way we wish to occupy the page in reporting our own work, and first of all we will make a report of such funds as have been received from the

A careful checking over of this report will reveal that there are a goodly number of churches that have not yet sent in their offerings. We are perfectly willing that the churches take their own time about making their remittances, just so they MAKE them. Another examination of the report reveals a goodly number of individual offerings which indicates that the members of the church want to contribute to this fund, though many of them are isolated from their home congregations, or that their home church failed to make the offering on the set day and these people desire to make a personal contribution to the work.

The Brethren Evangelist

It has been just two months since we published the Honor Roll for the Brethren Evangelist, but you will remember we publish this Honor Roll only when a new church has won a place of honor by meeting the conditions necessary to be enrolled with this group, but this time we are glad to report two additions to this distinguished company. There is special occasion for rejoicing in this instance, because like the parable of the lost sheep in Luke 15th chapter, "there is great rejoicing over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance." These two churches were on the Honor Roll a number of years ago, but they had strayed away into the mountains and were lost to the Honor Roll, we know not for how many years; but their present shepherds, aided by their faithful helpers have succeeded in bringing them back into the fold. These churches are New Enterprise, Pennsylvania, with E. M. Keck, pastor, and Louisville, Ohio, with A. E. Whitted, pastor.

In addition to this we are glad to report the following SIXTEEN churches have renewed their subscriptions and have become members of the Honor Roll for another year—Allentown, Pennsylvania, 10th year, S. E. Christiansen, pastor; Buckeye City, Ohio, 9th year, Delbert Flora, pastor; Fairhaven, Ohio, 11th year, George Pontius, pastor; Gratis, Ohio, 5th year, O. C. Starn, pastor; Hagerstown, Maryland, 9th year, Geo. C. Carpenter, pastor; Howe, Indiana, 7th year, C. D. Whitmer, pastor; Mexico, Indiana, 10th year, C. A. Stewart, pastor; Smithville-Sterling, Ohio, 9th year, G. E. McDonald, pastor; Summit Mills, Pennsylvania, 3rd year, W. E. Ronk, pastor; Sunnyside, Washington, 3rd year, C. C. Grisso, pastor; Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, 6th year, W. C. Benshoff, pastor; Washington, D. C., 4th year, Homer Kent, pastor; Yellow Creek, Pennsylvania, 4th year, E. M. Keck, pastor; and Rittman, Ohio, 2nd year, Floyd Sibert, pastor.

These churches that make up the Honor Roll constitute the backbone of the subscription list of the Evangelist, and we want to again express our appreciation of their loyalty and steadfastness. Pastors come and go with some of them, but the churches keep right on in their good work. As changes of pastors are made it is possible for us to fail to make the proper corrections on the Honor Roll, so if there should be any errors as the Roll appears this week we ask your forgiveness and promise you to make any corrections that are necessary as soon as they are pointed out to us.

Conference Minutes

A goodly number of pastors to whom copies of Conference Minutes were sent for distribution made prompt remittance for them and a number of them ordered extra copies, expressing great satisfaction with the publication as it was made up the last time. One leading pastor wrote that he thought it was the best arranged Conference Report that had ever been put out.

However, there are some over fifty pastors who have not yet made remittance for the copies sent them, and we would appreciate it very much if they would give this matter their early attention.

Business in General

We can say for the general business of the Publishing House, that it has not been better at any time during the past fourteen years than it has been since the meeting of our General Conference in August. We have been operating our present force to its full capacity during this time and have had to secure extra temporary workers at times to keep up with our work.

We have never been so busy with commercial and job printing as during the past winter. Our aim is to continue the development of this department of the work just as much as possible.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

VIII. "Back to the Bible"

By C. C. Grisso

We believe the Bible to be the Word of God. It must be accepted as the one all-sufficient guide. We dare not substitute for it. Neither can we accept a part here and reject a part there. "All Scripture is given by inspiration--and is profitable."

When the writer was ordained to the Gospel ministry, he was given this commission, "Preach the word." The charge in part was, "As a minister of Jesus Christ you will look to God's Word as your sufficient guide in all things. This is the only rule of Faith and Practice of the Brethren Church." This was twenty-five years ago. Today it is different. We hear strange sounds coming from various quarters that so much of the Bible is "not for us." Especially are they attacking the four Gospels and the Sermon on the Mount in particular, until one feels much like one of old when they said, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him."

The position of the Brethren Church has always been that of loyalty to God's Word, yet I believe we are passing through a testing time. A time which shall prove to be as a refiner's fire. And if in this time we are among those who are loyal in Word and in Life to the Great Head of the Church; if we proclaim the unerring, infallible Word and its Christ; this that now seems a dark hour for the Church will be the dawn of a better day.

Our fathers gave us a noble heritage. They suffered and died for the cause that was dear to them. Shall we stand by and allow that for which they gave their lives to be made a hissing and a fable? God forbid. The fires of devotion and loyalty to the Faith have been quenched by much misapplied learning. But God has always had a people, and he always will. If we prove faithless he will raise up another, even a people that will honor his Word and obey him. This then is our plea, Back to the Bible. "Preach the Word." "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."
Sunnyside, Washington.

A PRE-VIEW of Hell

After a bitter legal battle, Asa Keyes, former district attorney of Los Angeles, has been convicted of bribery and conspiracy to obstruct the ends of justice, and is sentenced to serve a term in San Quentin prison.

When the news of Keyes' conviction and sentence reached the prison, it is reported that the prisoners laughed long and "sardonically." The explanation of this sardonic laughter is that some two thousand convicts are in San Quentin because they were persecuted by Mr. Keyes during his long term as district attorney.

The warden at San Quentin plans to put Mr. Keyes in a cell separated from all the other prisoners. He will not be allowed to mingle with them, and for exercise he will be taken into a separate ward. All this special care is for the purpose of keeping the other convicts from killing him.

Hell will be something like this. I mean in respect to the feeling of its occupants toward one another. Imagine, if you can, the arrival in that eternal prison-house of some "great" man who while upon earth by his teachings caused hundreds of human souls to be sent to the same place in advance of himself. It is not pleasant to think about. We do not know whether there will be "sardonic laughter" in hell, but we do know there will be the "gnashing of teeth." For this we have the word of the Lord.

A SYMPATHETIC Prince

The Prince of Wales, some time ago, did a very commendable thing in paying a personal visit to the poverty stricken coal-mining region of England. The situation he found there the Prince himself described as "ghastly." He found men blinded by accidents, large families living in a couple of cold barren rooms, people sleeping upon bundles of rags without blankets, hungry children and men without work.

In one home the Prince picked up a little two year old baby and amused her by tossing her toward the ceiling. Then the Prince went on, leaving the family with an unforgettable memory—a visit from the future King of the realm.

No true Christian will sneer at this evidence of sympathy on the part of the Prince for the poor of his realm. And yet, how little the human rules does, or can do, in the face of human need. After all has been done that is humanly possible for the poor, the Christian will pray for the coming of another "Prince" whose sympathy and power to relieve suffering are infinite.

"For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence, and precious shall their blood be in his sight" (Psa. 72:12-14).

SURGERY is not enough

Three years ago a man in Los Angeles, with a mania for stealing automobiles, underwent an operation on his brain which it was thought might cure him of his foolishness. He has just been arrested for stealing another automobile. It takes more than a surgeon's knife to get rid of man's sinful propensities. The trouble goes deeper than the "brain." Man needs a new heart, and only God can give him this.

Questions and Answers

Conducted by

J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

21. For every one shall be salted with fire. Mark 9:49. Is this to be taken as a figure? Please note it says "everyone."

This is a difficult passage to explain in a satisfactory manner. One can only give what he believes to be the best explanation and does not dare be dogmatic in his opinion. On any of these hard passages I would welcome light. Let it be noted then, that this verse is an integral part of the section beginning with verse 43 and must be interpreted in harmony with the whole section, verses 43-50. The subject under discussion is discipline; discipline involving sacrifice and consecration. The Greek verb translated "shall be salted" is evidently a metaphor taken from the custom of using salt with the sacrifices. See. Lev. 2:13.—"And every oblation of thy meal offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meal offering: with all thine oblations thou shalt offer salt." Moffatt translates this verse as follows: "Every one has to be consecrated by the fire of discipline." The "everyone" is to be restricted to the circle of the disciples. This "salting" with "fire" is somehow a purifying process; it is disciplinary in its effects; it is like the "refiner's fire" of Malachi 3:2.

22. "Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou taken up and cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that what he saith cometh to pass; he shall have it." Again, notice the "Whosoever." Is it probable or even possible for a normal mind to have such faith in material matters?

This is from the same inquirer as the preceding question. This same teaching is to be found in Matthew 17:20 and in Luke 17:6 with but slight variations in the reading. Matthew adds "and nothing shall be impossible unto you."

Let it be noted that Jesus does not say that the disciples have no faith. They had faith. Yet he exhorts them to "have faith." I believe the faith which he speaks of here is what we might call "miracle faith." This perhaps they did not have. Such a kind of faith is spoken of by Paul in his enumeration of the spiritual gifts in 1 Cor. 12:9 and 13:2. These gifts of the Spirit of which Paul speaks were distinctly supernatural bestowals according to the will of God. So it is not a lack of faith that saves when we do not possess the faith that can remove mountains. We should remember too that faith can and does become a veritable "up-rooter of mountains." James says, "The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working."

THE VICTORY

Cut from the Loaf

Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept. ... O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Corinthians 15:20, 55-57.

She had come from Indianapolis and was a student at the Moody Bible Institute. It was Christmas night in a Chicago Hospital. Several times during the day she had said that she knew she was going and that she would be glad to go.

"I have been studying to know the Word," she said, "and now I am going to see the WORD."

She was never delirious, but conscious to the last.

Just before death came her face brightened, and she said,

"Why, there's Mother!"

In a moment, she added,

"And Grandmother, and Minnie!" (Her sisters said that she had never seen either of them in life).

She named one after another who had passed away, and then she seemed to see others whom she could not name, adding,

"I wonder who those boys are? I don't know them."

And she was gone.

What is it that can explain a beautiful death-bed experience like the above? There is nothing of which we know other than the glorious truth resting on that historic fact revealed to us in that Holy Scripture quoted from Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians.

Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory!—From the Moody Bible Institute Monthly.

Some are complaining about the high cost of education in America, and are objecting to further expenditures for educational purposes. They do not realize that "the greatest tax of all times has been the tax of ignorance," as a leading educator puts it in one of his books. Ignorance lays heavy burdens upon society: all sorts of institutions have to be supported so that those who have done injury to themselves or to others through ignorance may be taken care of. Cutting down expenditures for a legitimate educational advance is poor economy.

A Much Neglected Note

One of the much neglected notes of Gospel truth these days is that which calls the Christian to a life of separation from the world, or to use a perfectly good Dunker term, as well as Scriptural, the doctrine of Non-conformity. There is a reason for it, no doubt. It is very unpopular. The rank and file of Christians do not believe the doctrine, nor will they listen to pronouncements upon it with any degree of pleasure or approval. They do not accept the theory that the church is a "called out" body, a peculiar people, zealous of righteousness, that it is to be separated from the world, that it is composed of men and women who are dedicated to God and are under obligation to avoid the very appearance of evil. Oh, they might, many of them, give assent to the theory if questioned personally about it, but most of them deny it in practice, and their attitude toward the preaching of such truth is one of annoyance and displeasure.

And not a few preachers are falling, whether consciously or unconsciously, into much the same attitude. It seems to them a very small matter, not worthy of their time, to concern themselves with the amusements their members seek, the way they pass their time at social functions, the character of their games, the pleasures they pursue, the fashions they follow and various other ways that might be itemized by which Christian people are so constantly partaking of the worldliness of the world. It seems more fitting for him "to preach the Gospel" and let such personal matters as card playing, and dancing and cigarette smoking and immodest dressing to the conscience of the individual. And it is true that it must be left ultimately to the conscience of the individual, but some one is responsible for stirring up the consciences of men and women on these matters. And we must not forget that while we properly conceive it our duty and our chief concern to lay upon the hearts of people certain great Christian principles by which they may govern their lives, that the principle of Non-conformity to the world is one of the most fundamental and vital to the life and power of the individual Christian and of the church, and also that when one has set forth general principles it is the part of wisdom to make the truth clear and practical by pointing out specific instances illustrating the truth.

Here is where we oftentimes are lame, we fail to specify instances by which our people are conforming to the spirit and ways of the world. We avoid naming the evils in which they are indulging and content ourselves with talking in generalities. And some of us are inclined to defend ourselves in it. We claim we can accomplish more by so doing, that if we speak too plainly we offend some and thus lose our chance of helping them. There are three things to be said on that point. First, before a preacher decides to keep silent about and apparently ignore a specific evil, or worldly influence that is affecting the lives of his parishioners, he would do well to study the attitude of Christ and of his noblest apostle, Paul, toward those things that interfere with an individual's spiritual vitality. Second, he should bear in mind that a man's conduct tends to determine his character; that what he does, his amusements, pleasure seeking, personal habits and all, influence the quality of his life; and as one whose business it is to encourage the development of the highest spirituality of his members he cannot be indifferent to those things that thwart his purpose. Third, before he attempts to speak of the de-spiritualizing influences playing upon the lives of his people, he should ask God to give him a deep and sincere love for the souls of those who are walking in worldly ways and a spirit of genuine kindness and consideration for their feelings. Then he will approach these matters both in sermon and in personal conversation in a manner that will not give offense, but will win the respect of those thus admonished. There is no virtue in speaking against the sins of one's parishioners in a vicious, blustering, raw, inconsiderate way, or in the spirit of one who would win popularity by demonstrating to the community that he has "the courage of his convictions." That one should have such courage is not to be gainsaid, but that he should use his courage in such a manner as to win the applause of the galleries is certainly very much to be questioned and is of very doubtful service. But it is worth while to keep men's consciences prodded about indulgence in the common, seducing affairs of the world.

An Answer to Atheists

Atheists are making a great stir these days and doing their utmost to spread their destructive teachings far and wide. We do well to do what we can to fortify our people, and especially our young people, against the insidious propaganda of these blind guides. But it is not always wise, however to give publicity to all their various fallacious arguments in order to combat them. It is our opinion that the young lives under our care can be more effectively safe-guarded by constructive teaching and godly example. There is very great wisdom in thoroughly indoctrinating our people in the Word of God and then pointing out how those teachings are filled full of meaning by the men and agencies in the service of the Master throughout the world, but the holding of public debates with godless men who are seeking publicity is of doubtful worth. There is a method and a spirit of combatting atheism which reacts favorably to the enemies of Christianity rather than against them.

We were impressed with an editorial recently published in the Religious Telescope, as being an excellent sample of the kind of argument which infidels and skeptics find it difficult to refute, and which tends to reassure the friends of Christianity as little else can. Our contemporary says:

An atheist, in an article in the "World's Work," says: "There is no single helpful thing that the Church does that a body of Free-thinkers cannot do." Perhaps so, but the trouble with the Free-thinkers is that their "helpful" things are all yet to be done. If they had a few "helpful" achievements to their credit, it would go a long way toward backing up their track. Let them transform a few thousand blasted lives, as the Church has been doing all along; let them gain a reputation for comforting the bereaved and the dying; let them send a few of their choice representatives to burn out their lives in Africa and China or some other non-Christian land for the saving of benighted natives from ignorance and wretchedness; let them supply a few orphanages and hospitals and other institutions of mercy and charity; let them build temples where the people may go and find spiritual refreshment, encouragement for their life struggles, inspirations for their tasks, and healing for their souls—let them actually do a few of the things the Church is doing, and we will be more willing to listen to what they have to say.

Amid the distractions and confusion resulting from theological disputations, it is reassuring and comforting to think of Christ simply as our Divine Evangel, the One come down from heaven to save his people from their sins.

"In the beginning God made the heavens and the earth,"—so also God ought to be in the beginning of the life of every child. And not in the beginning only,—he ought to be growing up with the feeling that God is as indispensable to his life at all times as food is to the body.

Well may we pause to ask what are the meanings of Easter, for they are great and wonderful, and they would shame the world in its frivolous celebrations.

The question that troubled Pilate must be faced by every human soul, and how we dispose of it is a serious matter. For what we do with Jesus will determine what he will do with us.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother A. V. Kimmell records the passing of another Elder from the membership of his church—in the person of Brother Basil R. Gerhart.

Many of our church schools will soon be planning for their Daily Vacation Bible Schools. It is not too early now to begin thinking about it. Prof. Stuckey's page gives some suggestions this week.

As the "dead-line" hour for copy arrived the following announcement came to our hand and we enclose it here: "The Saint James Brethren church near Lydia, Maryland, will celebrate the Holy Communion on Sunday evening, April 21, at seven o'clock. Neighboring Brethren are invited. W. S. Baker, Pastor."

Shipshewana is a going concern. That is evident from Brother A. T. Wirick's communication this week. The equipment described is such that the leaders do not hesitate to urge a large attendance and to press their invitation beyond the borders of Indiana. He also appeals for added financial support in the development of the institution.

From Carleton, Nebraska, comes a report of progress under the pastoral leadership of Brother W. R. Deeter. The revival conducted by the pastor, with the assistance of his wife as song leader, resulted in twelve confessions, and seven additions to the church. The attendance was good and continuous notwithstanding the severe weather during the meeting. The various departments are mentioned as being active and going forward.

A report of the receipts of the offerings for the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, is given this week by Brother Henry Rinehart, the treasurer of the Home Board. The offerings reported indicate that the commendable interest that was built up through the vigorous propaganda efforts on the part of our lamented Brother Orion E. Bowman, has been well sustained. Of course the churches reported do not represent the limit of interest. Many others doubtless have delayed the offering they fully intend to send in.

Dr. J. L. Gillin's interpretation of the present-day condition of France and the spirit of the French people in this week's installment of his travelogues is very enlightening and should make for a more sympathetic attitude toward France on the part of those who read it. Also, in France is to be seen, so it appears from this description and from the report of every other responsible visitor of the French people with whom we have come in contact, the awful fruitage of war, both in the destruction of the material and spiritual values, as it is nowhere else in the world.

Brother D. F. Eikenberry reports for the church at Canton, Ohio, a very much enjoyed revival meeting conducted by the pastor, Dr. J. C. Beal. The attendance was large and the interest keen in the Bible instruction. While there were no conversions, yet the membership came out of the meetings with convictions intensified and consecration deepened. The church is rallying to Brother Beal's inspiring leadership in a splendid way. Two new deacons were recently elected, who will doubtless prove worthy assistants to the pastor in spiritual things.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, found reason for encouragement from his visit to the church at Falls City, Nebraska, where his recent canvass resulted in a gift of $3,002.00, which added to the amount previously reported from this church, makes their total gift $5,002.00, and brings the Endowment Fund up to $205,880.20. This splendid church has a history of loyalty to the interests of the brotherhood, and in this case they lived up to their reputation. Brother and Sister Herbert Rowsey are also enthusiastic boosters for Ashland College. We congratulate the church and the pastor on their excellent showing.

A "victory revival" is reported from the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where thirty souls were added to the Lord during a campaign under the evangelistic leadership of Brother F. G. Coleman and Brother C. H. Ashman, the pastor. Aside from the conversions reported, it is said that the spiritual influence on the membership was marked, nearly a hundred having taken a stand indicating consecration or reconsecration. A unique feature of the revival was the service rendered the boys and girls of an orphanage, twenty of whom made confession of Christ. It is needless to say that Brethren Coleman and Ashman proved congenial workmen, as their letters indicate.

One of the most remarkable victories of the Gospel in mission lands that has come to our attention lately is the one reported this week by Dr. C. F. Yoder. Eight years ago the town of Realico, Argentina was so bitterly hostile to Christianity that in three days' efforts our missionaries were able to sell only one New Testament and one Gospel portion, and now the temper of the people has been so transformed by the constant and consistent effort of our workers that more than two hundred now crowd into the small hall to hear the Gospel preached and the whole town is sympathetic toward the work. Their first impression of Christianity was gained from the disreputable Roman priests. The pure Gospel in the hands of consecrated evangelists will win anywhere. But an ignorant, depraved, spiritually-blinded priesthood will lead their followers "into the ditch" of a bitter atheism.

If there is one organization in the church that has done more than another for the comfort and convenience of our missionaries and their labors on the foreign field, that organization is the Woman's Missionary Society. That group of women, along with the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, has been especially busy making bandages for medical work in Africa. This word of instruction about the work comes from Miss Tyson on the African field through Miss Longaker of the Foreign Board's office, that no bandages should be made shorter than six or seven yards. The statement says: "In bandaging ulcers or burns, it is not only trying to the patient, but really dangerous to the patient and the workers to have to stop in the middle of an operation to sew together two short pieces of bandages." Of course a hint to these good women is sufficient.

Prof. Charles L. Anspach, dean of Ashland College, left on Tuesday of this week for a sojourn of five weeks at Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he will complete the writing of his dissertation for his Doctor of Philosophy degree. He has completed every requirement for this highest of scholastic degrees except the finishing of his thesis, which he has found difficult to do at Ashland with such a heavy and constant demand on his time. We take this opportunity of congratulating Brother Anspach on this attainment, and upon the very honorable record he made at the University of Michigan. The brotherhood is to be congratulated on having in its service young men of such ability and training, and has need to be appreciative of the loyalty of such men, who have resisted at great financial sacrifice most alluring offers from other educational institutions. And Ashland College has other young men of splendid parts and training, as well as those educational leaders of many years' experience, whose continued service is cause for gratitude.

The First church of Pittsburgh, through without a pastor, is keeping alive and active under the direction of their splendid local leadership. We received a copy of an invitation mailed out by the acting superintendent, Brother G. M. Garland, of the Sunday school to a special Easter program, and carrying the information that an Easter message was to be delivered by Rev. Edwin F. Shumaker, of the Church of the Brethren.

It is quite possible that if we had perfect information on the matter, we would be able to name practically every church and Sunday school in the brotherhood as having special Easter activities. Some of our church leaders have forwarded copies of their special notices to the Evangelist office, and one feature of special interest is the frequent announcement of a sunrise Easter service. One cannot engage sincerely in such a service without receiving special blessings. A unique "reminder" of such a service is at hand from the church at Falls City, Nebraska, where Brother Rowsey is the pastor. The Ashland church made no announcement of such a nature, but it had special Easter services, having a merged program in the morning and a splendid Easter sermon in the evening by the pastor. The offering for Foreign Missions, we understand, was about three hundred dollars. It may be more till it is all in. The indications are that the brotherhood will make a very creditable showing in behalf of this vital interest. If it keeps up to the highest previous offering, it will be commendable in view of the strained financial situation.

A Sublime Scripture. IV.

By Dr. G. W. Rench

Our last study brought us to the clause, "Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high" (Heb. 1:3). Our great Prophet was not only all claimed for him, but the writer claims he was "the express image of his person." The marginal reading in the Revised has, "the impress of his substance." We are told that the Greek implies that Jesus is the die which stamps the entire being of God, the Father, including his revealed Will to a dying world. But little wonder, then, that John says, "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him" (John 14:7). Yes, "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power" (Col. 2:9, 10). These used to be telling passages for our people when we were denying the right of some men to throw people out of the church for the violation of nothing but manmade rules. And I hate human pronouncements unto this day. A great writer says, "It is Pauls' thought when he says the destiny which God's plan has for man is that he 'should be conformed to the image of his Son,' and the Son is 'the express image of the Father.'"

"And upholding all things by the word of his power." Sublime statement, this, setting forth once more the great fact that Jesus is that Prophet. "Upholding all things by the word of his power." And yet there are men with a smattering of lopsided knowledge who talk long and loud of "the law of the universe," who have never recognized the Power back of all law. Thank God for the great army of scholars who not only recognize effects from which laws are formulated, but they look back of the effects and SEE CAUSES. Some people tell us that the universe is under the control of the laws of nature. They stop there, as though there was nothing else worth thinking about. But what is a law of nature? It is but an OBSERVED UNIFORMITY in the operation of nature. But a law has no power. I was teacher in the public schools. I announced: I have made a law. I will write it on the wall. "No whispering permitted." The pupils could all see it; they could read it. Did that stop whispering? Did it? O joy! if it only would. BUT A LAW HAS NO POWER. Some people imagined that if the eighteenth amendment could be made a part of the national Constitution, then the victory over intoxicating liquors would be won. We are all glad for that amendment is a part of our federal law. But we have learned that a law has no inherent power. The power inheres in the administrative department of the country; in the people who stand back of the law and enforce it. The law is one thing; the strong arm of the government is quite another. The religious press will have to do more than "line up" every four years. A lot of laymen will not be heard from on this question again for about four years.

The astronomer tells us of worlds and systems each proceeding in its exact course through space without deviating a fraction, year in and year out, and how the slightest variation in their course would result in a wreck of worlds. We have all asked what prevents such a wreck. "What makes these planets stay in their places," we cry out in our haste. The astronomer replies, "I trace these worlds in their unerring track, I note the laws which obtain. But the power that holds these worlds in their places is the mystery of nature, the riddle of the universe." But the author of our sublime scripture says I know what guides these worlds in their exact course; I can answer your question. It is this: Jesus "upholding all things by the word of his power." Yes, God said in the beginning, "Let there be light. And there was light." God not only created the world, but he is still in his world controlling and directing it. "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive honor and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created" (Rev. 4:11). "And he is before all things, and by him all things consist" (Col. 1:17). "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not" (John 1:10). Yes, sir; the author of the Hebrew letter meets the issue squarely. The first decisive battleground between materialism and Christianity is clearly defined. "God has spoken," says the writer to the Hebrews. "God has not spoken," says the materialist. A great writer said concerning the battle of wits at Dayton, Tennessee, where Bryan laid down his life, "It is the age-old struggle between those who hold to a revelation, and

Life a Poem

By C. F. Yoder

How oft I have longed to be writing and turning my thoughts into song,
When here come the beggars and peddlers interrupting me all the day long.
And here are the letters, and business, and visits and chores to be done.
I feel like a bird that is fettered and hidden away from the sun.

But the Spirit hath shown me that all things are working together for good,
He says, "You are writing your poem by doing the things that you should.
For life in itself is a poem, the great Master Poet is God.
The duties you do are the colors you add as you faithfully plod.

That moment you gave to the beggar adds a pleasing detail to the scene.
And the time that to business was given is a background of brown to the green.
Yes, even the shadows are needed, and valleys as well as the heights,
For life needs the trials and troubles, and sorrows as well as delights.

More eloquent far are your actions than words that can flow from your pen.
More beautiful far than your phrases is love in your dealing with men.
You are writing a poem immortal, expressed by your life, and at last
All shall read it, when, changed to his likeness, this imperfect earth life is past."
Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

those who exalt the human faculties as the only approach to truth." Modernism has so many ways of striking at the declaration, "God hath spoken in his Son." Sometimes the fist is gloved so softly that you scarcely perceive the blow. Sometimes the effort is nothing but a straddle. Sometimes the effort is to compromise. By keeping the issue in the background, the church door is opened wide so that Jews, Mormons, Unitarians, Christian Scientists, and the out and out disobedient to the Great Commission of Christ are invited to feel perfectly at home among us. This is not essential, and that is not essential, the cry goes; never once measuring the attitude by the plumb-line: "God hath spoken in his Son."

In browsing the other day among my tests on Physical Science I came across the following: "The forces of Nature are strangely linked with our lives. Everywhere a Divine Hand is developing ideas tenderly and wondrously related to human needs. To the thoughtful mind all phenomena have a hidden meaning."

"To matter or to force
The all is not confined;
Beside the law of things
Is set the law of mind;
One speaks in rock and star,
And one within the brain,
In unison at times,
And then apart again.
And both in one have brought us hither,
That we may know our whence and whither.

"The sequence of law
We learn through mind alone;
We see but outward forms,
The soul the one thing known;
If she speak truth at all,
The voices must be true
That give these visible things,
These laws, their honor due,
But tells of One who brought us hither,
And holds the keys of whence and whither.

"He in his science plans
What no known laws foretell;
The wandering fires and fixed
Alike are miracle:
The common death of all,
The life renewed above,
Are both within the scheme
Of that all-circling love.
The seeming chance that cast us hither
Accomplishes his whence and whither."

The Christian Outlook

By N. V. Leatherman

In II Corinthians four, eighteen we have the text that suggests something of the thinking embodied in this sermon: "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." It takes a Christian to understand and at the same time appreciate a text like that. Even today a preacher runs grave danger of losing at least a part of his audience by dwelling upon such themes as contained in the text. The natural man is very reluctant to look at, or consider the unseen. But it is with the unseen in mind that we ask, What is the Christian outlook? By this question we do not wish merely to raise the issue of a Christian's salvation and rewards, interesting though this may prove to be. We do not have reference mainly to his viewpoint as a member of a Lookout Committee; yet that is most certainly involved.

We mean first of all, he is to look out; look out of and away from self. There is no religion or philosophy that so leads a man out of and away from himself as does the Christian religion. Neither is there any need so necessary for the good of man, as the outward look. There is nothing that so enlarges self, paradoxical though it may seem, as for a man to lose himself. That was Jesus' way of expressing it. The story has often been told of the lady whose eyes were failing, who upon search for a cure was advised by her doctor to assume some position where she could watch the distant hills and the beauties of the far off horizon. This she did and her feeble sight became strong again. She looked out and away from herself. The McGuffey-ites will recall the story of the little girl who was troubled about the writing of her first essay. But when instructed by her mother to seat herself by a window in her home, look out and write about the beautiful things which she saw, she did so and upon reading what she had written to her mother was told she had a very splendid essay. Yes, there are powers and abilities within that never develop because of the self complex. We look too much at the things which are seen and not enough at the things which are not seen. The religious leaders of Christ's day, never saw the Christ in him, because they were too filled with the things that to them were perfectly visible. They saw him eating and drinking with publicans and sinners. They never saw him transfigured nor in any degree approaching that glory. They saw the woman wash his feet with her tears and dry them with her tresses. They never saw him as the Virgin born, the ONLY begotten Son of God. And for that matter there are many even today whose eyes are growing more and more feeble towards such a sight of him. They saw him overturn the money changers' tables, drive the sheep and oxen from their temple. They saw him not as their Prophet, as their Priest nor as their King. They saw the same Jesus that Peter, James and John saw; yet these three and other disciples saw the unseen while the religious leaders in their midst saw only the things which are seen. The one saw Christ the Son of God. The other saw him the imposter. The unseen Christ was right before them, yet they never saw him. But that is gospel history. The ubiquitous Jew makes striking the truth here. But all too often I find I am the present application of it. The Jew looked within himself and sought to interpret self, doctrine, philosophy and religion from that viewpoint. We have our stock in trade ideas and ideals of doctrines, philosophy and religion, to all of which we too many times not only ask others to subscribe, but even ask the Bible and God Almighty to conform to them. Why? Because we have the inward look instead of the outward look.

To see the unseen we must look out and up. That is doubtless what Jesus means when he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." THINGS. "For the things which are seen are temporal." "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things before ye ask him." Why worry and be troubled about things which are seen? Look out and up to the things which are not seen, and be lifted out of yourself and up. All our petty quarrels and difficulties are due to the fact that we are living too close to self, living too much with the things that are seen.

Then again in Philipians two, four Paul says, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." These United States of America have made their Declaration of Independence. We have no thought of criticizing that treasured article but we wish to utter a contrasting statement that particularly applies to us Christian people; we do need to make our Declaration of Dependence. We heed all too carefully that trite retort, "You mind your own business and I'll attend to mine." This looking at the things which are not seen will lead us out of ourselves and cause us to be interested in others. A number of years ago General Booth, in sending greetings to his many captains over the world that would be fitting for the Christmas season, hurled this one word over telegram and cablegram, OTHERS. This interest in others will help us to lose ourselves that we might find life. We like to read Van Dyke's "The Other Wise Man," because this Other Wise Man was interested in others. One of the very fine things about the modern missionary movement is its unselfish endeavor to help others to the light of Christ. There may be some missionaries who take up the work from motives not unmixed with selfishness. Yet we are almost ashamed, in the light of their sacrifices to think such a thing. As it has been our privilege to come in contact with our own beloved workers on the field we believe we can truthfully say, that if ever there was an ulterior motive wedged in along with other motives, that dross has been burned away in their fire and zeal for serving others. We remember a criticism made a number of years ago by a young student, saying that our South American missionaries are making no sacrifice. This young man was unwilling to try it. He graduated, took up a pastorate, and then let a young girl break up his home, destroy his ministry in his pastorate and place him forever on the shelf so far as his work in the church is concerned. Today our South American missionaries are sacrificing as they have always been compelled to do in order that the work might prosper. And it is prospering. The critic was motivated by the inward look. Our missionaries have the far away and outward look.

The circumference of our best interests is out. Let us put Christ in the center. Then can we see the unseen. The things which are eternal. Then can we be assured, and then only that we will not be moved along despite ourselves to be swept out with the THINGS that are ephemeral, fleeting, temporal.

On Vows Made in Distress

By H. H. Smith

Vows made in distress are seldom kept. It seems that this has been a fault of human nature from time immemorial. The Greek sailor of old, deeply distressed and frightened during a severe storm, prayed: "O Neptune, save me from shipwreck and death, and when I land safely I will sacrifice a hetacomb (about 100 oxen)." In a little while the storm appeared to be passing and the peril not so imminent, then he prayed: "O Neptune, save me and when safely landed I will sacrifice ten sheep." The storm grew less severe, with its violence apparently spent, and then he prayed: "O Neptune, save me, and I will sacrifice many pounds of dates." He safely landed—but failed to offer any sacrifice whatever.

Several years ago, one of our church papers told the story of an old colored man frantically calling his wife one night: "Mandy, Mandy, get up, judgment day is come, and Gabriel is out here by the straw-stacks—I see him flapping his wings." (What he really saw was his neighbor's mule, with a blanket that was moved up and down by the wind. Under the light of a dim moon it presented a weird sight). His wife said: "Hezekiah, ain't you been praying for Gabriel to come and take you home? What you skeered 'bout?" "De trouble is," said the old darkey,

"dat I'se got jedge Jones' pig in my pen, and I don't know how Gabriel will reconcile dat discrepancy. But if de Lord spar me, I'll surely pay jedge Jones for dat pig de fust thing in de mornin', I shorely will." Just then he looked again, and said: "Oh, shucks! 'taint nothin' but Josh's old mule. But I is gwine to pay jedge Jones for dat pig next year, if de craps are good."

Almost every pastor has known some person, who under great distress of illness or other affliction, has vowed to reform and become a Christian if the Lord would deliver him out of his distress; but when the crisis was safely passed, the vow was wholly ignored. During my early ministry, a reckless young man, who was very ill, said, "Please pray for me, Mr. Smith, that the Lord may spare my life." I replied: "I will pray for you, John, but I don't see how I can consistently pray that the Lord will spare you that you may continue to sin against him as in the past. Decide to give your heart to God now, and I can then pray with a greater faith—that the Lord may spare you that you may glorify him with your life." He recovered, but continued to live as before. Vows made in distress are seldom kept because they are usually inspired by fear and lack that moral quality necessary for high moral conduct. This should teach us that, while a most merciful God will save all who turn to him with hearty repentance and true faith, we should not put too much confidence in death-bed repentance.

Major Stiles, in his interesting volume, "Four Years Under Mars Robert," gives us a fine story of how a soldier made vows when death seemed imminent, only to forget them when the battle-smoke cleared away. He relates it in connection with his account of the great revival at Fredericksburg during the winter of 1862-63, when it is said that more than 500 men professed conversion. "Experience meetings" were often held just preceding the regular service, and these were anything but "dry" affairs. After telling of several impressive "talks" by the soldiers, Major Stiles gives this spicy account of a most unusual "experience":

"And still another—a great, broad-shouldered, double-jointed son of Anak, with a head like the Farnese Jove and a face and frame indicative of tremendous power, alike of character and of muscle—delivered himself of his 'experience' in one of the most graphic and moving talks I ever listened to. He said in substance:

"'Brethren, I want you to know what a merciful, forgiving being the Lord is, and to do that I've got to tell you what a mean-spirited liar I am. You remember that tight place the brigade got into, down yonder at ———, and you know the life I lived up to that time. Well, as soon as ever the Minies began a-singing and the shell-a-bursting around me, I up and told the Lord that I was sorry and ashamed of myself, and if he'd cover my head this time we'd settle the thing as soon as I got out. Then I got to fighting and forgot all about it, and never thought of my promise no more at all until we got into that other place, up yonder at ———; you remember it, tighter than the first one. Then, when the bullets began a hissing like rain and the shell was fairly tearing the woods to pieces, my broken promise come back to me. Brethren, my coward heart stopped beating and I pretty nigh fainted. I tried to pray and at first I couldn't; but I just said, "Look here, Lord, if you will look, I feel I have lied to you and that you won't believe me again, and maybe you oughtn't to; but I don't want to go to hell, and I'm serious and honest this time, and if you do hear me now, we'll meet just as soon as I get out safe, and we certainly will settle things."

"Well, brethren, he did all I asked of him, the Lord did, and what did I do? Brethren, I'm ashamed to say it, but I lied again, and never thought one thing at all about it till one day we was shoved into the very worst place any of us ever was in. Hell gaped for me, and here come the two lies I had told and sat right down upon my heart and my tongue. Of course, I couldn't pray, but at last I managed to say, Lord! Lord! I deserve it all if I do go there right now, and I can't pray and I won't lie any more. You can do as you please, Lord; but if you do— But, no, I won't lie any more, and I won't promise, for fear I should lie. It's all in your hands, Lord,—hell or mercy. I've got no time to talk any more about it. I've got to go to killing Yankees. But, oh Lord!—no, I daresn't, I daresn't; for I won't lie any more; I won't go down there with a fresh lie on my lips; but oh Lord, oh Lord!

"And so it was, brethren all through that dreadful day; fighting, fighting, and not daring to pray.

"But, brethren, he did it, he did it; and the moment the thing was over I wouldn't give myself time to lie again, so I just took out and ran as hard as ever I could into the deep, dark woods, where God and me was alone together, and I threw my musket down on the ground, and I went right down myself, too, on my knees, and cried out, 'Thank you, Lord! thank you, Lord! but I'm not going to get up off my knees until everything is settled between us;' and neither I didn't, brethren. The Lord never held it over me at all, and we settled it right there."

WASHINGTON'S WORRIED WETS

Evidence is rapidly accumulating that the nation's capital "ain't what she used to be." At least for bootleggers and their patrons. Weeks ago the portent of Mr. Hoover in the White House loomed ominously ahead of the liquor crowd. Today, with Mr. Hoover there, their worst fears are being realized.

First, there is the Hoover inaugural. Not in the Administrations of Presidents Wilson, Harding or Coolidge was there any Presidential statement so unequivocally dry as that in Mr. Hoover's inaugural. Moreover, knowing Mr. Hoover, the wets were sure that his policy would not be encompassed with a declaration. Already the machinery is in process of erection which shall have for its purpose the tightening up of enforcement.

Second, there is the Hoover personal attitude. He not only is dry. He expects his associates to be dry. This, evidently, is an attitude that has already had far-reaching results. Mrs. Charles Sabin, Republican National Committeewoman from New York has resigned her post, for the rumored reason that she, as an active anti-Prohibitionist, could not support Mr. Hoover's policy. Mr. Robert P. Lamont, the Hoover Secretary of Commerce has summarily announced his resignation from the Board of Directors of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, stating that he proposed "to play the game with the Administration."

Third, there is the Jones Bill which increases the penalties upon those dealing in or possessing liquor.

The result of this combination of dry events has been to send the price of liquor in Washington soaring to unheard-of high levels. An unprecedented number of bootlegging patrons have determined to "go on the wagon." Drinking is ceasing to be a social necessity.

If two weeks of Mr. Hoover can accomplish that, we look forward confidently to what four years can do.—Christian Herald.

AMERICA HAD 50,000,000 INDIANS IN 1200 A. D.

The peak of America's native population, before the white man's coming, was reached about 1200 A. D., when there may have been as many as 50,000,000 or even 75,000,000 Indians in the new world. This is the conclusion of Dr. H. J. Spinden, of Harvard University, reported in the Geographical Review.

Dr. Spinden's estimates of the people in prehistoric America take into account the Maya, Aztecs, Incas, Mound Builders, Pueblos, and other races scattered over the western world. At present, the Indian population of North and South America amounts to 26,000,000. About 350,000 of these are in North America north of Mexico.

Epidemic disease brought by the white man has been the chief factor in cutting down the Indians. Dr. Spinden says:

"Europeans unloaded upon American Indians a tremendous burden of new infections for which the latter had not the slightest immunity. Perhaps smallpox comes first as an introduced plague and measles second, this latter malady being deadly for the red man. But in the tropics the debilitation and mortality resulting from the introduction of malaria in three types and hookworm in two are heavy factors. There have been great epidemics of several other diseases, including Asiatic cholera. In recent years trachoma has been a burden among many tribes. High mortality among the aborigines has generally followed the opening up of new territories by the white man."

There were few serious disease forms in America when the Indians lived here undisturbed. Dr. Spinden explains this as partly due to the thin scattering stream of immigration from Siberia into Alaska, as contrasted with the thicker settlements of the Old World, and partly due to the fact that the early Americans brought very few animals under domestication to become new sources of infection.—The Christian Evangelist.

SALVATION ARMY DOES AWAY WITH ONE MAN RULE

Upon his election as the head of the Salvation Army, to succeed General Bramwell Booth, who was relieved of his command because of incapacity due to ill health, General Edward J. Higgins announces that one man control of the Army is doomed. In his announcement he also said:

"At present I have no salary at all. I will be paid a sum which the six oldest commissioners will determine from the trust fund founded about twelve years ago, which now amounts to about $70,000. Gen. Booth received his salary from another trust fund set up for the specific purpose of providing him with an income. So far as I know, he will continue to receive that payment."

Miss Evangeline Booth, sister of the deposed commander and daughter of the founder of the Army, who herself had also been prominently mentioned for the command, said, following the election of General Higgins:

"The Salvation Army has passed through the most severe crisis in its history. It has emerged united and more than ever devoted to the international ideals of my father, its founder.

"With the election of our new general, we have resolutely put the past behind us. Now we are seeking only to discover how better we can serve the nations of the world and bring them to the saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"We know no divisions and I am almost intoxicated with joy because I am returning to my beloved American people and public, who have ever been most generous and warm hearted in their appreciation of my past efforts. I shall endeavor to serve them more fully than before, secure in the knowledge of their increased love and affection, assurances of which are pouring in upon me every hour by mail and cable."—The Evangelical-Messenger.

SALVATION ARMY REORGANIZED

The Salvation Army, after a stormy period in which it dealt with the old commander, has succeeded in electing a new general, namely Edward J. Higgins, as new commander of the organization. Miss Evangeline Booth is commander in the United States and its possessions. These two have issued messages of friendship and assurance to their forces throughout the world. Bramwell Booth, aged and infirm, put up a strong fight to maintain himself longer as commander of the army. He was a great leader, organizer, executive, and administrator. However, when infirmities had weakened him, he fought to maintain his place and to continue his authority almost to the bitter end. This organization has its place in our religious life. The new leadership will doubtless support its claims as a providentially guided organization.—Western Christian Advocate.

IMPOSSIBLE BEING ASKED OF MINISTER, SAYS NOTED EDUCATOR

Says Glenn Frank, President of Wisconsin University, "I believe that our modern churches are asking the impossible of the minister." Then, enumerating that he is asked to be a priest, a prophet, a pastor, and a president, he concludes, after explaining each of the above points:

"We have so organized our churches that the ministry calls for a sort of synthetic man, into the making of whom have gone a medieval saint, a carelessly courageous agitator, an expert in mental hygiene, and the hustling head of a business corporation. It can't be done. None save an ecclesiastical Leonardo da Vinci, with a genius for versatility, could fill such a bill. I commend to trustees and to vestrymen St. Paul's assertion of the principle of a division of labor in the tasks of spiritual leadership. 'And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers.'"—The Evangelical-Messenger.

CHURCH WORK BECOMING PROFESSIONALIZED

Says the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

"The decadence of lay activity in the Methodist Episcopal church is a matter of history. As our civilization becomes more complex we are demanding professional service in all departments of the church. We no longer have local preachers nor exhorters nor class leaders in any considerable numbers. We are calling in directors of religious education to superintend our Sunday schools, deaconesses to do our calling, professional musicians to do our singing, and, often as not, we are hiring a retired minister to solicit funds to carry the mounting cost of this professional service. All this is doubtless necessary, but the professionalizing of the church activities is placing the layman in a place of isolation. Our boasted connectionalism is a wonderful inspiration to the preachers, but fails to reach the average layman. When the professional religionist presents the great causes of the church it is hard for him to realize that many of his hearers, including those who no longer read the church papers, do not know what he is talking about, but this is the fact."

And this is true of others besides Methodists. Consider your own church. Is it becoming too much professionalized? Is the layman quitting the job?

"People have acquired power and possession faster than they have developed spiritual power properly to use and enjoy them."—Roger W. Babson.

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Holy Spirit—Read Ezek. 2, entire chapter. Note especially v. 2: "And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me." The voice of God had been heard, but until the Spirit entered, Ezekiel was powerless. The voice of God has called many times to every man, but until the Spirit enters, we are unable to heed; We have no life in ourselves, but are as one dead. It is an awe-inspiring thought, that man is able to resist the entrance of the Holy Spirit; that there are things in our lives which, if persisted in, will keep him out, or limit his power within us. May we, O Father, be ever yielded to the enlivening influences of thy indwelling Holy Spirit!

TUESDAY

The Source of Life—v. 2; read Eph. 2:1-10. "And you hath HE quickened;" "not of yourselves;" "the gift of God." It was the Spirit that set Ezekiel upon his feet. The whole world lies helpless before God, and no power but the Spirit of God can enter into it, give it life, and cause it to stand upon its feet. May that Day soon come! Rev. 22:20.

WEDNESDAY

Chaos or the Spirit—Gen. 1:1-5. God spoke, and his Spirit brought order, light, and life, out of chaos and darkness. The same thing happens in the life of every believer. Also, when men deliberately reject the work of the Spirit, whatever of order or life they may previously have possessed reverts to chaos. This is exemplified, on a national scale, in the recent history of the God-hating, Spirit-rejecting Soviet republics. God preserve our own country, both as individuals and as a nation, from a like fate! Read Rom. 1:28, 32.

THURSDAY

The Spirit and the Word—v. 2; read John 16:1-15. When the man of the world does read God's word, it is, for the most part, a meaningless jargon; but when the Spirit enters, we can both hear and understand the word. Compare John 16:14, and 1 Cor. 2:14. There are those who think the Spirit is to be sought after as an end in itself; let us, rather, pray that he will show us the hidden things of God's word!

FRIDAY

The Work of the Spirit—vs. 3, 4; read Matt. 9:1-13. Rebellious, transgressed, impudent, stiffhearted—these are some of the words God used to describe the children of Israel; yet to such people as that God sent his messenger, with a, "Thus saith the Lord God." Praise God for his "so great" salvation. Read Hebrews 8:10-12.

SATURDAY

Sent of God—vs. 5-7; cf. John 1:6, 7. It is true that God commissions some in a special way to bear witness of him; nevertheless, every Christian has been commissioned to do that very thing. The whole history of the apostolic church bears witness to the fact that the Great Commission was not for the apostles only, but for every believer. This commission did not promise either success or prosperity; rather, it definitely promised misunderstandings and hardship. But through it all there was to be the blessed sense of being God's messenger, with the assurance of his constant presence—"Lo I am with you always!"

SUNDAY

Partaking of the Word—v. 8; compare John 1:14, and John 6:51-53, partaking of the living Word. The truths of God must not merely be understood with the intellect; they must actually be assimilated and become a real part of our spiritual selves, providing life, and strength. Referring to Christ, the living Word, let us on this, his day, partake of him, that we may have life, and have it more abundantly. This day, and every day, may thy Holy Spirit enter in, in his fullness, and set us upon our feet, enabling us to do thy bidding, according to the fullness of thy will, that we may ever have the assurance of thy presence. Amen.—T. C. Lyon.

The Cradle Roll

How Even the Weakest Church Can Have and Efficiently Operate a Successful Cradle Roll

By Phebe A. Curtiss

The Records

A permanent record should be kept, also, of the baby's name, the date of birth, residence, parents' names, date of promotion to Beginners department (when four years old) or the removal. This record may be kept in a loose-leaf book, in an indexed card-box, which are both in the market, or the one in charge may contrive some plan of her own, but the permanent record of some sort is a necessity.

When the child is promoted to the Beginners department, a Certificate of Promotion should be given.

The Standard Publishing Company has a fine assortment of the certificates and cards, and all other supplies that may be needed. This company puts out a number of different kinds of certificates. There are several sets of the birthday cards, suited to the child at one year of age, two years and three, and appropriate for boys or for girls. Then, there is a set of birthday post-cards and some greetings, which are more elaborate. This company has one wall-roll lithographed in gold and colors, with little cards ready to paste on, for holding the names. Another roll is in the form of a cradle, with the cards to be attached in the same form. One other is called the "Perfect Motherhood Roll," and is very artistic indeed. Different styles of record cards, enrollment blanks, messages for different occasions, transfer cards, offering-envelopes, money-boxes, and, indeed, everything that can be thought of by which to further the work can be purchased from them.

Other church supply publishing houses pursue the same method, and present for use in their schools all sorts of attractive supplies for this interesting department.

Cradle Roll Children in School

It used to be thought quite a wonderful thing when a child started going regularly to Bible school at four years of age, but, since the Cradle Roll has been playing its part, the children start much earlier. It is no uncommon thing in any school today to find a group of tiny boys and girls, only two or two and a half years old, who come, with a degree of regularity, to the session of the school. These children are really too young to be under even the slight restraint necessary in the Beginners department, and too young to be interested in the lessons used there, simple and beautiful as they are.

To meet these conditions, the modern school plans to keep these littlest ones in a group by themselves, even though there be very few of them. By doing this, they may be dealt with much as they would be in their own homes. A set of lessons to extend through one year—"Object Lessons for the Cradle Roll,"—has been skillfully prepared by Mrs. Frances W. Danielson, and published by the Pilgrim Press, Boston, Massachusetts. These lessons are about the every-day supplies and comforts which enter into the life of the child, but each one is traced to God. The supplies prepared for use with this book in the Cradle Roll class are as follows:

The book—"Object Lessons for the Cradle Roll."

"Programs for the Cradle Roll Class" (pamphlet).

Nest of blocks, with pictures to illustrate lessons.

Objects—a box containing a cotton boll, a head of wheat, flax, wool and a cocoon.

"Home Stories"—Fifty-two (four-page) leaflets, punched for binding, containing the stories and pictures, with suggestions to the mothers for home teaching and occupations to correspond.

Covers for these "Home Stories" on heavy paper, punched for binding, so that the stories may be preserved in permanent form.

These are all prepared by the Pilgrim Press, but they are also for sale by all denominational publishing houses and by all firms who deal in Sunday school supplies.

The Vacation Bible School

Published by the Standard Bible School Forces

The Vacation Bible School is no longer an experiment. It has come to stay. By actual experience we have come to know what is needed and how the needs may best be met.

When the School Meets

The Vacation Bible School meets five days each week, from 9 to 11:30 A. M., usually beginning the first Monday after the Fourth of July and continuing five weeks.

Teachers and Organization

Sometimes the teachers are paid, sometimes not, and necessary moneys are raised in such ways as seem best in the light of local conditions.

The school is organized in three groups, with a teacher for each group. For the handbook it is desirable to have an extra teacher, preferably a man for the boys.

1. The Kindergarten group (ages four and five).

2. The Primary group (ages six, seven and eight).

3. The Junior group (ages nine and over; limit to be determined by teachers).

The teachers may be the minister, his assistants, Bible school teachers, public school teachers, teachers from local or neighboring colleges, college students, or other persons who may be available.

Books on the Cradle Roll

Several books have been written to give suggestions for carrying on the Cradle Roll work; some of them are as follows:

Cradle Roll Manual. By Katherine Williams. A discussion of Cradle Roll work, the superintendent and her duties, the organization and care of this department, and a program for Promotion Day. Published by The Standard Publishing Company.

The Cradle Roll Department. By Elizabeth Sudlow. An exhaustive consideration of the Cradle Roll work in all of its phases, with practical plans and suggestions for making it an effective department. The Westminster Press.

How to Conduct a Cradle Roll. By Mrs. Phebe A. Curtiss. Treats of the organization, equipment and management of the Cradle Roll department, and gives practical suggestions for special days—Cradle Roll Day, parties, mothers' meetings, etc. Published by The Standard Publishing Company.

The Cradle Roll of the Church School. By Lucy Stock Chapin. Chapter headings: "The Baby and its Mother;" "Cradle Roll Standard;" "Organization;" "Equipment;" "Ways of Working;" "Lessons for the Cradle Roll;" "Special Days;" "Cradle Roll and Missions;" "Helping the Mothers;" "Children's Week." Published by the Pilgrim Press.

Ways of Working in Cradle Roll Department. By Daisy D. Stevenson. This is in pamphlet form and contains suggestions for personal work, programs for special days, birthday services and party plans. In this publication is found a plan for a party which will fit into each month of the year with appropriateness. It also presents some patterns for souvenirs and invitations for such parties. Published by the Christian Board of Publication.—From The Standard Bible School Worker.

The Purpose of the Vacation School

There are many children in most communities that receive no religious instruction whatever, and there are many others that do not receive enough. The purpose of the Vacation school is to add to the religious training of all the community's children by presenting Bible stories and teachings and related subjects so attractively that the children would rather attend the school than not. The school may be conducted by any one religious body, or by all the Protestant people of a community cooperating.

How the Standard Vacation School Text-books are Unique

1. All book materials necessary for the work of each teacher are to be found in the one book provided for that teacher.

For instance, the teacher of the Kindergarten group has in her first-year book everything she needs in conducting each day's entire program in detail. Music, Bible stories, plans for Bible expressional work, games, handwork patterns—in fact, everything. The teacher of the Primary group is also thus completely equipped in one book, and so likewise the teacher of the Junior group.

2. The work provided in each book is closely related to the Bible, and all expres-sional activities are made to enhance Bible knowledge, rather than attract attention away from the Bible.

3. The mechanical make-up of each book, the large pages, the large, clear type, the illustrations, programs and songs add to the uniqueness of features already described.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for April 14)

II. Hezekiah Leads his People Back to God

Scripture Lesson—2 Chron. 30:1-27.

Printed Text—2 Chron. 30:1-9, 25-27.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 145:8-17.

Golden Text—Jehovah your God is gracious and merciful.—2 Chron. 30:9.

Introductory Note

Hezekiah, whose name means "strength of Jehovah," was the good son of a bad father. His wife's name was Hephzibah, "the delightful." Is. 62:4. The inspired epitaph of this God-honoring king is given in 2 Ki. 18:5. He was true to God, so God was true to him, 2 Ch. 31:21. Hezekiah came to the throne in sad times. His father Ahaz had wrecked the nation spiritually and politically. The neighboring kingdom of Israel was so morally rotten that the Lord suffered it to exist for only six years after Hezekiah began to reign over Judah. Judah was also given to gross idolatry, and seemed likewise about to perish in the midst of enemies. A pathetic picture of the times is given in Is. 1:7-9. To gather the entire record of what Hezekiah effected in bringing back the kingdom to God and prosperity, read 2 Ki. chaps. 18-20; 2 Ch. 29-32; Is. 36-38.—Needham.

In the very 1st month of his reign Hezekiah. In the very first month of his reign Hezekiah was old. He frankly told the priests and Levites that in his opinion all their national woes had come from their neglect of Jehovah.

The reform began with the purification of the priests and Levites themselves. Then came the cleansing of the temple, which was filled with dust and dirt from the long neglect it had suffered. This took two weeks of hard labor. After this the chief men of Jerusalem with the king offered the sacrifices of atonement for themselves, the city and the nation, and also for Israel, and resumed the regular ceremonies. And lastly the whole people brought in their sacrifices and thank-offerings amidst great rejoicing.

The time for the national passover was past before the cleansing was complete. But Hezekiah felt it right and wise to celebrate the feast in the second month. So invitations were sent by posts, or runners, through both Judah and Israel. For the most part the people of the northern kingdom laughed the messengers to scorn, yet some from at least five of the tribes accepted the invitation and went to Jerusalem (vs. 11, 12, 18), and in Judah it was accepted unanimously.—Adams.

The Passover and Its Time

It will be remembered that the Passover was a celebration in commemoration of Israel's escape from Egypt under the leadership of Moses. This great spring festival initiated what was known as the Feast of Weeks, or a festal season lasting until Pentecost, or a period of fifty days. The Passover celebration began on the fourteenth of the month, Nisan, which was the first month of the Hebrew year, and continued for seven days. The postponement of the Passover was not a presumptuous move on the part of Hezekiah, for in certain cases the law allowed a postponement of the celebration until the second month. See Num 9:10, 11.

For those interested in a more detailed explanation of the significance of the Passover, we quote the following:

(1) It was the anniversary of the birth of the Jewish Nation. (2) It marked the divine favor and protection in preserving their firstborn from destruction. The destroying angel passed over the houses on which the blood was sprinkled, or, as some take it, the Jehovah angel passed over and stood over the door and shut out the destroying angel. (3) It commemorated their salvation from the bondage of Egypt; and therefore of deliverance from the slavery of sin. (4) The sacrifice of the lamb foreshadowed the death of Christ in atonement for our sins, a perpetual memorial of what we owe to him in love and obedience. (5) The Passover was useless unless eaten. Jesus is the bread of life to make us strong in his service. (6) It was eaten with bitter herbs, the type of bitter repentance for our sins. (7) The putting away leaven was the symbol of putting away of all sin and uncleanness from our hearts and lives and homes. (8) It was a type of the unity of the nation—one God, one Savior, one law, one world, one religion and worship, one redemption of the world, one hope of Eternal Life."

God's Call to the Impenitent

Hezekiah's appeal may be taken as a summary of God's call to the impenitent in all ages. (1) It is a call to turn away from everything that is not in accordance with God's will and return to glad obedience to that will. (2) It is a summons to put away pride and obstinacy and to yield to God in a humble and contrite spirit. (3) It is a command to cease from dissension, to forget quarrels, and unite with former brethren. (4) It is an urgent invitation to the services of the sanctuary, that in a common worship all hatred may be lost and the new life of obedience be entered upon with divine help.

(5) It is a solemn warning of God's fierce wrath which will fall on those who refuse the invitation. (6) And it is a promise of graciousness, of mercy, and of all blessings that will come to those who return to Jehovah.

Factors Influencing Hezekiah's Character

It seems strange that Hezekiah, the son of a depraved father, having grown up in a corrupt court, with evil influences on every hand, should have become the good king that he was. Of course no one has to be bad because his environment is bad. He is free to resist the evil and choose the good. On the other hand men who have in their power to help those who are tempted to resist the evil and to make them strong to resist the evil are responsible for the exercise of that influence. And in the case of Hezekiah, there were two important figures who did not fail to do their duty. They were:

1. A Pious Mother, whose name was Abijah, "(My) father is Jehovah," shortened into Abi in the Kings. She was the daughter of Zechariah, and probably her name is mentioned in explanation of his character so contrasted with that of his father.

2. The Prophet Isaiah whose counsel his father refused to accept was probably the tutor and counselor of the young Hezekiah, so say the Jewish Rabbis. These good influences would help the young king to resist the temptations around him, and to see clearly the effects of his fathers' disobedience to God and lapse into heathenism, and yet more clearly could he discern "that it was because God's people had turned their backs upon him that they had been delivered to trouble, to astonishment and to hissing. Before the hour had come that summoned him to the throne his mind was dominated by a fixed resolution to work for righteousness. Wise and fortunate are those who on reaching the threshold of manhood's responsibilities find themselves forearmed with a purpose so thoughtful and sublime." Hezekiah showed himself a wise reformer in doing constructive work as soon as possible, knowing that the seeds of true religion, springing up, would of themselves drive away the poisonous weeds of idolatry. The same principle holds true to this day.

Giving away Gospels

By William H. Richie

Any person, young or old, who gives a Gospel to another who is not a Christian is sowing a seed that may bring forth a harvest of blessing for "the life which now is, and for that which is to come." The message of God's redeeming grace in Jesus Christ as recorded in the four Gospels is what Peter refers to as that which begets new life in one who believes in and trusts Christ as a personal Savior; "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (Read 1 Pet. 1:22-25).

The Spirit of God uses the written record of the Gospels to bring people into a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. When accompanied with a personal testimony as to Christ's sufficiency to save and to keep, and with prayer that this seed may find good soil, it is pretty sure to bear fruit. What better service can young people engage in than to give away Gospels to any who will read and carry them?

To encourage this sort of seed-sowing, to equip any soldier of the cross with "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," the American Branch of the Scripture Gift Mission sends out from No. 119

South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, attractive little pocket Gospels. These are illustrated with four water-colored views in Bible lands; they have "The Way of Life" in the front and also four of the fine old "Gospel Hymns" which every one ought to know. On the back page is a decision-form which makes it easy for the giver to challenge the receiver with the claims of Christ as Savior.

For the past fifteen years thousands of such Gospels have been sent out each month to volunteer distributors who have sowed the good seed in hospitals and prisons, in lumber and mining camps, in homes and schools, in travel and in correspondence.

Would it not be a worthy purpose for the young people of any church or Sunday school, along with their pledge to read God's word each day, to dedicate themselves as sowers of the seed? Not all of us are called or qualified to become preachers if the word; but if truly yielded to the lordship of Christ he will make us to "become fishers of men." This is the great need of the church today; definite testimony for Christ and a radiating interest in the spiritual welfare of our fellow men.

The Scripture Gift Mission of Philadelphia is glad to help any group of young people who will thus set themselves to work at this service. There are many who can afford to pay the cost value of such Scriptures (Gospels at two cents each; Testaments, twenty cents and twenty-five cents each). This is their privilege, but free grants of Scriptures are sent to those who cannot afford to pay for them.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

a sea captain named Nathaniel Carter. Her family strongly disapproved of the match and she was kept almost a prisoner to prevent her communicating with her lover. The story goes that out in the beautiful flower garden of her home she was "armed" up and down the paths and also was "armed" to and from church on Sundays.

These preventive measures were, however, of no avail, for she succeeded one night in letting herself down from her bedroom window, either by a rope or by tying the sheets together. She then ran away with the young sea captain and they were married and crossed the ocean to Virginia, presumably on his ship. He then took her up into the mountains, perhaps to prevent her family from tracing her, and there they made their home.

At first she was very much frightened at the wildness of the forest, and the story goes that she screamed or felt like screaming when she got there.

As the years passed she became the mother of eleven children, and the worker has told me that almost every family in that community now bears the name of Carter.

It is an interesting fact that the church should have found and cared for, after so many years, the descendants of Elizabeth Fair, who had been brought up in the Church of England.

Our readers may like to know the name of the mission and the missionary. It is St. Andrew's Mission, Ada, and the missionary is the Rev. William B. Everett; his post office, Marshall, Virginia. The story was told me by his sister, Miss Everett, and she got it from a great, great granddaughter of Elizabeth Fair.—Rev. Frederick W. Neve, in in "Our Mountain Work."

RAPID DEVELOPMENTS IN NIGERIA

A very interesting letter has just come to hand from Mr. E. F. Rice, a former student of the Moody Bible Institute, who has been laboring in Nigeria, West Africa, for twenty-three years, in connection with the Sudan Interior Mission. A little over two years ago Mr. Rice was led to enter into the north part of Nigeria, which is under French administration. He writes from Zinder as follows:

"I am the only missionary in Colonie du Niger. I hope I will not be able to say this long. I had a companion, but he was invalided home last July. Since then I have been alone. I am working among the Hausa tribe. It is a very large tribe, numbering some seven or eight million people. A man recently visited us who is making a Hausa dictionary for the British Government, and he tells me he has over 30,000 words. You can judge from that what a very rich language this is.

The people are Moslems. I think there are about 500,000 who are real pagans, and several millions who are only Moslems in name. The Hausa is much like a Jew, making a good living wherever he goes. He travels widely and is a great trader. Since the coming of the white man he has gone south among the pagans. It is difficult to find a town north of the Niger of any size or importance where there are no Hausas. They always take their religion with them.

"Perhaps it might interest you to know how this country has been opened up. Twenty-two years ago a bicycle was quite useless. There were no railways, and it took twenty-eight days to get from the coast to Kano. Now one can travel from the coast to Kano by rail in two days. Ten years ago

Realico, Argentina

Realico is a flourishing town of the Pam-pa, eighteen miles south of Huinca Renanco. It has between five and six thousand inhabitants and the elements necessary to make a large town. There are good prospects of locating the Western Railway shops there, with the employment for three hundred more men. It is nicely laid out on modern lines and has a progressive people gathered in from other places.

But Realico was not founded by church people. On the contrary, when the priests came with money to build a church the people objected, and the workmen refused to build. When Brethren Sickel and Zeche visited the place with the Bible coach on its first trip eight years ago they found such a sentiment against Christianity that in three days' work they only sold one Testament and one gospel. Brother Zeche actually cried over the disdainful spirit of the people.

However, subsequent visits were made and a mission was begun nearly two years ago, in which Brother Yett also helped during his stay in Huinca Renanco; but Brother Zeche has done the most, and now may weep for joy, for a change as from night to day has come over the place. On my recent trip among the churches I spent a week in Realico and everywhere we went along the streets Brother Zeche was hailed from all sides and seems to have made friends of most of the people of the town. The hall seats 150 people but at times there are more than 200. More than that the great majority are regular attendants, many of them coming from the farms and market gardens around the town. When I gave the invitation to accept Christ about one hundred grown people stood to testify. When I spoke the next night on working for Christ they stood to signify their desire to work, and when the next night I preached on baptism they again stood to signify their desire to be baptized. We also had a series of children's meetings in the afternoons and at the last meeting there were an even hundred children present, and practically all came forward to promise to follow Jesus. Brother Zeche will now have special meetings to further indoctrinate all and prepare them for baptism as soon as possible. Several of the well to do families of the town attend, and I believe that the believers will imitate the example of Tancacha and provide their own place of worship.

Worthy of mention is the fact that up until recently Brother Zeche had no gift for music. He could not vary his voice or sing a tune of any kind. Now the Lord has given him the gift of song so that he can lead the singing very well indeed. At the close of the meeting Brother Sickel and I ordained him as pastor of the work and this was greatly appreciated by the people. The town has learned that there is a difference between Romanism and the true Gospel and that the difference is in favor of the Gospel. The town that was once most bitterly opposed to our work is now the most promising field we have.

But as these converts are new they will need careful teaching and we ask for special prayers that Satan may not find entrance to destroy the work so nicely begun.

C. F. YODER.

THE ROMANCE OF A MOUNTAIN MISSION

(The following story connected with the mission work being done by the Episcopal church in the Mountain District of the South will be of interest to "Evangelist" readers, because of our own mission work in Kentucky. It gives a suggestion as to the splendid stock from which the Mountaineers are descended.—Editor).

This is the story that has come down from the grandmother of a grandmother at one of our mountain missions. It was told to one of our mountain workers by one of the women in the neighborhood.

It seems that she was told by her grandmother the story of her grandmother's first coming to the mountains and founding a family which has since grown into a community.

This first grandmother was born and brought up in England and was named Elizabeth Fair. She belonged to a family of wealth and good position and had everything that she could wish for that money could buy. She, however, fell in love with when one left the railway at Kano it required from six to ten days traveling by horse or camel to reach Zinder, 150 miles north. Now we can cover the distance by motor in from twelve to fifteen hours. Motor roads have been constructed in every direction, and special cars have crossed the Sahara Desert. An aeroplane was here about a month ago. Places are reached now by motor car in a day or so that formerly were only reached by days, weeks or a month of trekking."

but it was absolutely impossible to detect it in his attitude to the evangelist helping him. Never has anyone given us more liberty, nor could they, than Brother Ashman. He said, "Do not spare me nor my people, say whatever is on your heart."

This pastor has built up a truly great church under the most trying difficulties. I consider that he has the hardest field, from every angle, of any in our denomination. That he has been able to accomplish the fine piece of work that he has is proof that he has constantly availed himself of the Spirit's power and presence.

The Congregation

I do not want to think of that group (and they are in every church, especially in a church the size of Johnstown) that makes no contribution to the spiritual, moral or financial welfare of the church, but to think of that host of the finest group of people you will find anywhere. Indeed, they are "The Finest of the Wheat." Ready to pray; ready to work; ready to sacrifice. What shall we say more?

The hospitality of these people is unsurpassed in my memory. The pleasant times and sweet fellowship enjoyed in these homes will linger with us for many years.

Other Churches

Brother J. Gingrich brought a number of his good people repeatedly to our services. His friendship and help in our meeting was a great blessing to us.

The Christian Home (An Orphanage) under the direction of that fine Christian Matron, Miss Huston, attended every evening of the campaign. Their presence was one of the high spots of the meeting and was a joy and inspiration to pastor and evangelist as they were to the entire congregation.

On several evenings a number of Breth-

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

This church is well known to the readers of the Evangelist for its loyalty to the work of the church.

Several years ago I held a meeting here and on this visit I missed some of the former prominent supporters of the church who have gone to their reward. Men like Sam and John Lichty, Sam Kimmel and Brother Maust, leave a big place to be filled in the church.

One thing that is continually impressed on my mind as I go from place to place and find former stalwart men and women of God absent whom I knew in former years and learn that their earthly life is finished; is the importance of evangelism in securing new recruits to fill the ranks and take the places of these men and women who have gone. THE BRETHREN CHURCH TO SURVIVE MUST BE EVANGELISTIC AND BY ALL MEANS KEEP HER OWN CHILDREN.

The Falls City church has always been a loyal supporter of Ashland College. The pastor, Brother Herbert Rowsey, and his wife are both Ashland graduates, who with Brother Frank Lichty, a member of the Board of Trustees, gave me every encouragement and aid.

This church is not large, but willing and it is willingness that counts in the work of the church. Whenever I go to a church that is willing to give the aid it is able to give, the work is easy and the result satisfactory.

Brother Rowsey and his wife are doing good work and the members appreciate their service.

I enjoyed my work and stay here and I consider the gift of this people to the endowment commendable. It was $5,002.00. $2,000.00 of this was formerly reported. This report adds $3,002.00 to the endowment dial.

JOHNSTOWN REVIVAL

The Victory Revival at the First church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has passed into history, but the memory of it will linger long, and pleasantly, in the mind of the writer. We found Brother Ashman to be as efficient in preparation for a meeting as he is in the conducting of evangelistic campaigns. The work was thoroughly organized, and the corps of workers was busy, and had been for several days before our arrival. More than one hundred and fifty calls were made upon delinquent members. We worked on the assumption that a meeting to be successful must begin first with the membership.

The Prayer Room

A room was set apart for prayer and arrows pointed the way to this room. There was no leader, no singing or talking, folks found their way there, remained as long upon their knees in prayer as they desired, and then passed quietly into the main auditorium. Scores of people made use of this room each evening and registered the temperature of the meeting. We consider this an improvement over the old method of pre-prayer services. Folks in Johnstown can pray, and what measure of victory gained was due to this faithfulness in

The Pastor

We have worked with a number of pastors throughout the land but with none that gave such unselfish cooperation. Brother Ashman is an evangelist with an enviable reputation and standing in our brotherhood, ren from Berlin drove down for the meetings. It was a delight to renew our acquaintance with these good people.

Brother Dyoll Belote, pastor at Moxham, attended several evenings and took an active part in the service.

On Monday, March 4, we left Johnstown for Uniontown, Pennsylvania, where we were to assist Brother Frank Gehman in a two weeks' meeting.

FRANK G. COLEMAN,
Flora, Indiana.

VICTORY REVIVAL WITH COLEMAN

For the first time, it was our privilege to labor with Brother Coleman in a revival, which was conducted in the First church at Johnstown during the month of February. The Coleman and the Ashman worked together. We found him a most congenial and spiritual fellow-workman in the Lord. The three weeks he spent in our home were days of blessed fellowship in Christ.

Sermons

His sermons were mighty messages, ringing absolutely true to the Bible, lifting high standards of righteousness in living, and leading the yielders to a closer walk with Christ. Fearlessly and without partiality, he "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God." No strings are ever put on the pulpit in the First Brethren church, either to the pastor or evangelist, as long as the messages ring true to the Word of God. Brother Coleman exercised this liberty and gave "unto saint and sinner" the messages they needed.

A Revival

First of all, this meeting was a revival! Just a few less than a hundred of the members came forward as an expression of either consecration or reconsecration. The spiritual tone of the church was made more spiritual. There was a renewed interest and zeal. This has been demonstrated by the large audiences we have had at the Sunday services and prayer meetings since the close of the revival. It was a VICTORY REVIVAL.

An Ingathering

It was also an Ingathering of souls. 30 members have been added to our church family. This is a victory. Our field is kept well gleaned here. We have had a Victory Revival each year for the last ten. Several years, two. We stress evangelism at every opportunity and use special days for ingatherings. An evangelist finds "close picking" here. 30 new members represents a real victory.

Christian Home

In our city we have a Christian Home for boys and girls. It is supported locally by contributions from various sources. The boys and girls are usually in our morning church service. Twenty of them made confession during the revival. We have baptized many of these, after instructions were given. They do not become members of the church until they become sixteen years of age. We are glad to lead them to the Lord and into Christian baptism, although they do not become members of our church. Brother Coleman rendered a genuine ministry to them. They are under wonderful Christian supervision at the Home.

Etc.

Yes, there are many other items we could enumerate which contributed to this Victory Revival, the music, finances, etc. But, space forbids. We had a "season of refreshing from the Lord." We thank the Flora church for loaning us their pastor.

We praise the Lord for the splendid contribution Brother Coleman made to our individual experiences and church life.

CHARLES H. ASHMAN, Pastor.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

As there has been no report from this church since the revival services held January 20th to February 10th, I thought that perhaps a short letter might be of interest to some of the readers of the EVANGELIST. We were somewhat handicapped on account of some very, very severe winter weather,—very cold, plenty of snow and drifted roads. Yet the interest shown in the meetings was indeed very fine, not only by our own members, but by many members from other churches attending. The average attendance for the two weeks was ninety-seven. In the Bible reading campaign we find that 1386 chapters were read, making an average of 99 per day.

Rev. W. R. Deeter, under whose leadership the services were conducted, gave us some excellent cartoon-pantomimes illustrating some religious subjects, thereby impressing them very forcibly upon our minds. The choir was very ably directed by Mrs. Deeter, with orchestra accompaniment each evening, using our new song books just recently purchased.

There were twelve confessions during the meeting, all young people. Seven have been baptized and received into the church. Four will go to other churches. One is undecided. There were three received into the church at Christmas time.

The work in general has been progressing nicely under the able leadership of Rev. Deeter and wife. The Sunday school is making progress and has the distinction of being officered almost entirely by women. The Junior Christian Endeavor is gaining in attendance under the leadership of Mrs. Sadie Becke. The Senior Christian Endeavor Society is a good live one. The S. M. M. Society is quite active through the twelve months of the year, and I am informed has the largest membership in the district. They are doing a good work and have pledged their bit to the Endowment Fund.

And so we are striving to go forward in his name and for the cause of the church.

H. J. MILLER, Church Secretary.

CANTON, OHIO

Since Dr. J. C. Beal took full charge of the Brethren church in this city, there has been noticeable progress along the line of Spiritual understanding and service. During the holiday season he conducted a study on the parables of Jesus which proved rich in instruction.

On Sunday, February 17, Brother Beal began a revival meeting in the Canton church. There is no doubt but that this meeting, in a number of respects, was the most unusual ever held by this church.

First, the attendance broke all former records. The very first Monday night the house was full. The next night, in spite of snow, was just as largely attended. The crowds varied in numbers very little excepting two or three nights the last week when the weather was very disagreeable.

Then another unusual feature was the messages delivered by the pastor. Considerable time was given to Christian doctrine and dispensational instruction. This brought and held the people. Dr. Beal is a man of deep conviction and is Biblically informed above the average preacher. Thus, he compels his hearers to feel the source of Authority.

Another feature was the lack of attendance of the unsaved. With all the large crowds, yet the unsaved, so far as confessions goes, were very much conspicuous by their absence.

But the most remarkable fact incident of the whole meeting was that notwithstanding the unusually large attendance, the great power of the sermons, the subject matter presented, and the many evidences of interest, of deep conviction and of the presence of the Holy Spirit, yet there was no public confessions. However, we do have the consolation that the congregation came out of the meetings with a changed attitude on some very fundamental teachings of the New Testament. Instead of being lifted up to the surface of emotionalism, we were plunged into the depths of divine revelation, by which we were not only chastised and reprovved, but were also awakened and greatly encouraged. Many expressed themselves to the fact of renewed joy and faith.

During January Dr. Beal was in Illinois holding Bible lectures and preaching. In his absence the pulpit was supplied by the writer of this report.

The first Sunday in February the congregation elected two deacons. F. B. Lindover and S. W. Link were chosen. This election was conducted fully along the lines of New Testament teachings. No official board came with recommendations, neither was there any nomination. Instead, after much prayer and instruction, each member voted by paper ballot their own personal choice as they felt was the will of God.

All the auxiliaries of the church are in full swing.

The Sunday school is maintaining its standard. The W. M. S. holds regular meetings and is busy at work, while the C. E. is very active and soon intends to organize an intermediate society.

HENRY RINEHART, Treasurer.

BASIL R. GERHART

Elder Basil R. Gerhart was born in Terra Haute, Indiana, August 30th, 1850. Here he grew to young manhood and at the age of eighteen united with the German Baptist Brethren church.

Soon afterwards he moved with his parents to Illinois and here he met the life partner who is left behind, Amanda Moore, whom he married in Lawrenceville Co., Illinois on June 30, 1872—nearly 57 years ago.

To this union were born 7 sons—one, Menno Stoker, having died in infancy—and the other six surviving and are here present today and privileged to act as their father's pall bearers, viz., Ira J. of Hemet, Geo. St. Clair of Tracy, California; Roll Robert of San Pedro, California; Quinter L. of Tracy, California, and Ray of Pasadena, California.

Always a farmer and for 40 years a minister of the Brethren church, Mr. Gerharts' activities have taken him as a resident into many States—Nebraska, 5 years; Illinois, 10 years; Kansas, 2 years; Oregon, 1½ years; California, 33 years, mostly in Orange County, but 8 years in Hemet.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerhart had returned with some of their sons to Hemet only about 2 months ago to assist in the development of a ranch here.

Ever ready to help even at sacrifice of his own interests, Basil R. Gerhart was loved and respected by all who knew him.

Cared for tenderly during the past several weeks of illness by his loved ones, and joyfully expressing his confidence in the Master whom he had so long served, the end came peacefully at the residence on South San Jacinto Street, Hemet, at 8:30 on Wednesday evening, March 13, 1929.

Brother Gerhart became an Elder in the Brethren church soon after it was organized. He was never an active pastor but assisted faithfully as an Elder in the congregation where he held his membership. It was the writer's privilege to be his pastor in three different congregations and we always found him humble and willing to be used in any way that would be helpful. The funeral was held at Hemet, California, and the burial was at the same place.

SPRINGTIME AT SHIPSEWANA RETREAT

After listening to fine sermons by Dr. Frederic Shannon over the Radio, we were made happy to have had a place in God's beautiful world. And looking out, we could see the sun shining brightly overhead. The birds have come back in large numbers and are singing among the trees, whose buds are swelling, while the squirrels are playing and leaping from tree to tree. The pansies are blooming and the tulips are unfolding—all reminding us that summer is coming with all of its joys and activities and we must keep busy getting things in shape for your comfort, when you come up to enjoy the helpful program the committee is preparing for you.

The hotel is about ready for the roof. This building is to have a lobby 16x26, with a fireplace at one side, a dining room 17x28, a kitchen, bath room, thirteen sleeping rooms, and a porch 10x48, facing the lake. It will also have a room for the store and refreshment stand facing the park to the south.

We seem to be gaining new friends and helpers every day. Our folks are beginning to see the need of this beautiful place. One man said if a small church like ours needs a college, an Old Folks Home, and Mission Boards, then we need our own conference grounds and summer training school. Another brother said, "If we had done this twenty-five years ago we would be a stronger church and a more united brotherhood today."

It may interest some to know that at the present time, fifteen preachers, two college professors, four school teachers, three doctors, one nurse, two undertakers, three bankers, three barbers, eleven merchants, two brick masons, three salesmen, six farmers, one railroad man, one college coach, one contractor, one accountant, and about a dozen others, own property here. We just sold three lots in the south part of the park, and now have four buyers ready to take lake front lots as soon as we can get them laid out. I will say here, if there are others waiting for lake front lots you better see me at once and make your selection. For I feel this is about your last chance to get these lots at a low price.

It has surprised every one to see the steady growth and rapid improvement here. In the past four years we have bought about $5,000.00 worth of real estate and spent $5,000.00 for improvements, and at the present our holdings are easily worth $30,000.00 with an indebtedness of $3,000.00. And we are going to ask our friends to help pay this old debt, so we can go on and make new improvements. You can help by your gifts, or by the purchase of a lot. The trustees have decided to make no more improvements until the debt is paid. Many have wondered how all this property was acquired and the improvements made, when many churches have never raised a cent for this work and only about seven hundred dollars has been raised by pledges in the last four years. I will tell you. We felt this work would appeal to most of our folks, so we went ahead and when our folks came and looked the place over they left the money to pay for it. I have had them give money and say, This appeals to me; you have not been fully understood. Count me as a friend and booster from now on. So we are making new friends from year to year. And this gives me an opportunity to tell you that we need beds and bedding, dressers, chairs, oil stoves, etc., for the hotel and are expecting our friends to give them. If you want to furnish a room we will put your name on the door. Now all get busy and notify Mrs. U. J. Shively of Nappanee, Indiana, head of the committee, what you can do, before she gets after you. If you can't do much, do a little and do it now. I also wish to say that the pledges made at the Goshen conference are due and needed to pay for the work being done on the hotel. May I ask all our boosters to keep the coming Bible conference and training school before your churches and young people. Begin to plan now and see how many you can bring from your church.

Yours for a bigger and better Shipsewana Brethren Retreat.

FRANCE TEN YEARS AFTER THE WAR

I have not had time yet to sum up for you my impressions of France. I told you that so far as Italy was concerned it seemed to me that great changes had occurred there in twenty years. In France likewise it appears to me that great changes have come. But they are changes for the worse while those of Italy seems to be improvements. I must be more specific.

1. It must not be forgotten that I am speaking chiefly of France as seen in Paris. I have not had time now any more than twenty years ago to visit the various cities of France. But judging by Paris there is evidence of great impoverishment. That evidence is to be found in the poor wearing apparel seen on the people on the streets. Then I thought the Parisians the best dressed people in Europe. Today they are wearing shoddy in such quantities that one notices it.

2. The number of people who are to be seen early in the morning going through garbage cans, and waste paper boxes to get what of value can be salvaged there impresses one as in no other European city I have visited. 3. The condition of the city streets, and if the parks and other public institutions. Everywhere there are signs that the government has not the money it should have to keep the places clean and in good condition.

Now, when one looks over the smiling fields of the country, and from a distance at the villages through which one passes, at this time of year all looks well and prosperous. However, I am told that the country people are having a hard time to make things go as they should for the economic and social welfare of their communities and their families. At this time of year France is like one great garden. Even in the regions, where ten years ago the tide of war swept like a destroying angel and plowed the fields with great shell holes, and scattered over them the poison gases, Nature through ten years has healed in a wonderful way the scars of war. But one has the feeling that France has been terribly hurt. Underneath the smiling countenance which she turns to the world is secret pain from a wound which only time, if anything, can heal.

It is no wonder that France gives one that impression. Look at her money. Where before the war her franc was worth 20 cents in gold, today it is worth not quite four. The prices of everything mounted sky-high because of this decreasing value of the franc, while wages were slower to rise. Moreover, with a monetary unit which was gradually decreasing in value, nothing was stable. A man was afraid to buy something today when he might not be able to sell it a month hence for as much as he had paid. The disturbance of the value of the franc upset the whole credit system and hurt business. A man lent 10,000 francs today for a year, and was paid back perhaps in the same number, which in the meantime had decreased in value.

While France did not do as Germany and repudiate her internal debt, the upset of the money system was almost as bad. What happened in Germany was that many people who lived on the interest of their money were left with absolutely nothing except the dole which the government gives. In France, the decrease of the value of the franc from 20 cents in 1914 to less than 4 cents in 1928 means that the income from investments has decreased in purchasing power to about one-fifth of their pre-war value. Well, you can easily see that such a situation meant starvation to such old people as could not work and had just about enough to keep them on the interest of their investments. No wonder that the people feel the results of the war in France.

4. This next impression I am about to mention may be entirely subjective, but I record it because I seemed to sense it. I do not think the French people take even their enjoyments as heartily as they did twenty years ago. Their theatres were not filled with the spirit I seemed to find in them then. Even the people you see sitting at the tables on the sidewalk cafes seem to lack that sparkling something which I felt before. It may be that something has happened to me in those two decades rather than to the people of Paris. I can record only my impressions.

I was no expert in the wickedness of Paris when we were there before, and I am not qualified by my experiences this time to set myself up as such. At the time of this visit John and I went to the Begeres Follies, which is supposed to represent about the worst in the way of shows in the city. Of course, whatever coarse jokes there may have been we were immune to because of our ignorance of spoken French. I suppose we saw more of the female body exposed than it would be possible to see in the United States at any New York Revue. But so far as I could judge from the actions of the people sitting around us,—and they were respectable looking people too—they were not very much shocked by what they saw and heard. Of course, they may have been hardened Parisians who were used to such displays. But it was partly their actions which made me feel that the Parisians no longer take their entertainments with the same relish they showed twenty years ago. Moreover, I am not sure that what was seen and heard was any more suggestive than what can be seen at dozens of shows in the larger cities of our own states. I am defending neither. They are silly, and immodest, but one becomes hardened to them, I suppose, if he goes often enough. The point I am trying to make is that the impression I got from the audience was that even these shady shows gave them no shock or thrill. I wonder if that is not a sign of decadence. I am inclined to think it is.

5. France is much more filled with a nameless dread and terror than she was two decades ago. Then she was nearly forty years from the memories of the German invasion in 1870. Besides the sufferings from that invasion were so trivial in comparison with what she suffered in the last war that they were as nothing. Today the memory of what Germany is capable of in the way of cruelty and brutal aggression is lively. She knows that Germany has 60,000,000 to her 30,000,000 people. She also knows that Germany down beneath her apparently cowed appearance is burning with desire for revenge. She knows that she will be menaced before many decades go by with a repetition of her sufferings. Under the gloom of that possibility she lives in terror. Britain and the United States turned deaf ears to her appeal for a compact of mutual protection. We have refused to join the League of Nations, her only hope against aggression. She not only staggers under a load of debt for the last war, but since she has to depend on her own powers to defend her against possible and threatened aggression in the future, she must continue to keep a large army under pay. I did not understand that psychology until I came to France and saw things with my own eyes and read what the newspapers are saying. They do not like the heavy burden that armed peace puts upon them, but they see no other way out of the difficulty. It is a most terrible position to be in. That position also explains why France is developing the ring of small nations around Germany. These nations form what is called the Little Entente. They are furnished with money by France already borne down with debt. Why? Because France sees in them possible allies when the next piece of German aggression occurs.

Whether France is right or not in her assumptions, one can sympathize with her fears. Perhaps we can understand it, if we remember that our hatred of England lasted over 100 years after the last war we had with her. Bill Thompson does not know even yet that the Revolutionary War has been finished. We feared her until we grew strong enough to feel that we could whip her single handed. That was not until the time of Grover Cleveland. Yet, she was over 3,000 miles away. There lies Germany only over the Rhine and her might has been recently felt. No wonder that France lives in fear.

Well, France is in a sad state. Whether she will weather the situation or not only time will tell. But she is a spiritually whipped people. That is new. It represents a vast change. Something has gone from the soul of her people. Something else, less alluring, less challenging, less inspiring, has come in its place. There is a grimness unknown before. There is the lack of that sparkling brilliance which made the Frenchman so different from the Englishman. The soul of France has received a shock which has driven the light from her eyes, put a pallor on her face, and has left a strained and startled look which we have not known before.

THE AWAKENING

*There is a new-made mound upon the hill
Where lie white floral wreaths, unwitting still;*

The last farewell is said, the night falls chill—

And now you understand.

Can home be home without your presence there?

Can roses smell as sweet or be as fair?

Can good of joy be mine unless you share?

But now you understand.

Life's riddle has been solved, the dream made plain;

Forgotten now earth's discord and its pain,

Forgotten too each petty loss or gain—

Because you understand.

*I would not call you back to tread with me
The world's rough road—love must unselfish be.*

The veil for you is lifted, you are free,

For now you understand.

For you the great illusion now is o'er;

The grave you feared is but the open door

That leads to life in God forevermore—

All this you understand.

Heart Throbs of Our Church Leaders

IX. Keep Faith in Man as a Free God-created Spirit

By Prof. L. L. Garber, Litt. D.

The great and good of every age, scholar, saint, and poet, have had a profound faith in man as man. With this faith the great moral leaders of the race have been nurtured, and with this faith the greatest victories for God and man have been consummated.

This faith is passing. The hereditarian fatalist, the infidel materialist, the psycho-determinist have broken the vision of divine sonship and shattered the faith in man as a free, God-created, conquering personality. A noted educator derides the belief in free choice. A famous lawyer proclaims man a machine. A university professor, before a body of learned scholars, prophesies the extinction of this race (born in the image of God), and the rise of another animal race from some later "bab" or chimpanzee. Thus, they have created a new paganism whose gods are Force, Machinery, Power and Luxury, rather than Love, Freedom, Justice and God.

This new paganism, this infidel materialism, must be challenged and overcome by an aggressive Church living the simple Gospel of Jesus, and by a militant Christian Idealism created by a Christian liberal education. These must say to youth, "Close your Darwin, your Huxley, your Wiggam, and reopen your Bible, your Carlyle, your Tennyson and drink anew of the life-giving water. Otherwise some future sage, looking sadly out upon lost, profaned, disinherited humanity will write anew,

"They pass me like shadows, crowds on crowds;
Dim ghosts of men that hurry to and fro,
Hugging their bodies round them like thin shrouds
Wherein their souls have perished long ago.
They trampled on their Youth, and Faith, and Love;
They cast their hope of human kind away;
With Heaven's fair message they madly strove
And conquered, and their spirits turned to clay.
Lo how they wander round this world, their grave,
Whose ever gaping maw by such is fed,
Gibbering at living men, and idly say,
'We only truly live, but ye are dead.'
Alas, vain boast, the anointed eye may trace
A dead soul's epitaph in every face."

WILL the World ever blow up?

Reputable scientists have estimated variously the energy said to be shut up in a single atom of matter, but all agree that it is enormous. They also have suggested the possibility of getting unlimited power if a way can be found to release energy of this kind.

This interesting suggestion has badly frightened a few people who fear that some scientific investigator may stumble upon the secret of releasing atomic power and, being unable to control it, possibly blow up the Universe.

Now comes Dr. Millikan, who probably knows more about the atom than any other human being, and says that we are safe. No way will ever be discovered to release atomic energy, and consequently the world will not be blown up. Some people will sleep more soundly having this assurance from the noted physicist.

But there are some things which not even the learned scientists can do; they cannot guarantee the world from future catastrophe. "The Day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (2 Peter 3:10).

Perhaps this great world cataclysm will be accomplished by the release of atomic power. Who knows? At any rate, we know that God stored the atom with its energy, and he can release it when the proper time comes. Best of all, he can control this tremendous force and direct it toward constructive ends. It will be a better world when he gets through with it. We "look for a new heavens and a new earth." (2 Peter 3:13). The main thing is to be ready.

CLARENCE DARROW'S "Waterloo"

This notorious defender of criminals and unbelief was sometime ago forced to surrender a stolen bond which he had received from a thief as a legal fee. Such is the startling charge made public against Darrow by State Senator Wood of Illinois.

A leading western newspaper, reporting the affair, uses the following headline, "Darrow meets his Waterloo"

The headline is wrong. Darrow has not yet met his "Waterloo." But he will meet his "Waterloo" when he stands at last before a "great White Throne" upon which will be seated the Lord whose very existence and laws Darrow has treated with ridicule. Human cleverness will not win before this final Court. From its judgments there will be no appeal. (Read Rev. 20:11-15).

FOR tomorrow we die"

Sir George Paish, English economist, utters a gloomy prophecy, "I say with the highest authority, and I challenge anyone to deny it, that we are threatened with the greatest financial crisis the world has ever seen ... The greatest authorities in this country and in the United States expect it to come this spring. ... We are not trying to see our way out, we are just dancing. ... We are drinking and making merry for tomorrow we die."

The Christian will hope and pray that this man's predictions will fail. Yet we cannot forget that the Bible also predicts the coming of economic disaster in the closing days of the present age. "And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts saying, A measure of wheat for a penny (A quart of wheat for 20 cents) Rev. 6:5-6.

When the price of wheat goes to $6.40 per bushel, the economists will really have something to worry about.

But the blackness of the night will not discourage those who know the Lord of all. They know that man does not live by bread alone. They know that the Church will escape the tribulation of those dark days. Still further, they know that a better day is coming for the earth when the pinch of economic need will utterly pass away.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

23. Please explain 1 Corinthians 19:29. J. S. Lodi, California.

This is a most difficult passage to explain with the knowledge at our command. Evidence of this is the fact that as many as forty different explanations have been offered. First, permit me to say that if we are not able to positively explain the passage we may be quite sure of some things it can not mean. There is a unity and harmony of teaching in the Bible that excludes much fanciful interpretation. So with respect to the passage under consideration. Nine-tenths of the explanations offered can be dismissed without serious consideration. Let us apply this principle to the passage under consideration.

It has to do with Baptism, or perhaps better, a baptism. Now the New Testament teachings on the subject of baptism are most explicit and unambiguous. There is no excuse for error here. If we let Jesus Christ speak in the Great Commission we have foundation for Christian Baptism. If we hear the Apostles speaking later and study their practice of the Act of Baptism we shall see and know just how those to whom the Lord gave the instructions understood these instructions and carried them out. What now do we find? That invariably those baptized professed personal faith in Jesus Christ and made the act of Baptism which followed an act of personal obedience to a divine command. This consideration alone excludes all forms of SUBSTITUTE BAPTISM such as is now practiced by Mormons. If further evidence were needed that such substitute baptism, that is, the baptism of some living person for one who died unbaptized, is unscriptural and contrary to the practice of the Apostolic church we could appeal to the Fathers. There is positively no evidence that even such a custom existed in the first century and when it is mentioned it is branded as heretical. So Tertullian. I can not believe that Paul would have given his sanction to a custom so contrary to all other teachings on the subject nor that he would have based an argument in proof of the resurrection on such erroneous custom if it existed.

If I may venture some positive suggestions I would say first of all that I think the reference here is to Christian Baptism. Instead of there being a special class I think verse 30 identifies Paul with the "ones baptized in behalf of the dead." So the whole reference must be to the recipients of Christian Baptism. It is clear that the meaning turns upon the phrase, "on behalf of the dead." Many ancient interpreters considered the passage elliptical and rendered this phrase thus, "in expectation of the resurrection of the dead." We may not be willing to make so bold an interpretation. But the truth must lie along that suggestion. The Resurrection was a basic doctrine of Apostolic teaching. All embraced it when they accepted the Christian message. It was in the faith of the resurrection that they became Christians, severed all connections with paganism and in ACCEPTING CHRISTIAN BAPTISM SUBJECTED THEMSELVES TO ALL SORTS OF PERSECUTION which often ended in a martyr's death. Why receive a baptism in the hope and expectation of the glorious Christian Resurrection of the dead if the dead do not rise? This interpretation is in harmony with all other teachings on Christian baptism and makes an effectual appeal as an argument for the Resurrection which is the subject under Paul's consideration.

A faithful friend is better than gold—a medicine for misery, an only possession.—Burton.

ONE THING I ASK

*I do not ask that I may steer
My bark by peaceful shores alone,
Nor that I linger, harbor-bound,
And sail no stormy seas unknown;
I only ask this boon of thee—
Be ever in the ship with me.*

*I do not ask that I may dwell
From din of battle far removed,
For ever feel temptation's force,
Nor ever know mine armor proved;
I only ask through Life's long fight,
Grant me the power of thy might.*

*I dare not pray for any gift
Upon my pilgrim path to heaven;
I only ask one thing of thee—
Give thou thyself and all is given.
I am not strong nor brave nor wise.
Be thou with me—it shall suffice.*

A Growing War Establishment and Peace Pacts

We, being a non-resistant people, and believing in the sinfulness of war, and in the inadmissibility of Christians to engage in war, cannot be indifferent to the trend of events that have to do with the institution of war. We cannot but look with favor upon those movements that are calculated to smooth out the wrinkles in international relations and to put halting strings on rulers and leaders of nations so as to make them less hasty to enter war and more patient and considerate of peaceful methods of settling international differences.

We have reason to thank God for the Paris Peace Pact, ratified by the United States government during the closing days of the last administration, by which pact the signatory nations "condemn recourse to war" and "renounce it as an instrument of national policy." That is in accordance with our belief that the whole system of determining right by violence and destruction rather than by friendly conference and negotiations is fundamentally wrong, unchristian and inefficient. It is satisfying to witness such a universal verification of our faith and such recognition of the essential wrongness of the war attitude and the fundamental weakness of the war policy. It is heartening to have come to a day when the Christian principles of peace and neighborliness have permeated so widely the minds and hearts of men that they are being given international and world application, and when the spokesmen of governments are condemning war as a relic of barbarism and declaring, We cannot afford to fight, for we are one—one in our interests, one in our rights, one in our humanity; we will not fight. And it is with justifiable pride that we remind ourselves that our own beloved country is at heart, and is coming to be more and more so in practice, an outstanding leader in building for a world neighborhood.

On the other hand, we cannot but look with chagrin and disapproval, and even with apprehension on the inconsistency of a great Christian nation like our own preparing with steadily increasing earnestness for war the while it is disavowing any intentions of war and condemning the war policy. There is a little coterie of militarists, strongly entrenched in power, who are insisting on building up an elaborate military establishment. The way to prevent war is to be prepared for war, they tell us. No theory has been more thoroughly disproved than that. In fact, the very opposite is the truth. Nothing so surely guarantees war as being armed to the teeth. Germany in 1914 was an illustration of that fact. No nation was ever so thoroughly equipped for war, nor so completely saturated with the war spirit. Militarism had been woven into the warp and woof of its social, religious, industrial and political life and the people were on their toes for the battle when the occasion came. With less preparedness there would have been more patience and more conciliation, and possibly a world catastrophe might have been avoided. And now we find our military leaders parroting the same silly, time-worn theory—avoid war by being prepared for war. The people do not really believe it, and the government knows it is not true, but the militarists are talking it so loudly and persistently that effective opposition is being cowed into submission. Congress is yielding and the people are not greatly alarmed because they do not understand the magnitude nor the significance of the war program.

Besides the enlarging of the navy by fifteen new battleships which Congress has voted to build, the war department is continually seeking the expansion of our military establishment, and according to a speech by Hon. Ross A. Collins of Mississippi in the House of Representatives, it is gaining its ends. The Regular Army is growing from year to year, he informs us, in officers, enlisted men, and in civilian personnel. "The officers of all classes number 13,305, and the enlisted men, including Philippine Scouts, are 125,250, and to these should be added experts, mechanics of all kinds, and other civilians performing all sorts of work, the total of these being about 60,000, giving the Regular Army a total strength of about 198,555." But the most marked expansion is being realized in the five civilian military organizations, which are being promoted under the National Defense Act, passed by Congress immediately after the war. Says Mr. Collins, "We are confronted with the stern reality that there exists in the United States a military establishment numbering around 700,000 persons, and that it is growing rapidly year by year" which is "as large as any possessed by any other nation," and "at a total cost of $328,338,815." And he quotes Lieut. Col. P. S. Bond, outstanding military leader and authority, as setting what he considers an adequate goal for the military establishment at about a million and a quarter to nearly two million persons. And gradually, faster than we realize, we are working toward the goal.

Mr. Collins closed his speech by asking: "Are we not proceeding along ways proven wrong? Are we not laying the foundations for future trouble? Can we carry on as we are going today without provoking our neighbors to follow after us, and will not the day of reckoning come to us as it has come to others? We complain of the military and naval preparedness of our sister nations, while at the same time we are lulling ourselves into the stupid notion that our conduct is different from theirs. Fellow members, is it not about time to correctly interpret our own actions? We are fooling no one but ourselves."

Here is a man who, by virtue of his committee chairmanship in the House, ought to be able to speak with authority, and he sounds a warning that ought to stir the heart of every civilian who believes in peace, and especially every Christian who is convinced of the wrongness of war and believes strongly in the principles of peace. To oppose this militaristic program will bring upon one the scorn and reproach of those who calculate patriotism in terms of the acclaims given to military propaganda. And he must bear the dub of "pacifist," and Major McNair, of the Purdue University Reserve Officers' Training Corps, said, "If a pacifist is one who believes that war is unnecessary and preventable, then pacifism is a menace." The name "pacifist" is really a good one, however, but being called a few names will matter not. The cause is worthy of any embarrassment or sacrifice involved in supporting it. The patriotism of peace is no less exacting than the patriotism of war. So let us face the issue and insist that if we would have peace we must prepare for peace and not for war.

Brother E. M. Riddle, secretary of the Summer Activities Committee of the Shipshewana Brethren Retreat, sends us a program of activities beginning with the Indiana Ministers' meeting on May 6th and concluding with a Sunday school and preaching service on September 1st. Two outstanding events are the Young People's Training School opening on July 14th and the Bible Conference opening on July 21st. The program for the ministers' meeting is to be found in this issue.

Brother S. E. Christiansen tells of his visit to New York City where he led Sister Emma Aboud's little group in an evangelistic meeting, which resulted in eight confessions. He mentions several leaders which Sister Aboud has called to the Brethren cause in that city, and it seems that the spirit of sacrifice on the part of those whom she has gathered about her is very marked. The communion service held on the closing evening was participated in by nineteen people.

Word has reached our office that Brother Charles Sensenbaugh, pastor of the church at Ardmore, Indiana, recently closed a meeting in his own church with twenty confessions and four additions by letter. Brother Harley Zumbaugh was the song leader. This is Brother Sensenbaugh's first year of his first pastorate, and this success should be the means of much encouragement to him and his people. The Sunday school attendance has been averaging 152 for several months.

Brother Frank Gehman reports eight additions to the church as a result of the campaign recently conducted in the Uniontown church, Pennsylvania, under the leadership of Brother Frank G. Coleman. There were eight additions to the membership, and an awakening of interest and a deepening of spirituality on the part of the church. This church has gone forward in a splendid way under the consecrated leadership of Brother Gehman and we may expect still further reports of the blessings of God on his labors.

Brother J. L. Bowman writes of his work at Vinco and Munday's Corner, in Pennsylvania, where activities are beginning to show greater life as spring opens up. These are rural congregations and under the circumstances that prevail it is inevitable that the work should slow up during the winter season. Two additions to the membership are reported and others await baptism. Brother Ashman is announced to hold a revival at Vinco in the near future and the pastor will be the leader in a similar campaign at Munday's Corner church.

Brother H. H. Rowsey writes with appreciation of the work of Brother and Sister L. G. Wood in the mission church at Fort Scott, Kansas, where Rev. and Mrs. Rowsey recently led in an evangelistic campaign, and which the pastor has already reported. The evangelist finds in the Fort Scott situation much in the way of encouragement, which is the kind of report that makes the brotherhood feel good over its home mission contributions. Brother Rowsey also reports progress in his own pastorate at Falls City, Nebraska, the various organizations functioning creditably under efficient leadership.

Brother A. B. Cover, pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, reports that an interesting and helpful conference was held in his church, the special speakers for which were Prof. Alva J. McClain and Dr. Courtland Myers. It was the mid-year conference of the Southern California churches. A revival held in that church with Brother A. L. Lynn as the preacher resulted in thirty-three confessions and reconsecrations. Twenty-five of these, we understand, confessed Christ for the first time. The day of victory was deferred to the last Sunday when twenty-two made the confession. This success will doubtless mean much in the way of added encouragement and strength to the First church.

Brother Sylvester Lowman, pastor of the church at Portis, Kansas, reports progress in the various departments of the work. The Sunday school especially has experienced a revival of interest. The year of 1928 saw a new high average of attendance. On Easter Sunday seven young people were received into the church and the largest offering yet for Portis was lifted for Foreign Missions. Brother Lowman is promoting tithing in his congregation. It would be a fine thing for the church at large if every one of our pastors would accept and teach this means of financing the Kingdom's interests. It seems to us strange that a "Whole Gospel" people should be so slow to accept this teaching of Scripture and the unalterable divine principle on which tithing is based.

Dr. J. L. Gillin gives us his last report on his world trip this week, containing some fatherly advice to young folks and recounting his visit to English prisons. For many months he has been sharing with us his observations made in connection with his world survey of prison conditions on behalf of the Social Science Research Council. It has been a very informing series of articles that he has written, and at the same time they have contained much that was practical and inspirational in the way of suggestions. It has been a real treat to follow him around the world and to have had the benefit of seeing things through his trained eyes. A number of our readers have written us expressing their appreciation of his letters. And we wish to bespeak the gratitude of the entire Evangelist family for his service. That is the only pay we can give him, or the only kind he would receive. This service has been voluntarily and freely rendered, and we have heartily appreciated it.

We have just heard directly from Dr. William H. Beachler, pastor of the First Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio, that he is closing his work there on April 14th, and that he has accepted a position with the Associated Chautauquas of Topeka, Kansas, for the spring and summer. Besides giving him a chance for rest and the recuperation of his health, this schedule "will," to quote him, "take me over the west, southwest, and northwest, thus giving me the benefit of travel which I have long desired." Mrs. Beachler will continue to live in Dayton during the summer. As yet, so we understand, they have not fully decided on their plans for the coming fall and winter. It is suggested that they might possibly continue to reside in Dayton and Brother Beachler do some lecturing and supply. Dr. Beachler and his capable wife have done a splendid piece of constructive work during their stay in Dayton, and they leave the church much indebted to them.

Dr. J. C. Beal tells us of his two weeks at Fremont, Ohio, with Brother W. S. Crick and his faithful people. Notwithstanding the difficulty of the field several confessions were received and the church membership rededicated to service. Doubtless we shall have a report later from the pastor, whose leadership among these people is highly commended by the evangelist. One outstanding answer to prayer is reported by Brother Beal. He also tells us something of the evidences of progress in the Canton church of which he is pastor. Reports all indicate that this church is showing remarkable signs of new life. Brother D. F. Eikenberry sent us a brief report in the same mail that brought Dr. Beal's, telling us that "Easter Sunday ... was an unusual day because of the smashing of three records." Those three records were the attendance at Sunday school, which was the largest since dedication two years ago; also church attendance on the same Sunday morning was the largest during the same time; and the Easter offering was "the largest in Canton's history."

PRAY THIS WEEK FOR

The coming evangelistic campaign to be held at Vinco, Pennsylvania, the first of May with C. H. Ashman as evangelist, and J. L. Bowman as pastor.

The evangelistic meeting at Munday's Corner, to follow the Vinco meeting, with J. L. Bowman as evangelist and pastor.

One consecrated young pastor requests prayer for the Editor, and then he very kindly says: "I have been enjoying your part of the Evangelist tremendously." We appreciate the request for prayer, as well as the kind words of appreciation which he wrote, all of which we do not quote. It is an encouragement to know that there are those who are making us and our work objects of public and private prayer.

Who Wants War?

By Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs

(Preached in the First Brethren Church, Ashland, Ohio, March 17, 1929)

And his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace. Isaiah 9:6.

My subject this morning is, "Who Wants War?" and has nothing to do whatsoever with preparedness, nor with strengthening our national defense. That is a matter for another time. I hope that I shall not be regarded as unpatriotic if I raise my voice this morning against war and in favor of peace. I am aware, of course, that there are movements and organizations and men, who by their aggressive and even hostile spirit, make it hard and unpopular, even dangerous, to speak in favor of peace. If one dares to attempt even by word of mouth to curb this age-old enemy of mankind, he is in danger of being called unpatriotic, or a coward, or both. And this often by those who have had no real part in the suffering caused by war.

However, I desire to bring to your attention again, this great evil and to make a few suggestions which may serve to arouse our interest in this important question. The time, too, seems opportune. Many people are talking peace. It is worthy of consideration that, the commander-in-chief of the largest potential armed forces in the world, is now a non-resistant Quaker. Mr. Fred B. Smith recently said that the present movement towards peace is the "greatest crusade that the human race ever engaged in." And whatever value the Kellogg Peace Pact may have, and it may not have much, yet it shows that the most powerful nation in all the world, is not ashamed to make way for peace.

Nor does it signify at all that, when a nation desires peace, it has (a) lost its much boasted bravery. All great nations are brave. Nor does it imply that it is (b) decadent and losing its vigor, nor that it (c) no longer possesses national pride. To accuse great nations of these, is to misunderstand the whole movement. It merely means that some of the nations of the earth have come to recognize the folly of war, its waste, its senselessness and its brutalizing force. And certain enlightened individuals have come to see that war in no way accords with the ideals of Jesus.

Now who wants war? Better, who, first of all, do not want war? First, I believe it is safe to say that the MOTHERS of America do not want war. They suffer most from war. The Federated Women's Clubs of America right now have both a propaganda and a plan, which if put into effect, would be an ideal measure to prevent future wars. I should not want to be understood as saying that the mothers of America would shirk their duty. They have never shirked their duty and I suppose they have many times urged their sons to go and fight for the much vaunted "God and Home and Native Land"—often only mockery and hollow words.

Russia, formerly having a most oppressive form of government and where religion was not worth a great deal,—yet fights for the right to keep on being oppressed! If it could be shown that war accomplished something, mothers would doubtless feel differently about it, but that is an altogether different matter. I rather mean that no mother wants her son to die. She wants him to live. That is why she bore him. That is why she smoothed his pillow and sang him his lullaby. No sane mother would raise her son in order that some king or potentate or nation could fling farther and farther the confines of the empire! And that is what half of the wars of the world have been for,—those of Caesar, Hannibal, Napoleon, and the "benevolent assimilation" of a Republic of a later day!

2. Who else does not want war? The COMMON MAN, for he has all to lose and nothing to gain. He fights the battles. He bears the burdens. He wears the armless sleeve and the wooden leg, and it is he who, in a later day, ekes out his existence on the pension of a grateful nation. And when the glories of war are recorded, he gets but small place. Did I not stand, within rather recent years, at Bunker Hill, Concord, Gettysburg, Antietam, Lookout Mountain, and Mission Ridge? And does it not make the heart beat high and the pulse leap to know that there men died for my personal safety and comfort? Who can stand there and not be moved for peace, where these brave men died? And yet when one reads the bronze tablets, he finds that they all read alike—"At this point General So-and-so took up his position." The legends all end alike—men lost, killed, wounded, or missing, so many. Who these men were, nobody but God knows and nobody cares. Just so many boys in blue, so many boys in gray, so many boys in khaki. The common man, were he wise, would not court war.

Others vote the war, he fights it. Others reap the wealth, he creates it. Others fling wide the borders of their empire but it rests upon his broken and bleeding shoulders.

3. The IDEALIST does not want war. Those who are interested in the higher things of life,—schools, colleges, and churches,—those who want to conserve the garnered goodness of the race. As Tennyson long ago said, "Let the ape and tiger die!" Those who cherish kindness, gentility, and reason for their own sake, could not want war.

4. The SCIENTIST can not want war. To say that this past great war was in any way due to the teachings of modern biological science, seems to me to be utterly foolish. No sane scientist wants forever to continue this senseless struggle for existence. Those, moreover, who believe that "out of one hath God created man, etc.," can not court war. If we believe that there is any good thing in the black and yellow race; if they are anything more than cattle, we can not fight them and kill them and ruin them.

5. Those who are interested in the PHYSICAL VIGOR of the race and its continuity, can not want war. It seems to be a well established fact that war depletes the race stock. Its harvest is not of the weak, but of the strong; not of the ill but of the well; not of the cripples, it makes cripples. War does not seek recruits in the hospitals of the land but in schools and colleges. The first wealth is health and that nation is doomed to extinction which destroys her manhood.

"Ill fares the land to hastening ill a prey Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

Jahn the great Swedish gymnast was right when he said, "In the last analysis only strong muscles can make a nation great or a people free." Spain today is paying for her prodigality of her true elite during the Inquisition,—and what is more, she shows no signs of recuperation. It is commonly thought that the Napoleonic wars were responsible for as much as three inches reduction in the French stature.

What the human male might be in stamina and physical vigor had it not been for wars, no one knows. Instead, he is a second-rater among the life forms of the

Getting Ready for War, or Is War

By Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, Minister

Let us get rid of the notion that war between Great Britain and the United States is "unthinkable." Certain illustrious individuals have said so more than once but this does not prove that it is so. War between these two countries is not only thinkable but it is easily possible—if we go on as we have been going. War would be insanity, but insanity is possible. War would be a crime against humanity, but the world is full of crime. War would be a heinous sin, but countries have never hesitated to trample on the law of God. War would be suicide but suicide is always within the range of the possible. Some day we may awake and discover that war between these two countries is not only possible but probable. Even now there are able men who are convinced that it is probable. It certainly will become probable if we go on as we have been going.

We have been following the same course which Great Britain and Germany followed before the World War. They had been friends, but they engaged in a naval race and in the race they became enemies. We are in a naval race with Great Britain. Some men say we are not, but we are. Some say we are only providing for our needs. That is camouflage. Some say we are just "rounding out" our navy. That is buncombe. We want more ships because we have counted up the ships of Britain and knowing the number of her ships we want to round our navy out. We want to build according to our needs. When we add new ships England counts our total number, and at once decides to "round out" her navy and build according to her needs. The navy lords of both countries have not only an amazing capacity for deceiving themselves but they possess a satanic power of deceiving others. By the dexterous use of words they cover up plain facts which ought to be faced. It is an ugly fact that Great Britain and the United States are at the present hour engaged in naval competition.

We know how a naval competition once upon a time worked out. It will, unless checked, work out that way again. The outcome must always be the earth, full of every kind of weakness and disease, and war has, in all probability, contributed its full share. We talk much of eugenics and in Ohio are contemplating the passing of certain eugenic laws. But what utter folly to do so and then as soon as we get a generation of strong men, take them out and shoot them to death! In every war victors and vanquished alike stand to lose what they can not regain, easily.

6. War also takes terrible toll of womanhood in ways that I can not mention but they are none the less certain and real.

Has war ever done any good? Yes, as many other social institutions, it has its good as well as its evil side. It has brought a certain degree of solidarity among peoples. It has served to cross-fertilize cultures. It has encouraged a certain type of patriotism and personal bravery. It has served to break down certain sectional lines. But that these could have been done with less cost, seems certain.

Now, who wants war? Those who profit by it, of course. There are several ways to profit by war. There is the money gain. There are the shoulder straps and the right to command one's fellows, which would never happen in civil life. There is place and power and profit.

2. Then there are those good but much misguided souls who still believe in the fighting instinct. That there are instincts leading to self-defense, no one will deny, but that this relates to as artificial a thing as organized war is another matter. They also argue that it tends to strengthen one's desire to conquer, but I want to remind you that "peace hath her victories no less than war." Also, it is argued that it keeps down excess population, and it does, but there are other and better means of controlling the population of a country.

3. Also there are those who still think in terms of nationalism, instead of internationalism. We must have our place in the sun. "My country right or wrong." "Hoch der Kaiser." "Deutschland uber alles." And Germany was by no means alone in that sentiment during the World war. Many a notion of national honor is after all, but idle sentiment.

A better way to show our love of country is to live for it and to emulate the best ideals which have been exhibited on all the battle fields of the nation from the days of Lexington and Concord on down to those of Belleau Wood. Ours has been a glorious history of war; let it be as good in all the long and happy days of peace.

I stood not long ago at Sharpsburg where the old ramparts of that bloody battle field may still be seen. I plucked a white rose, but pale with red, right where I imagined a boy might have fallen. These men did not want to die. They wanted to live, or there would have been no breastworks, mute evidence to their love of life! But the shaft erected to the memory of the fallen Union heroes bore gracious words,—words worthy to be written across the sky in letters of living light, words worthy of peace no less than of war, "Not for themselves, but for their country."

A Sublime Scripture. V

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

The second outstanding theme of the Hebrew letter is that Jesus takes away our sins; thus becoming our great High Priest. "When he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." This is the language chosen to acquaint all struggling souls same. It will be easier to drag us into war with Great Britain than it was to drag us into war with Germany. We had no blocs of people in 1913 who were hostile to Germany. Germany was almost universally admired throughout the whole United States. But we went to war with Germany because of certain things which her government did. We have in our country large groups who do not like England and who would not be averse to fighting her if she should at any time give us provocation. We have huge piles of combustible stuff and so also has England, and a spark might set both countries on fire.

There are those who keep saying—"there is no danger"; but that is what men said in 1905, and in 1910, and even in 1913. Some men never see danger until the house is ablaze over their heads. "Oh, you are an alarmist!" So men are now saying and so they said in the ten years preceding the World War. If we use our intelligence and know how to interpret history there is a very good reason for being alarmed. Whenever the naval lords of two countries become the counsellors of those nations, there is nothing but disaster ahead. They work on a wrong philosophy. They do not understand the universe they are living in. They are able but shortsighted; they are well educated but narrow minded; they are noble but mistaken; they are patriotic but ruinous to their own country and the highest interests of the human race.

If you desire to know in what direction we are moving, then take note of the war games which are played on the land and on the sea and in the air, and pay attention to the space which is given to these games by our great city newspapers, and give ear also to the speeches which are made by generals and rear admirals and which are broadcast over the whole nation, and you will be convinced that we are indeed preparing for the next war. We are doing the very same thing which Europe did before she plunged into the abyss. The nations kept right on building cruisers and playing war games until the flood came and swept ten million men away.—Reformed Church Messenger.

with the help needed and the help at hand. The office of prophet and that of priest are entirely distinct. When Moses was chosen as the first of the prophets, Aaron was chosen as high priest. The primary function of the prophet is to present God's revelation to man. The priest presents that plan—the sin-offering of men, to God. "The prophet represents God before men. The priest represents men in the presence of God. The priesthood, therefore deals with sin as God would have it dealt with. The whole procedure suggests the Passover lamb, the day of atonement, that solemn moment when the priest stood before the Holy of Holies.

A prominent writer has said, "The first three chapters of the Epistle elaborate the author's presentation of Jesus as the great Prophet. The next seven present him as the great High Priest." "We have not an high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but one who was tempted in all points like as we are. . . . Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace to receive mercy and grace to help us in time of need" (Heb. 4:15, 16). Jesus, our High Priest, is tenderly sympathetic and willing to save. Though tempted, he always conquered. Our great High Priest "hath passed through the heavens," and is "holy, guileless, undefiled, separate from sinners and made higher than the heavens." Herein is one of the great battlegrounds of the religious world in which we live. Speculative theology denies that Jesus Christ is the great High Priest who "by himself purged our sins." The modernist is willing to place Jesus on the pedestal of fame besides Buddha, Socrates, or Mohammed; but mention the death on the cross as having anything to do with the forgiving of sins, and you arouse nothing but sneers and abuse. And the status of religion in many a church of today ought to be proof enough that many a timid preacher has broken the keen edge off his preaching sword because of an abiding belief that something else is wrong with this old world other than its sins. Again and again, has the New Testament pointed out that Christ bore our sins, and that there is a direct relation between the forgiveness of sin and the death of Christ; that "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sins" (1 John 1:7). "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. 1:6, 7). "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his blood" (Rev. 1:5). "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Pet. 2:24).

Of course, unregenerated humanity is sensitive when in our pews about being classified with sinners. But we did not do the classifying. Far be it from me to apologize for anything my Lord has done. Whatever we may think about it, his decree as to what ails this old world stands. My notes say that when Prof. E. G. Conklin, a teacher of biology in one of our great universities, gave the Commencement address not long since at Western Reserve University, he said, "The only remedy for decadence of conduct today is education and more education—not fundamentalism and supernaturalism." The comment of the writer was this: "Notice the confession: Decadence of conduct (de cado—fall down), the downfall of conduct. There never was a time when education was so widespread and intensive, or so godless." When Loeb and Leopold, two honor graduates, boastful of their atheism, which they had imbibed at college, murdered a little boy to experience the thrill of seeing the death struggle, Clarence Darrow, their attorney, appealed for mercy on the ground that they were not responsible because their act was the result of instinctive reactions from their animal ancestry. A more infamous or deadly doctrine can scarcely be conceived. The trouble with Mr. Darrow and his kind is that they are not too intellectual. The trouble is they are not intellectual enough. If they had more intellectual capacity, they would take in more of the great facts of human conduct. No, the world is not half intellectual enough. When it becomes more evenly balanced, it will recognize the moral concept in human nature; and if society does not destroy itself, there must be enough ballast to prevent the old ship from listing. The religion of Jesus supplies such ballast.

The last statement in our study of this sublime scripture is this: "Sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." This introduces a new angle in the great Spokesman of God. This expression does not fit that of the prophet or priest. The prophet is to go among the people, and declare what God would have them know about their own destiny. The priest is to go into the temple and worship. He does not sit down. He stands rather, in awe and reverence. Outside the people wait in fear, lest he should offend, and thus fall into condemnation. But Jesus, our great High Priest, having spoken, and having purged our sins, "sat down." And "on the right hand of the Majesty on high." This answers to the conduct of a king. This implies, too, that an infinite Father has done all that can be done to win back a rebellious world. He "spoke in times past unto the fathers by the prophets." Then in these days at the end he has spoken through his Son. Mighty message! Wonderful concern! "It is finished," were cries out of the heart agonies of the cross.

"But 'he that descended is the same also that ascended, up far above all heavens;' 'Him hath God highly exalted, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess.' After going to the lowest depths, he ascended to the highest heights; he is reestablished in the glory he had with the Father before the world was. Now, in the full insignia of this heavenly glory, he will come again 'to judge the quick and the dead.' His second coming will be in extreme contrast from his first coming. He came poorer than the poorest; he will come next as the King of kings, and Lord of lords. When here he was the Good Shepherd for all the hungry, sin-sick souls; today he is the Great Shepherd in that his salvation can reach down and lift up the most hopeless sinner; when he returns again, he will be the Chief Shepherd—thank God."

Jesus, A Friend Indeed

By Frank Gehman

His love, how tenderly deep! His friendship, how beautifully sweet! He himself said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" (John 15:13). It is a beautiful and touching picture to see one friend out of love to another laying down his life for that friend. The sight of such an unselfish and generous act touches and thrills our hearts. It rouses our admiration. It calls forth our sympathetic pity, even as it draws out our praise of such meritorious conduct. We are fascinated by the display of such fervent friendship. We are even astonished at it, yet we know it to be not humanly impossible. It has happened repeatedly through the course of the world's checkered history. We are warned to a little deeper appreciation of humanity when we witness so noble a deed in the life of the race. The words of Jesus come back to us, "greater love . . . hath no man . . . than this." Perhaps you say, "I hadn't thought of his love as being so real, so warm, so vital as that. After he has placed such value upon such a friendship as that he laid down his own life for his friends! I believe I can love him more now. What a beautiful picture of his love! Yes, my friend, it is a beautiful picture, surpassingly beautiful, but IT IS NOT A TRUE PICTURE of the love of Jesus. If you thought so you are mistaken, my friend. Jesus Christ didn't die for his friends; he died for his ENEMIES. "While we were yet sinners Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8b). If we were sinners then enemies of Christ. Thus it is true that "while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son" (Rom. 5:10). Yes, human love will induce one friend to die for another. However, it was Divine Love which led One to die for those who were his enemies. That is the kind of love which this one, our Friend yet more-than-friend, wants us to enjoy, to take pleasure in, to feast upon. In its sunshine he bids us bask our souls. Paul says, "Peradventure for the good man some one would even dare die" (Rom. 5:7b). That is to say, that it might happen that for a good and worthy man another would be willing to die. But did Christ die for such men? He certainly did not; he died for sinners. He died for those who made themselves enemies of God, enemies of him. What love! And we, poor, weak and sinful though we are, are the objects of it. What a glory to God's holy name is wrought through the redemptive work of Christ! Through the showering of this love upon us! I have power to punish my little child. My strength is greater than his. He is largely helpless in my hands. Yet how much more honor to me if I can win him, woo him, love him into doing that which is wanted of him? It is so with God. Instead of unstaying the hand of justice he has offered us salvation. Instead of sending a judge into the world to call upon men he first sent a Savior and Friend. This Jesus is our Friend. What beauties to his friendship! Not for good men he died, but for sinners. Not for friends, but for enemies. Will not the universe forever bless and praise such a friendship as he sustains with us? If the first picture presented constrains to a deeper love of Jesus how much more should the picture of his death for enemies constrain us! O friends, truly "everybody ought to love Jesus." He is our Savior, Friend. His friendship puts purpose into our lives. It gives worth to the life we now live. It gives meaning to what we meet along the pathway. It gives life itself. "I have called you friends; for all things that I heard from my Father I have made known unto you" (John 15:15b). What a precious Friend is Jesus; a Friend indeed.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

CIGARETTES AND GOOD HEALTH

Zion's Herald recently hit the insidious and totally misleading propaganda in present-day cigarette advertising in a strong, direct editorial made up largely from quotations of protests from various organizations. It is stated that the Federal Radio Commission has no authority to censor radio programs in any way, and thus the propaganda of a great tobacco concern goes on unhindered.

Recently a large late-evening radio audience has been offered a very high-class dance orchestra playing the most popular numbers. This service "baits" the listener-in to have his set tuned in. Then, interspersed between groups of numbers, the leader reads testimonials as to the wonderful qualities of his brand of cigarettes. They are held to be a wonderful aid to good health; they keep all women thin and offer a fine substitute for sweets and other fattening delicacies. The company contends that if you desire steady nerves, an aid to health, and a way to counteract certain harmful appetites, all you have to do is to smoke cigarettes.

This sort of propaganda goes out to a large radio audience every week. By direct statement and by many implications cigarettes are alleged to have high health value. Is this true? If it is not, should this sort of stuff be allowed on the air by a commission operating in the public interest?

This is not a matter of anti-tobacco fanaticism. Those who use cigarettes themselves are among the number who have written to The Congregationalist protesting against the sordid methods by which cigarette manufacturers are promoting the sale of their wares—and likewise the sordid commercialism of the distinguished people who are willing to prostitute their fame—prostitute is precisely the word—by endorsing various brands of cigarettes for the sake of added notoriety or pocket money. The optimism of these people whom cigarettes keep from never having a cough, and from similar troubles, is about on the level of the schoolboys' endorsement of pins as having saved the lives of many people through their not swallowing them.—The Congregationalist.

"DIGLOT" SCRIPTURES

A group of Scriptures characterized by the curious word "Diglot" is described in a recent circular issued by the American Bible Society. In a "Diglot" a Gospel or, in some cases, the whole Testament is printed in two languages side by side, either upon the same page or opposite pages.

It will be a surprise to many to find that "Diglot" Scriptures in more than thirty languages, from Albanian to Yiddish, with English as a parallel language, are available for those who seek to bridge the gap between the language of their fatherland and the language of their adopted country, and in turn for those who, having English as their native tongue, seek to master other languages.

Religious and educational workers in foreign-language communities have found these publications of especial value. "Diglot" Scriptures are of use in classes for teaching English to foreigners, in the study of languages in colleges and high schools, and in the study of the Bible. To those familiar with more than one language, these little books throw light upon the meaning of the messages of the Bible as seen by those who have translated them into other tongues.

This circular may be secured from the American Bible Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York City or any of its Agencies.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

CRUISERS OR GRATITUDE?

Joseph Goldberger is a name to cherish in sacred memory. He was an Austro-Hungarian Jew. Educated in the United States, he was attached as surgeon to the public health service of the federal government. He observed in the southern states the ravages of the unknown malady, pellagra. He went into the infested regions to study the disease. He exposed himself to whatever danger the investigation might involve. He subjected himself to repeated experiments in which he tried to inoculate himself with pellagra. He spent the best of his life in the study. He conquered the disease. Now he is dead. Congress is asked to grant his widow a pension of $125 a month. Congress hesitates at such extravagance. It needs $500,000,000 for cruisers.—The Baptist.

"Christ did more than do something for Paul. He did something in Paul. He did more than change Paul's lot. He changed his character."—Rev. James Austin Richards.

Our Worship Program

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

The Preparation for Service—Read Ezekiel 3, entire chapter. Note especially v. 1: "Eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel." If we attempt to show others the way before we ourselves have walked in it, our efforts can only meet with failure and derision. We cannot hope to win others unless our own lives are in accordance with his word. May we, O Father, receive in our hearts and hear with our ears all the words that thou shalt speak unto us, that we may go to those held captive by sin and say: "Thus saith the Lord God" (vs. 10, 11).

TUESDAY

Service: Where?—compare vs. 5 and 6, with Matt. 28:19, 20, and Acts 8:4. There are many who feel called to the mission fields, but who feel that it is impossible for them to go. That being the case, they feel that there is nothing else for them to do. It may be that God has called us to go to many people of a strange speech; if so, may nothing prevent us, for surely they would hearken to us, and many be saved. The word is sweet to all (v. 3). But let us not forget the manifold opportunities—yes, the demands—for service among our friends and kindred, in our own local churches.

WEDNESDAY

Service: What?—v. 27; read also Phil. 2:1-18. No workman worthy of the name can be unconcerned as to the success of his efforts; especially is this true when the material with which we work is the human life and soul. However, if he is conscious of having put forth the best effort of which he is capable under God, he need not grieve if his efforts end in apparent failure. It is the faithful effort that God rewards (Rev. 2:10).

THURSDAY

Our Safety—vs. 17-21; read John 17. As Paul said: "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel!" Even from a selfish standpoint, we have every reason to sound the warning. Our brother's eternal safety may depend upon it, but with even greater certainty our own safety depends upon it.

FRIDAY

Our Peril—v. 20; John 10:1-30. Following our rule of applying the scriptures wholly (but not exclusively), to ourselves, let us recognize the fact that it is possible for even a righteous man to turn from his righteousness and be lost. We ought always be on our guard, but we need not be fearful; for, except by our own choice, no man is able to pluck us out of his hand. Praise God, he is able to save to the uttermost!

SATURDAY

Wages—v. 18; Rom. 6:1-23. There are those today, as there have been from the beginning, who would have us believe that there is no such thing as sin, or eternal punishment (as a sidelight on spiritual death, read Rev. 20:14). However sincere such people may be, they are deceived and the truth is not in them. The whole world lieth in sin, and there is only one remedy. Help us, O God, ever to present thee, in word and deed, as the one who was lifted up for the sin of the world!

SUNDAY

The Glory of God—v. 23; read Psalm 19. By a comparison of the Old Testament references to the Glory of the Lord, it will be seen that this expression refers to the visible manifestation of the presence of God. God appointed a place where he would reveal himself and his message to Ezekiel, and at the appointed time and place the promise was fulfilled. Thanks be to God that he has appointed a time and place when we may see something of his glory, and may hear his word. May the tongues of all those who preach today cleave to the roofs of their mouths except thou shalt open their mouths and speak through them the word of the Lord. And may none who hear forbear! ## The Vacation Bible School

Published by the Standard Bible School Forces

A Three Years' Course

The Vacation Bible School course is a three years' course, and the teacher of each group—Kindergarten, Primary and Junior—is provided each year with a complete text-book for that year.

The pupils are released after completing the third year, and each year a new set of children compose the Kindergarten group.

First Year Equipment

1. One Kindergarten text-book, complete in detail, and one package of large, colored pictures—a picture for each Bible-story program.

2. One Primary text-book, complete in detail.

One package of large, colored pictures. One package of sand-table and poster cut-outs illustrating each program.

One Primary mounting-book and one set of cut-out sheets—a set for each pupil.

3. One Junior text-book, complete in detail.

One package of large, colored pictures illustrating the programs.

One package of sand-table and poster cut-outs illustrating the programs.

One set of small, colored pictures for decorating the note-books.

Price of one complete first-year outfit, $12.50.

A Typical Day's Work

In a general way, a day's program with the Primary group of the Vacation Bible School is as follows: (We select the Primary because it is the central group of the three. Each of the other programs is perfectly adapted to the age for which it is prepared. The Kindergarten includes more recreation, and the Junior more Bible drill and memory work.)

9:00—Assembly and Worship Period. No teaching in this period—purely worship. Quiet music, prayer and offering. The song is related to the thought of the day's Bible story.

9:10—Habit Talk Period. Stories and talks aimed to teach right habits and morals. Most of these habit talks bring out the life principle of Bible stories. For instance when the Bible story of the day is of Jesus healing the blind, the habit talk concerns the right use and care of the eyes.

9:25—Music Period. This period is devoted to teaching songs related to Bible stories.

9:30—Bible Story Period. The book for each group contains a course of twenty-five Bible stories. For the Primary and Kindergarten groups the stories are arranged thematically. For the Junior group the stories are aimed to give the sweep of Old Testament history to the division of the kingdom.

10:00—Bible Expressional Period. Here, for thirty minutes, the pupils are taught that Bible truths and stories are for everyday life and practice. They are taught to re-live the story in the doing of good deeds, or to dramatize the story and thus impress it, or to work out the scenes of a story on the sand-table, or to make models of things related to the story, such as the making of a drinking-cup in the story of God's gifts of food and water; the making of a harp or cutting out of a sheep in the story of the twenty-third Psalm. Details and methods are in the book.

10:30—Recreational Period. An excellent list of graded and motivated games is to be found in the appendix of the book for each group or grade. The Kindergarten games have been brought to perfection by Kindergarten experts. The Primary and Junior games are furnished by Mr. Will R. Reeves, of the Cincinnati Community Service, and are in use in practically all public playgrounds in the United States.

10:50—Handwork Period. For the first two weeks of the school this period is devoted to the making of suitable gifts for children of some institution. In the third week the pupils make gifts for their fathers and mothers; in the fourth week gifts for themselves, and in the fifth week they put their handwork into shape for the closing-day exhibit, followed by distribution. Complete patterns and directions for making each article in each book. All handwork carefully graded.

11:20—Closing Period. Patriotic and religious. Uniform throughout the term.

The Books Prepared by Experts in Experience as Well as Theory

Miss Edna B. Rowe, author of the Kindergarten book, is an unexcelled Kindergarten teacher in the city schools of Toledo, O., and has had a wonderful experience as the superintendent of the Beginners department of the Central Church of Christ in that city.

Mrs. Florence Waterman, author of the Primary Book and editor of the entire Standard Vacation Bible School courses series pursued special courses in Cincinnati University, and had practical experience as superintendent of the Children's Division in the Bible school of the Walnut Hills Church of Christ, Cincinnati, besides coming into touch with the general need through her work as editor of the Children's Division literature of The Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati.

Mrs. Lydia C. Perin, one-time general supervisor of the Vacation Bible Schools of Cincinnati, O., is the mother of four children, who have been her laboratory. She is also a teacher of experience in the public schools, a children's library worker and an expert teller of stories.

Mrs. Margaret White Eggleston is associated with Boston University as instructor and teller of children's stories. She is well known everywhere among educators of children.

Mrs. Eggleston and Mrs. Perin are joint authors of the Junior book—Mrs. Eggleston having furnished the Bible stories and Mrs. Perin the remainder.

Miscellany

Each teacher's text-book gives a list of articles for the successful beginning and continuation of the school, such as an American flag, Sunday school flag, poster paper, crayons, blunt scissors, pasteboard, etc.

Opening and Closing Days

Special brief suggestions are made in the introductory pages of the teachers' text-books concerning the right way to start off on the first day of the school, and the right program for the last. In the books attention is also given to a special Friday program at the close of each week's work.

Music

Not simply the words appear, but also the music of all songs appears in the book for each group. Too much can not be said about the superiority of our plan of placing each teacher's material all in one book, instead of referring to a scattered list of volumes.

Graded

Our entire three years' course is planned according to the very best and most thoroughly usable principles of grading.

Second and Third Years

The second and third year books of our series are in process of preparation, and will carry forward the work done in the first. The second year will be distinctly missionary; the third will give special emphasis to religious pageants.

Our Course Unique

Since the mind of the Bible school public, and the mind of that portion of the educational public that is devotedly Christian, have been applying themselves to the job of improving the methods of training the community's children, it has been increasingly apparent that much valuable time goes to waste during the summer vacation.

Many of the world's leading educators contend that three months is too great a vacation gap anyway, and that much is then forgotten that was learned in the other nine.

Simultaneously, several ministers and leaders in the Bible school work of different communities began testing the plan of putting on a short vacation school designed to neutralize summer idleness, focus the training of the regular Bible school, secure the attendance of many children not in touch with any religious training, and so relate Bible stories and truths to every-day child-life and interest as to make a five weeks' course of delightful, and intensely profitable, learning.

The first keenly felt need was that of adequate and fitting text-books. Courses were hastily prepared by assembling such books as would lend themselves to the needs of the vacation school. Since then other books have been specially prepared by different publishers, but the course herein set forth is the only one in which all the instructional work for each teacher is at hand in one volume. We take some pride in this fact.

First-Year Equipment

2. One Primary text-book, complete in detail.

One package of sand-table and poster cut-outs illustrating each program.

One Primary mounting-book and one set of cut-out sheets—a set for each pupil.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

(Lesson for April 21)

III. Comfort for God's People

Scripture Lesson—Isaiah 40:1-11.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 30:1-5.

Golden Text—As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you.—Isaiah 66:13.

Introductory Note

"The book of Isaiah is divided by many critics into two parts, one the first 39 chapters, written they say by the Isaiah of whom we have been studying, in the time of Uzziah, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, and the other beginning with this 40th chapter, written by some other man—absolutely unknown by name—during the exile in Babylon. It is impossible to give definite proof as to whether there were two Isaiahs or only one. A part of the argument is the difference in style and the vocabulary. This must, of course, be considered. Yet there are many more modern writers who have differed at least as much in different parts of their life. It is said that if a thousand years from now the whole of Goethe's works were still extant, and were read by critics of that day, the difference between his early and his late writings would be so great that they would declare them written by two men, not by one single man, as we know positively they were."

Besides, the change in style is no more remarkable than the change of theme, remarks another commentator. "A prophet who was also a patriot would not write of the sins and coming captivity of his people with the exultant and joyous style which he would use to describe their redemption, blessing and power in John 12:37-44 quotations from Isaiah 53 and chapter 6 are both ascribed to the prophet Isaiah."

Illustrating the Golden Text

At a conference in Northfield some years ago Dr. Rainsford told the following experience: A lady lived near me (said he) who had an ungodly husband, and who suffered from heart trouble. The doctor had forbidden any one to go near her, especially a clergyman, as any mental disturbance was liable to take her off instantly. One bright spring day I walked out on the lawn in the rear and stood basking in the sunshine. As I admired the prospect I began to repeat some words of Scripture to comfort myself, as it were. As God would have it, I read the words toward the close of Isaiah 43:21-26, laying deep stress on verse 25, 26,—"I, even I am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins. Put me in remembrance; let us plead together, declare thou that thou mayest be justified." When I had finished I heard a voice behind me: "In the name of God, Mr. Rainsford, what am I to put him in remembrance of?" I was almost afraid to turn around, so I read again: "Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honored me with thy sacrifices," and so on. Then she said again: "In the name of God, what am I to put him in remembrance of?"

I read it again. "You don't mean that I am to put the Almighty in remembrance of these things?" "Yes, that is what it says; but it says something else." "What is that?" "I even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake and will not remember thy sins." She clapped her hands and exclaimed, "That will do for me." I thought then I might turn round and talk to her face to face. For some weeks afterwards it was my privilege to visit her, and she never lost her joy. She used to call me her darling after that, poor soul. When she was dying she said to me, "Darling, give me my verse." So I repeated it to her, "Thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities. . . . I am he that blotteth out thy sins for mine own sake. Put me in remembrance." Her poor lips moved and she whispered, "I do, I do," and then she went Home.—The Illustrator.

How to be Happy

First, no one can be happy while there is an underlying thought of wrong—wrong thoughts, wrong deeds—or even the absence of right thoughts, and right deeds. It is a fact in human nature which led to the styling of conversion "making one's peace with God." Not that we should think of God as incensed and angry with us because of our wandering from the right paths. He is still our father, and as a true earthly father he is far more sorry than angry at our failure to do the right. But we have no peace in our own souls, in our own minds. Men who believe not in God wander from one thing to another in search of happiness—and do not find it. One criminal said to a man who was trying to help him, "The worst punishment I could ever have is in being what I am." It is those who have not trust in God and his love who cry out "Life is not worth living," and who, while yet sane, end it.

But given pardon the true heart is not yet satisfied. Service for the one who has done so much for him; this would be the feeling toward even an earthly helper, if the recipient of the kindness was true-hearted. So work for God, or work of any kind done as for him, is the next step. It does not need that one goes out into the world as an evangelist or a social worker to feel that the service pleases the Father. "Who sweeps a room as for thy cause makes that and the action fine."

"Happiness might be defined, I suppose, as our experience in getting the most and best out of life. And the best methods for happiness—contradictory as it may seem—are made up of our self-expression and our self-forgetting. The happiest people I know are those who are at work, and never those who loaf or dissipate. For work of the right kind assuredly combines these two apparently contradictory elements of expressing self and at the same time of forgetting self."

But work alone is in many cases more of an anodyne than a bringer of real happiness. "I must work or I shall go mad." "Give me something to do so I will not think." And here is where God himself is needed. Loyalty to friends and family; to country; a feeling that we must not betray our better selves in doing things less well than it is in our ability to do them—these help, but they do not bring real and lasting satisfaction. Loyalty in personal relations is the spring of happiness which God has opened in our hearts. And the best of it is ours when, loving greatly, we have learned how lovable, and in our own degree as his dear children, how imitable is God. For it is so—and only so—that he can make us full sharers in his working and eternal happiness. The secret of happiness is work, so occupation of the thought that makes us out of self. But the secrets of that happy work are love and loyalty. That is the oil of gladness which stills complaining and brings us to the childlike frame of mind to which the higher Powers may speak. God himself is nearest when, in complete absorption from ourselves in work or worship, we throw open the doors of our life and thought for his unhindered coming.

I have dared to think that this is what the future life, whatever it may be, will bring to us if we have learned to walk with God. For he has not made, I am well assured, individualities as marked as ours except for individual and appropriate occupation. I cannot think either of listlessness or of unwilling drudgery in the eternal life with God. Here in our earthly life the greatest happiness I know has come to those who have found and follow their own special line and form of work. It must be so hereafter, but upon an infinitely wider scale.—Illustrated Quarterly.

A SIGNIFICANT GESTURE

The young people of a down-town church recently made a significant gesture of international good will. They invited from the university centres of a neighboring metropolis some thirty foreign-speaking students as their week-end guests. They entertained their guests in the parish house at dinner and in the church parlors for an evening of social fellowship. They opened their individual homes overnight, bringing their guests to the church services on Sunday and entertaining them during the day. At the Christian Endeavor meeting and at the evening service of the church representatives of the foreign-speaking group participated in the program with the utmost credit and distinction.

The immediate results of this "gesture" were mutual interest, understanding, and good will, and an eager desire expressed by both hosts and guests that the event should be repeated on a larger scale. Nearly thirty young people of seventeen different nationalities were welcomed into as many Christian American homes, some of them thus coming for the first time into first-hand contact with our real home life. Who can measure the ultimate significance of such a gesture of Christian good will?—William Hiram Foulkes, in C. E. World.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostles
was a great correspondent

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

Mrs. Rowsey and the writer had the happy privilege of assisting Brother L. G. Wood and his people in an evangelistic campaign from March 4 to 14. The pastor will report the meeting, but since this is one of our mission points, I feel that the brotherhood will be interested in the observations of another.

I was pleasantly surprised at the church plant, its location, and the work that is being done by Brother and Sister Wood. Fort Scott has a church plant of which a much larger congregation could be justly proud. It does need some repairs but plans are being made to take care of these. It is centrally located, being about three or four blocks from the heart of the business district. A large High School Building is just across the street.

Both Brother and Sister Wood are mighty diligent in the work of the church. It is surprising how Brother Wood's health holds up in spite of the strenuous schedule he goes through. I am sure that he is thankful for that and he should also be thankful for the fruit his efforts are bearing. One of the members told me the attendance when Brother Wood came was around a half dozen; several times while I was there we had more than a hundred—the result of their efforts.

Our members there, for the most part, are not blessed with a great deal in the way of material prosperity. But they are blessed with something much more important and that is a spirituality which brings the joy and peace which passeth all understanding. The workers there really "enjoy" their religion and they seem to be trying to make it practical by serving others. Considering the conditions their gift was indeed liberal and I appreciate their generosity.

Our home while in Fort Scott was with Brother and Sister Wood and they did everything possible for our comfort. I have known the Woods for a number of years, Brother Wood being the only pastor I had before entering Ashland. Under his pastoral leadership I learned many lessons along many lines of church work that are of great worth to me now as a pastor. Because of this former fellowship, it was indeed a great privilege to have our headquarters in their home.

Falls City, Nebraska

Our reports from this place have been ably cared for by the Correspondent, Mrs. H. J. Prichard, making it unnecessary for me to write. But since I am writing about Fort Scott, I want to add a word about our work here.

I think I can truthfully say that the church is making progress, spiritually, and I know that we are making progress along other lines. During my pastorate here the finances have always been in a commendable condition. Frank Lichty and his finance committee seem to know just how to get the money when it is needed. Prof. J. G. Dodds, and now, Claude Stumbo have ably supervised the Sunday school during my pastorate. Prof. Dodds, being one of our ordained men, occupied the pulpit while the writer was at Fort Scott. The organization that seems to be doing most just now is the W. M. S., with Mrs. Claude Stumbo as president. We also have a progressive S. M. M. with Phyllis Hoover presiding. Christian Endeavor doesn't have the place I would like to see it have in the church here. I believe in Christian Endeavor, knowing what it has done for me, but at present we have only one society "on the map," and that a Senior society, with Dr. Cecil Johnston as president. We have many talented and well educated people in the church here and all seem willing to give their talent in service for Christ and the church.

H. H. ROWSEY.

NORTH VANDERGRIFT, PENNSYLVANIA

Many and varied have been our experiences since last we appeared in print. The work here is making commendable progress, we are gaining ground all the while. The work with these people is an encouragement to the pastor. Of course there is no work however pleasant that does not have its discouraging features. In church work you come in contact with human beings who are prone to see the dark side of life, as well as those who see the sunny side of life. Both have their place. It takes the clouds to enhance the beauty of the sunset sky. This is the great evener of life. You never miss the sunshine until the shadows fall; you never miss the water until the well goes dry. You never miss the child's laughter until he is gone.

The Christmas program was a fair representation of good leadership. The attendance was most excellent. The children carried through the program to completion in a commendable manner. A word for the children—they never disappoint us. If the adults did half as well, and did it so willingly, the work of the church would take on a different aspect.

The evangelistic campaign was a real success from every angle. That is, taking into consideration some of the objectionable features that entered in, and that tended to offset the good we might have done. Brother Austin R. Staley, a former school mate of the writer, and now pastor of the Cone-maugh church, piloted us through an evangelistic campaign very successfully. The visible results were very gratifying, 8 accessions and 17 reconsecrations. Others are expecting to come with the ones that have already cast their lot with us.

Through the preaching of Brother Staley the church has experienced a new grip upon the eternal realities. The NEW members have helped to inject new life, new blood into those already members through their zest and their enthusiasm. There have been some indications of a new phase of church work being sponsored by those who are interested in seeing the church force ahead. Time only will tell as to its ultimate outcome.

The Vandergrift Brethren are elated over the fact that a privilege has been extended to them to hear the College Men's Glee Club. Plans are being laid to entertain them in Brethren homes during their brief stay with us. The Club will give their Concert in the High School Auditorium April 6th. Every effort is being put forth to make it a success. May their coming here incite in our young people a love for Ashland College, the best place in the land.

H. C. HAMMOND.

VINCO AND MUNDAY'S CORNER, PENNSYLVANIA

The work of the church here at Vinco and Munday's Corner is moving along in the even tenor of its way. Our work in the winter times is always more or less hindered by circumstances over which we have no control—bad roads and sickness. Many of our people live off the main highway and are often hindered in their church attendance by roads closed by snow drifts. This winter we have had an unusual amount of sickness. Notwithstanding these hindrances our work has kept up fairly well. With the return of spring our work has already shown signs of taking on new life. Our Sunday schools are entering a campaign of increased earnestness which will manifest itself in increased attendance. At Vinco we have had two additions to the church and several candidates for baptism. These would have been baptized before this if it had not been for sickness. At Vinco Brother Charles Ashman of the Napoleon Street church will conduct an evangelistic campaign beginning the last of May. We are grateful to the Johnstown church for sparing their pastor long enough to conduct this service for us. We are very confident that this evangelistic service will mean much to the life of the Vinco church. I will hold a like service at Munday's Corner after the Vinco revival. We crave earnestly the prayers of the brotherhood for the success of these two evangelistic campaigns. I think our Easter offering this year will be larger than it has ever been. Our people are becoming more interested in Missions as they read of the thrilling experiences of those on the field. May all things work together for our good and his glory.

J. L. BOWMAN, Pastor.

FREMONT, OHIO

It was the writer's privilege to spend two weeks in a special meeting with Rev. Crick and his church in Fremont. These were weeks of real fellowship and blessing. Brother Crick is a tireless worker and has the confidence not only of his own members but of the people in general. He proved himself a fine yoke-fellow and the writer has a richer experience because of our fellowship. Brother Crick is true to the Word and has a knowledge of its contents and teaching. Best of all, he has the courage to fearlessly preach it and is leaving an impression wider than the membership of his own church.

Certain conditions make the work at Fremont difficult. There is need for more men who will take the responsibility of helping put over a real program. Some caught the vision during the meetings and are ready to meet the tasks which are theirs. Under the direction of their present pastor I am sure a larger work will be accomplished. Ours is the only church that practices any form of immersion. This furnishes an opportunity not often found in a city of this size.

As is usual today, we found it difficult to interest the unsaved. In spite of much visiting and newspaper publicity, comparactively few unsaved were found in the services. However, the meeting was not a failure. Practically the entire membership took a definite stand by rededicating lives for definite service. Some confessed Christ for the first time. One consecration repays all the effort. A man near eighty, who at one time was faithful as a member of the church but who had gotten far down in sin, came to the service under the influence of liquor. In answer to prayer his mind was cleared to such an extent that he was able to follow the message. When the message was done and the invitation pressed this man, old not only in years but old in sin, came sobbing and gave himself anew to the Lord. The change in this man was remarkable. After a few days he had a new expression. He was faithful in his attendance and was happy to be able to enjoy the blessings of the Communion service on Monday evening following the meeting. I believe the Holy Spirit has done a real work of grace in this man and by the help of the prayers of the Fremont people I feel sure he will remain faithful. Never has the writer experienced a more direct answer to prayer. From the time my attention was called to this man's condition I was burdened for him and while the pastor had charge of the opening service I gave myself to prayer. Answer came in a definite way. To him be the praise. This is but an illustration of what often takes place in city mission work.

I made my home with Sister Barenger, one of the outstanding leaders of the Fremont church. She is superintendent of the Sunday school and a leader in all the activities of the church. Everything possible was done for my comfort.

They remembered the evangelist in a fine way financially. This despite the fact that they are a "mission church" and had just recently made a substantial payment on their church debt. When conditions are kept in mind, this was one of the best offerings I have ever received.

With a spirit of real cooperation, under the present pastor, the Fremont church has a future. May the Lord richly bless them in their effort to build up a work to his glory.

Canton, Ohio

I returned to Canton just in time to get a line on things preparatory to Easter. The services of the day were all that could have been asked. The largest Sunday school attendance since the dedication of the new church building; a full house at the morning service with the largest Foreign Missions offering in the history of the church. From present indications the offering will reach, if not exceed, the Five Hundred Dollar mark. The Lovefeast and Communion at seven o'clock closed a most pleasant and profitable day in the experience of the Canton church. The best part is that this was not the result of any special drive. The pastor was in the meeting at Fremont and got back to Canton on the Monday preceding Easter. This is a part of the fruitage of the special meeting held just before leaving for the Fremont campaign. With the same sort of team-work there are still other things ahead for the work here.

During the absence of the pastor the work was most acceptably cared for by local talent. Miss Margaret Snyder, president of the W. M. S. had charge of the morning services. She brought messages on "Mission Work in Africa." The Girls' Gospel Team from Ashland College had the service for the first Sunday evening. The second Sunday evening service was in charge of the Christian Endeavor under the direction of Miss Gladys Spice, National Secretary and Treasurer of the Christian Endeavor societies. I have had only the very finest reports of the work done by all these people.

The Canton work is moving forward in a satisfactory way. Folks outside our own church are being touched and the future promises some worth-while things if the membership continues to give the same co-operation now given. We are planning a Bible Study Class to meet on Tuesday evenings. This, too, is a result of our special meeting. It was then discovered that many people in Canton, in churches other than our own, are hungry for the message of the Book. To meet this situation as well as to care for the needs of our own membership, this class is being formed. We are hoping this class may furnish a point of contact with many of these hungry souls.

An advance step has been taken in the Christian Endeavor work. From this time there will be three societies instead of one. The Junior, under the direction of Miss Gladys Spice, will be conducted as a Junior church. The Intermediate is to be under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Link. Frank Clapper is the superintendent of the Adult division. That the societies may work as a unit, Miss Gladys Spice has been elected general superintendent. Under the leadership of these consecrated people the Christian Endeavor should do even better work than was possible in the past.

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

In the face of more or less evident difficulties Brother Frank G. Coleman began two weeks of evangelistic services with us March 4th. The weather for the first week was genuine winter weather. The second week, as though to make amends for the harshness of the first, was delightful spring weather. People are just beginning to learn we are back on the old location. They are just beginning to get into the habit of coming to that corner. Attendance was not large but interested and attentive. It is very difficult these days to get the unsaved into the House of God. We may find it necessary to go after them where they may be found. Only occasionally will they come to us.

In the way of visible results there were five first confessions, one comes by letter, two come by relation, one of whom seeks rebaptism in obedience to the teaching of the Lord as to the manner of baptism. The invisible results, the actual results, can never be measured by us this side of eternity. That there was much good accomplished in the way of awakening interest and enlivened spirituality is evident. We praise the Lord for this another victory here in his Name and trust that many more shall follow. We thank those of the brotherhood whose prayers upon our behalf have had a part in this. FRANK GEHMAN.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

So many things have crowded into our activities that we have again been negligent reporting. The "Flu" and after effects have been registered in our attendance both in the regular church services and the auxiliaries of the church. Especially was it noticeable in the Bible school. Although we rejoice that, while our attendance suffered decrease, there were no deaths, for which we praise God.

We had a splendid Christmas program given by the school and a Cantata by the young people of the church. A new departure for our work here was a pageant which was very much appreciated. The programs given by the school are the best drawing services. The reason for this is that many of our children in the school come from homes where parents do not attend services, but the interest in their own children brings them to services in which these children have a part. The "White Gift" offering was commendable for our people.

We entertained the Mid-Year Conference of the Southern California churches. The Conference was interesting and helpful. The addresses were of a high order and much help was received from them. We had addresses from such outstanding men as Dr. Courtland Myers, Alva J. McClain. The addresses of both these men were heartily received. Rev. Warstler of the Calvary Church of the Brethren of the city brought us a very helpful message. Then our pastors also brought good messages that were appreciated. The writer believes that in a Brethren Conference the pastors are not merely "fill in" matter, but that they have the messages for Brethren people. Our new pastors from the East, Brethren Lynn and Mayes, were welcomed into our midst and acquitted themselves in a pleasing manner. The closing session was given to young people. A banquet was given by our church to about two hundred enthusiastic folks to whom Brother Lynn brought the closing message. Brother A. V. Kimmell is our moderator and conducted all sessions in his efficient way which added much to the success of the Conference. Brother Alan Pearce the Secretary, took care of his work in his efficient manner with the exception of reporting to the Evangelist, which he and the moderator delegated to the pastor of the entertaining church. So if this report was delayed and does not suit them, see "A. B. C."

Our Revival

At a business meeting, it was decided that, if we could procure the services of Brother A. L. Lynn, the new pastor of our church at La Verne, we would arrange the time to his convenience. After consulting with his people, we arranged to begin a two-weeks' meeting March 11th. Our people heard him during the Conference and were thus anxiously awaiting his coming. We prepared for his coming by prayer and a survey of our field through the Bible school and church. We did some advertising to inform the people that a meeting was in progress and the pastor directed his messages preceding to the essentials of revival. When Brother Lynn came, we were ready; we turned him loose with no ribbon attachments. He preached the Word in his pleasing manner, pleased his hearers and aroused the membership to concerted action. To invitations of consecration there were seven responses which added emphasis to our efforts. There were three confessions coming scattered during the meeting until the last day. These confessions were from splendid families and will be valuable material in our future work. But the climax of the meeting came on the last Sunday of the meeting. The school met in the main auditorium for closing services when Brother Lynn made an appeal for confessions and in response twenty-two came confessing Jesus as Savior. There is no question as to where the church finds the field of evangelism. Confessions by relation and reconsecrations total thirty-three. Some of these already are baptized, others awaiting the sacred rite. Brother Lynn and his good wife endeared themselves to our people. This was the first opportunity for the pastor to work with him, and it was in every respect pleasant and profitable. May God bless him and his wife in the work with the La Verne church, and elsewhere as the Lord calls. We thank the La Verne people for the courtesy of permitting us the use of their pastor.

Delegations from the Second church of Los Angeles, with their pastor, Brother Kimmel, and also from the La Verne church, added much strength to the meetings. The music was under the direction of our own chorister, Brother Cecil Snyder. He attended every service and his efforts materially enhanced the success of the meeting. We thank him, the choir and the soloists.

We are now looking forward to Easter Sunday, for which special preparation is in progress. May the Lord bless every effort to his glory. We want to sound this note—church work in California does not come on easy street but demands vigilance and perseverance. We praise God for the opportunity of service in his name.

REVIVAL IN NEW YORK CITY

It was my privilege to spend three weeks in New York with Sister E. M. Aboud and her people. I can say that the Brethren there are struggling hard to continue their services from month to month. Their expenses for the hall and lights run from $175 to $180. This load is carried by six members of our church. These six are the main standbys of our work there and much credit is due them.

Sister Aboud works at this place without salary and as far as I know she does not even lift a free will offering for herself. Sister Aboud is well known among most of the churches in New York, and her friends are many. I do not know of anyone who so easily can gather an audience on the street as she. Further she holds them as good as any street preacher I ever saw.

The attendance in the Gospel Hall during the winter season is not so good; I was told that the attendance was often less than ten, and from that number up into the twenties. When we first had twenty-four, I was told that the attendance was good that night. During the third week of services we had several bad days with rain, snow and slush, even a great deal of mud in places. The total confessions were eight. However there seems to be a habit among the wanderers in New York to go to a mission hall and confess to get a night's lodging or something to eat. Some of these are so clever at the game that they shed tears, and will testify as to the way they are blessed in the services, and the realization of salvation. I was not up to these tricks and as a consequence I was pulled for a "lift" a few times and thereby learned the lesson. On the last Sunday we had a beautiful baptismal service in Dr. J. B. Stratton's church, about two blocks away from the Brethren Gospel Hall. There were seven who put on the Lord Jesus in baptism. All of these baptized were attendants at the hall, and three of them were waiting to be baptized. The others were Rev. A. S. Vogan and wife. These were both members of the Baptist church mentioned, and these had for some years done work among the Chinese people both in New York City and in Ontario, Canada. One man for whom they had prayed for several months also said "yes" to Jesus, and followed him all the way, even to be buried in baptism with Jesus. This Captain J. Billings for several months was a great help to our people in New York and there was great joy as they learned he had said yes. Mr. Billings had for years been a member of the Moravian church, but now is with us. Thank God for it, and may God make him a great blessing wherever he may be. There are many chances for hard, and self-sacrificing work in this cosmopolitan city, with its many channels for doing good. To me it seems that no church could fill this place better than the Brethren church, with a whole Gospel without trimmings, fringes or perforations. God in his great love CUT THIS BIBLE AS HE WANTED IT TO BE. Our remodeling on God's perfect work is like throwing mud on a perfect and beautiful picture, or like trying to tear the first floor from under a ten story building, and expecting the nine stories to hold themselves up in the air. New York, as well as any other city, is hungering for a whole gospel, which is known so little in the whole world. People often asked, "What is this that your church is teaching, we believe that since times and people change by enlightenment, that it is perfectly right to submit to these changes as we meet them." My answer to such folks is that our Bible teaches that the plans and purposes of God were complete in Christ Jesus before the foundations of the world; that God is the same yesterday, today and forever; that though the world and all hell pass away, God's word changes not. In the Gospel of Mark, chapter 16, verses 14-18, as well as in Matthew 28:20 we find the teaching of Jesus was to be continued to all the nations, to every creature. The minister whom we baptized said, "I saw these teachings in the word often but did not think of them in that way, until I saw the diagram you placed on the blackboard. As the explanation was given I could not get away from it and be true to the word of God." We are looking for several more to settle this matter in the future as they showed signs of uncertainty, though they were said to be contented with their baptism and other sacraments.

The communion service was observed Sunday evening and nineteen took part. All of these were not as yet members, but they all confessed this service to be as the word of God commanded, and very uplifting to the soul.

The last night one young boy, aged 16, came forward for the second time. He had played on the sympathy of some for nearly four weeks and made sport of it. However the evening before his second confession he and another man of the boat on which he was hired, had been in the city to get groceries for the crew. As they came back this young boy stepped from the pier into the Hudson River. How it happened that the boy got under the pier instead of out into the river I could not explain. As he came forward the next night I asked him, "Will you now quit playing with the Lord?" He said, "I decided that last evening as I was under the pier bumping my head against the pilings." I could not help saying, "Praise the Lord," as I saw him weep and sob. As he confessed he said, "I was nearly one hour in that cold water under the pier before they got me. I thought over things then more in earnest and I now will settle it all." I don't care what kind of bumps they get, as long as they are bumped over on the Lord's side.

Sister Aboud has in New York some mighty fine Brethren working with her. Several of them are deeply consecrated to God, and very active in service for the Lord, and are ready to give their life and substance for the promotion of the gospel.

I shall long remember the kindness and sacrifices of these good people—Sisters Aboud and Thomas, and these brethren—Anderson, Rev. Allen Christensen, Billings, Gotti, Wingert. Rev. Vogan and his wife and several others whose names I do not recall, but whose kind deeds will remain with me.

May God bless both pastor and people at this place and make them a mighty power for good, even to the salvation of thousands in their city. The field seems ripe and ready for harvest, the laborers are few, may God help us to see the great need of laborers in New York state as well as in the city.

Your servant in Christ Jesus,
S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

PORTIS, KANSAS

You may have imagined that we had closed up shop, but not yet. We are still going; but like some of the rest of the churches have been slow about reporting since the first of the new year. We have been going forward in most departments of the church work. The Sunday school has been increasing in numbers and in interest. 1928 saw the largest average attendance of any year in many years, if not the largest ever. We just closed a contest on Easter Sunday with the largest attendance for almost a year.

The church work is moving along satisfactorily. We have some folks who are never quite satisfied with anything, but I suppose all churches find the same condition existing. But we are pushing on for larger things in Christ's name. All services are well attended. On Easter Sunday we baptized 7 young people and received them into the church, and several more were almost persuaded, but like Felix of Paul's day, they are waiting for a more convenient time.

The Christian Endeavor work is alive and going along steadily. It could be better, but also might be a lot worse. We have only the one society now, the Senior.

The W. M. S. work was never in better shape than at present. They have the largest membership in their history, and are quite a help to the church and its work by their loyal cooperation and financial support. They are not getting their money by any clap-trap methods: as oyster stews, box socials, and the like. We have very few financial problems that are not solved. We are getting several tithers here now. If we could get our churches to tithe all our money questions would be settled and settled according to God's will. Read again Malachi 3:10 and 11, and Matthew 23:23.

Our Foreign Missionary offering on Easter Sunday was the largest in the history of this church. Even then it could have been more, but praise the Lord for all the victories won. It is all by the mighty power of him who said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth" (Matt. 28:18).

A SOCIOLOGIST IN ENGLAND

I think in my last I was writing you about Belgium. In Brussels John and I parted company. We two had traveled together for the last five months from Japan. This period had given dad and grown son a chance to get well acquainted. For years in spite of the fact that we slept in the same house our ways had been so diverse, I a teacher and he a student, and both had been so busy that we had not had a good chance to associate closely. These five months together, all the time has been a great experience for at least one of the party. Both of us learned to know better the other and to appreciate each other more. The parting was not easy for the "old man" at least. Both missed Mrs. Gillin very much—more than can be told—but the fact that we were alone forced us into an intimacy we have never known before. It was a great experience.

John left for Berlin the day before I left for London. Probably never again shall we have the opportunity for the close association we enjoyed during those five months. Of course he will be home again, but inevitably the battle of life for himself means that less and less the parental roof will shelter him. However hard the wrench the thought brings me I would not have it otherwise. That is what we rear children for—the battle of life. I have no wish to keep him tied to us. He must make his own life. The part of a parent is bravely to fact the fact.

I have never felt before that the years are bearing me on to old age. I am glad, however, that I still feel that I have a few good vigorous kicks left in me. I ought to be good for 15 years more. However, I have no regrets and no complaints at life. It has been good. The struggle has sometimes been hard, but life has been a "good fight." It has meant slavery of the hardest sort, with no union hours, few and short vacations, limited financial returns and many disappointments with some successes. But if the rest of life shall be as good as the past I shall lie me down in peace at last. Without overworking the old theological doctrine I can say without boasting but in humble appreciation and gratitude, that a kindly Providence has watched over my path. Of course not half the dreams I had when 23 years ago I came out of Columbia have been realized. But I know I have tried "as much as in me lay" and must say the "the lines have fallen for me in pleasant places" on the whole. I have had abundant health, have been blessed with a most faithful and helpful team-mate. The children are grown. No man can say that I have not paid my debts. I have done an enormous amount of work for which I have never received any pay. Some of it, perhaps was not worth while, but that cannot be known until the "final reckoning."

I have honesty tried to keep the Kingdom of God in view in all my work. The results are in his hands. Mistakes have been made? Yes, many. I have had my share of honors. I am content. My future like the past is in his hands. I have written all this to give point to this suggestion: Young man and young woman, do your work without fear of man. Speak the truth that is in you. Do your work with an eye single to honesty of purpose and to the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God. He is more interested in the outcome than you can possibly be. It is his Kingdom. Do not listen to every yammerer who crosses your path. Keep to your purpose. Hammer away. Recognition will come. If not here, then hereafter. God does not forget and is never unappreciative. At best the race is all too short. Run while you may. But this is not London.

A two hours' run took us to Ostend where we got the Channel boat for Dover. Then the boat train waiting for us whisked away through the green fields of an English spring, past cities busy with various industrial activities to London.

This time London met us with rain, fog, and chill. I haven't been so cold this year. I was glad I had my winter clothes along. Most of the time I spent in visiting English prisons. I had only two days for sightseeing.

I had written our embassy from Switzerland that I was coming and asked them to pave the way for me to get permits to visit the prisons. In a pouring rain I went over to the embassy to see what they had done. A very pleasant man met me. Had I perhaps written and my letter miscarried? He could not find the letter at once. Had I perhaps brought with me from the State Department at Washington a letter authorizing them to make these arrangements for me? No, I had not. I assured him that the only place I had had any difficulty was in Egypt and that on going to the American Consul, he had immediately got me in touch with the proper authority and I had got my permits. But he assured me, the State Department had strictly warned them that they were not to do such things. But, I replied, here are my credentials from the Social Science Research Council. Finally the letter was found and I was taken into the beaming presence of the Councillor of the Embassy. This man was all oil and molasses, but he could do nothing officially because of the warnings of the State Department. However, he knew one of the English Prison Commissioners personally and perhaps he could unofficially speak a word to him in my favor. Well, by this time my Irish was up. What is an embassy for? Is it simply to help social climbers to get tickets for social functions of English royalty in London, to attend English dinners, as one can see by the London papers, the numbers are constantly doing. Or, is it in part to help duly accredited students to find out something needful for American social science? I told him not to trouble himself, that I thought I could get what I wanted without the help of the Embassy. I had been in all other countries but Egypt and there the American representatives seemed to have a somewhat different conception of their functions. I left him. I went straight up to the House Office building, sent in my card to the Secretary of the Prison Commission, told him what I had been doing, showed him my permit from the French authorities to visit their prisons and without asking for it, he offered to give me permits to visit any English prisons I wished. That American Embassy is a great institution!

I visited five of their institutions, two local prisons, the original Borstal Institution for young offenders, a convict prison on the Isle of Wight and Camp Hill for Preventive Detention, also on the Isle of Wight. Everywhere they gave us every facility to see everything I wished.

England has made great progress in her prisons since the days of John Howard. She has unified control and England has had such a decrease in crime that last year she closed 17 local prisons. The system cannot be described here, but I hope to say something about it in another place.

That finishes my study of the treatment of the criminal outside the United States. I have visited these institutions in Honolulu, Japan, the Philippines, Malay States, Ceylon, India, Egypt, Jerusalem Switzerland, France, Belgium and England. I have learned much. Everywhere I have been shown the most cordial treatment, except at the hands of our own Embassy in London. I have discovered some things which are not known by our American sociologists and and penologists. During the summer in addition to teaching for weeks in the summer school of the University of Wisconsin, I shall be writing my report for the Social Science Research Council which commissioned me to make this study. I shall probably have little time to write any more for the Evangelist.

I might just as well say my farewell now. I am writing this in the middle of the Atlantic on the way home. How good it will seem to get back. I have had a wonderful trip. I have seen things which will profit me the rest of my days. I can even yet not get over the wonder of the fact that I have been permitted to make the trip. Now I know from experience that the world is round, not flat. I have seen the Japanese and Chinese at home. I have seen that wonderful possession of ours, the Philippines. I have seen a little of the life of the 320 million of Indians, observed them in their villages as well as in their seaport cities. I have looked on the ruined glories of Egypt and have drunk in something of the spirit of that ancient civilization. I have sat on Ceylon's coral strand while the waves of the Indian Ocean dashed upon it. I have felt the heart beat of those Indian millions in their Hindu idol worship. I have trod the land lifted out of its barrenness and glorified by the light which streamed from the face of Jesus. I have looked upon Smyrna where the martyr Polycarp died for his testimony. I have walked through the streets of Constantinople, once the glory of the dying Roman Empire, but for so long decaying under the unspeakable Turk, and only now once more beginning to develop under a Turkish Republic. I have stood upon the Acropolis of Athens, once the glory of the ancient Greece and still the inspiration of scholars and artists. Once again I have visited the chief centers of "the glory that once was Rome."

Besides all these after 20 years I have seen the changes wrought in Europe by the War and its consequences. It seems like a dream. Through it all except for the serious illness of Mrs. Gillin, which so disappointingly upset our plans, we have not been sick a day, have not missed a meal. When I reach New York I shall have travelled over 30,000 miles, probably nearer 35,000 counting in the land travel through India, Egypt, Palestine, Europe and the Philippines. Up to date I have not been robbed of a cent and have lost no money I know of. Most of the people I have met have been friendly and helpful. My mind has been broadened by it all. An appreciation of the difficulties still to be overcome before "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea" is mine which I never had before. Yet, no pessimism about the ultimate realization has been born in my mind. But a sober optimism and one transposed by a patience and persistence if which few men dream is mine.

I have enjoyed writing you about these experiences. I hope those who have taken the trouble to follow us may have enjoyed them a little and profited much. In speaking to an audience a speaker can tell whether he is reaching his hearers, but in writing one is shooting in the dark.

I cannot close without wishing those who have read these articles written in hotels, on trains and on board ship, written hurriedly, will overlook the shipshod writing of which I have often been guilty, and will not unkindly remember that they were done in the broken and often weary interludes of hard traveling and sight-seeing. Especially do I hope that my younger readers may find some inspiration in them to strive to know, to judge kindly, to aim high and strive nobly. If I, a son of a farmer—who died without ever going to college or stepping foot outside his native land, can reach some of his boyhood dreams and more, who has had to earn almost every dollar he has ever spent since he started to college, there is no reason why you cannot do almost anything these days you set out to do. I challenge you to try. Only in our land are such things possible to so many. To that dear land my face is now turned and the ship is bearing onwards toward it night and day at 15 knots per hour. It cannot go too fast, for at the end is home, good friends, life's work and best of all the Beloved.

Auf wiedersehen!

ABOUT MINSTRELS

Minstrels were an order of men in the Middle Ages who subsisted by the arts of poetry and music, and sang to the harp verses composed by themselves and others. They wandered from castle to castle, and in exchange for their entertainment often were presented with gifts of great value.

Those called mummers were a type of minstrel who dressed themselves in various highly colored garments and often masqueraded at Christmas time. Usually they were recruited from the poor people of the district, and by this means were able to obtain, at the hands of the rich, Christmas gifts denied them by poverty.

During the Middle Ages in every country the minstrel of England has a counterpart.

Often they were accompanied by "histriones and gleemen." During a period of English history they sometimes helped at divine service, but as they gradually acquired the arts of juggling and sleight-of-hand and became the central attractions at fairs, May day festivals, and country weddings, in the end they degenerated into a type of vagabond that at last came under the ban of royal edict.

The troubadours of France, particularly in Provence, were men of honor and often wealth. They celebrated remarkable events, heroic acts, and carried news—often scandal—from castle to castle. The word "troubadour" originally meant "inventor." They spoke the Romance-Latin of southern France, and during the twelfth century rose to a high estate as poets, winning the acclaim of the great. Often they employed singers to repeat the verses in the summer that they wrote during the winter, and shared emoluments with them. Richard Cœur de Lion was a troubadour, and Folquet of Marseilles, son of a merchant of means, ultimately elevated himself to a bishopric.

Emma Calve, the grand opera singer, once had an ambition to restore the genius of the old Provencal language by endowing a theater at her birthplace, Nîmes, Provence. In connection with her aims along this line, she once said of troubadours: "The contagious influence of their generous gayety made them welcome in those courtly castles which too often were the abodes of semi-barbarous cruelty and rapine. Their gentle art, devoted to the cultivation of sentiment and blitheness, practiced at its best in no spirit of self-seeking, but with ideal and chivalrous aims, could charm the most unguarded moments of private life. And so, in the course of a century or two, it was enabled to influence public opinion at a time when printed literature did not exist, nor the dramatic stage exert its power."

Everywhere in Europe they took the place both of the theater and library, and invariably made no charge for their services, but were given pay at the pleasure of their host, in such measure as he deemed them worthy.

X.—“Making Christ Real”

By H. F. Stuckman

Professor Denny in his book, “Jesus and the Gospel,” says: “Christ is the Prince of Life, Lord of all, Judge of the living and the dead, Giver of the Spirit, Fulfiller of all promises, now at God’s right hand.” This would mean little to us if it were not wholly substantiated by the New Testament Scriptures, which clearly indicate that Jesus was supernaturally born, lived a supernatural life, and manifested a supernatural power over the hearts of men. Certainly these claims ought to be tested by every Christian. Long ere this, we should have proven the reality of his claims in our own lives. For our own protection and safety we should know whether or not he is what he claimed to be.

The marvelous thing we find is that every bit of evidence bearing upon the subject will prove him just what he claims to be. Not only will the New Testament paint a picture, such as I have indicated, but the history of individuals will do the same, and the glorious history of the church will lend evidence sufficient to convince the most skeptical. Certainly there is nothing the world needs more than a Christ who is what the New Testament pictures him to be. The greatest boon that could come to us as individuals, is to personally acquaint ourselves with him, and in daily fellowship and comradeship permit him to vindicate every claim for himself, in our lives. We will be richer and better for it. Goshen, Indiana.

A TRUCKLOAD of Booze for Siam

Under the rather strange rule of "diplomatic immunity," the foreign diplomats at Washington are permitted to import liquors for their own (and their American guests') consumption. Upon this hangs a remarkable tale.

Not long ago the Siamese Legation hired a private truck to haul sixty cases of the stuff from Baltimore to Washington, and the police, not being able to tell the difference between Siamese liquor and other kinds, seized the entire truckload and arrested the unfortunate driver of the truck.

Siam has not yet declared war upon the United States for the "insult" nor has the matter been referred to the League of Nations, but quite an international rumpus has been aroused over the case.

The booze has been returned to the Siamese Legation together with an expression of "regret" for the incident. Hereafter, according to a ruling by the State Department, the foreign diplomat must use his own automobile (which is generally too small), or buy a truck of his own (which is rather expensive), or else hire a truck and drive it himself (which is rather undignified).

Doubtless, prohibition agents will now be required, when they arrest a "rum-runner," to examine his credentials. If he is found to be a properly accredited "diplomat" from Siam or Liechtenstein, he will be set free and a special police escort will be provided to guard the liquor so as to reach its destination in Washington without danger from American "high-jackers" who are not too careful about the international amenities. Thus we shall maintain our standing in the "brotherhood of nations."

Truly, the way of the prohibition enforcement officer is hard. The ancient Mosaic law, written some thirty-five hundred years ago, had a very simple and satisfactory way for solving problems like this one: "One law and one ordinance shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you." (Numbers 15:16 R. V.)

A CHURCH that stands for Something

The signs of the times are not all depressing. The following notice recently appeared in the always interesting weekly calendar of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California:

"Put this down in your note book once and for all—the First Brethren church of Long Beach stands for the clean, wholesome, separated Christian walk and experience. If you see some member of this church sneaking into a modern movie and delighting himself or herself in the obscene suggestions received there in word and picture; or, if you see them come crawling out of a licentious dance hall wherein lovely womanhood is constantly being debased and the right to fondle sold cheap to the common herd; or, if you see them buying a lascivious magazine from one of these newsstands, the stench from which would make a turkey-buzzard vomit; or, if you hear them reeling off a story reeking with puritid filth; or, if you see them flinging around the recognized paste-boards of every gambler, even though in so-called "highly respectable society,"—just remember that The Brethren church at Fifth and Cherry stands for none of these things, and as members of this church, they are sailing under false colors. Some of these days, they will either repent and confess their sins, or go out from us, of their own accord or otherwise, and join those "beggary elements of the world" to which they assuredly belong!"

This, at least, is one of the encouraging "Signs of the Times."

FOLLOWING the Example of Peter.

Pope Pius X, who died in 1914, once appealed to the example of the Apostle Peter as a precedent for breaking a custom of the Popes.

Pius, who was a sociable sort of person, gave orders that a place at his own table be prepared for his personal secretary. The Vatican Court officials protested, saying that "the Holy Father always eats alone." "Is that so," replied the Pope; "are you quite certain that St. Peter always ate alone?" The appeal to St. Peter settled the matter, and the Pope ate with his secretary, which is to his credit.

If the example of Peter may be taken as authority for breaking this particular Papal custom, students of Church History will wonder why some other more important Papal customs are not abolished. For example: Peter was never called "His Holiness." Peter never regarded himself as the "Rock" upon which the church is built. (I Peter 2:6-8). Peter never claimed to be the supreme head of the church upon earth; but regarded himself as an elder among the other elders (I Peter 5:1), an Apostle among the other Apostles. Peter was not a celibate, but was the head of a Christian home. (Mark 1:30). Peter never claimed temporal sovereignty for either the church or himself. (I Peter 2:13-14). Peter never heaped curses upon his enemies in his official capacity as an Apostle, as some of the Popes have done, but taught just the opposite. (I Peter 2:21-23).

If the Papacy had always followed the example of the Apostle Peter, Christian people would not regard it with such suspicion and aversion. And the pages of church history would be more readable.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

24. Do you think II Peter third chapter accurately describes the time we are now living in? J. J., Calif.

This scripture like many others finds us just as, and how we live. It is one of the characteristic marks that distinguishes Holy Scripture, that it speaks a universal language. The words of Peter may have had application in the day he wrote them. Perhaps other generations since then have likewise been portrayed by these same words. That his words, and many other passages, quite accurately and fully describe the day in which we live should be apparent to the most casual reader. This teaching might be illumined from St. John. He speaks of antichrist. See I John 2:18; 2:23; 4:2. Then he adds that already many antichrists have arisen. He further defines antichrist as a spirit of denial of Christ and as the spirit of deception. II John 7. Now all this may have been taking place before the eyes of John as he wrote, and yet, the many other places where a similar spirit of deception, denial and hostile opposition to Christ is spoken of make it certain that at the end of the age Satan's supreme effort will be an incarnation of evil so malignant and dominant that we are justified in calling this person "The Anti-Christ."

25. I overheard one of our faithful older ministers remark that the church has no place for its older men. He said that in other church conferences the older men were in evidence, but that our church was in the hands of the younger men. If this is true what is the cause?

My candid opinion is that as long as a man can do his work, or do a worthwhile piece of work he will be in demand and his services will be appreciated. It is partly a matter of personal adjustment to the needs of a congregation that makes it more difficult for an elderly man to hold the field as against an equally efficient and more readily adaptable younger man. Then, and I think this is more nearly the heart of the matter, the older men do not keep alive mentally, socially and professionally. First, I mean that they quit their studies and their real constructive thinking lags and finally ceases. Then they preach the old sermons over. That would be tolerable if they gave these old sermons, the truth that was in them at the first, new and living garments to properly clothe them for our new day. I mean, too, that they refuse or fail to adapt themselves to the changing modes of life which each new generation brings in with its own advent. Finally, they lose out in methods of carrying forward the work of the church. The day when the minister did all the work is past. Happy the man who gives himself to the WORD.

At present the average age of the inmates of Sing Sing prison is twenty-eight, lower than it has been for some years. New York's Police Commissioner, Grover Whalen, says that of 3,200 criminals rounded up in recent drives, fifty per cent were between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one; and a police commissioner in the south states that in thirty years of experience with crime and criminals he has never known such extreme youth among lawbreakers as at present.

Organic Church Unity and What We Need More

Church unity is in the air these days, and many denominational groups are conferring with other denominational groups on the possibilities of merging their forces. It is an indication of a wholesome type of Christian spirit that is abroad in Protestantism, and within certain limits we are ready to give it our encouragement. Those limits are these, that we believe in denominationalism, so long as a denomination is conscious of having a distinctive mission and message. Whenever a church group discovers that it is a practical duplication of another church group or groups, we believe there ought to be overtures started for uniting forces. And it must be acknowledged that not a few of the denominations have lost whatever of distinctiveness they ever had, and some of them never had much. Where such close similarity exists there is little excuse for separate existence. And the more closely church groups resemble each other the more strongly are they under obligation to seek to get together. There is no longer any good reason for the continued existence of so many types of Methodists, or so many kinds of Presbyterians, or so many separate groups of Baptists, or for the several branches of Dunkers. There are other church groups that are close of kin and much alike in doctrine and practice, and a uniting of such organizations would add much in the way of strength and prevent for the future much overlapping of fields and unnecessary duplication of equipment.

We do not believe, however, in the wisdom or the rightness of a union of church groups that have outstanding differences in belief and practice. The compromising or the casting aside of the convictions involved would mean a great loss. For example, we do not believe the Brethren church ought to consider any proposal for unity with another church that has no sympathy for the ideals and practices that have made the Dunker fraternity what it is. We should maintain a fraternal and kindly spirit toward all and be ready to cooperate with other Christian groups in the building up of righteousness and in the destruction of evil in whatever ways seem practicable. But organic unity is not necessary to such ends, and from other points of view it would result in a real loss and be positively harmful to the Kingdom interests. We believe God needs a people who will continue to take all his teachings and commandments seriously. Surely he will not allow any portion of his blessed Word to perish from the earth; he will save for himself a people who will prize it, preserve it and obey it in all its parts. And may we not believe that the Dunker fraternity has come to the Kingdom for a time like this? We shall not criticize those who hold that this or that portion of the Word was not intended for our day, or that trine immersion and footwashing are not necessary as church practices, nor will we take an uncooperative and unchristian attitude toward them. But we do not think it advisable to marry into their church family, denominationally speaking. We have a right and a duty to maintain our separate existence as a church, that we may be used of God for the preservation of a whole Gospel faith and full Gospel obedience. If that is our mission, there is no obligation to consider union with those who do not agree with us on such vital matters. But we may well be serious about making strong our witness by seeking to weld together all those groups who share with us such a Gospel foundation.

However, there is something we need as a denomination and as congregations more than reunion with other groups of Brethren people, and there is something more that any church needs than union with other church groups of its kind, and that is, a more vital contact with the Lord Jesus Christ and a new sense of the urgency and importance of the church's mission. The mere fact of being a part of a large or a larger ecclesiastical body would not of itself put life into a dead congregation, nor fire with enthusiasm an indifferent preacher. Working for organic church unity within proper limits is good endeavor, but let us not be deceived by imagining that such an achievement when consummated will solve all our church problems, or even our biggest ones. We are apt to expect "too much of this thing which we call unity," said Dr. Charles L. DeBow, prominent Methodist Episcopal minister of Cleveland, recently. "A preacher who is satisfied with playing at his task and repeating platitudes would not be changed by the changing of the name of his church," he declared. Again he pointedly questioned: "If we could unite the churches of Cleveland, or of any other larger community into one great body bearing the name 'United Churches of America,' what evils which now confront us would be removed thereby, or what great program of redemption would be immediately consummated by this action?" Indeed, there is something vastly more vital than church union that many churches need in order to become effective forces for righteousness and kingdom extension.

This is not said to discourage any who are enthusiastic about the achieving of proper organic church union—we ourselves are full of zeal about it. But it is important to bear in mind that the church's chief weakness is not its denominational divisions, and that its most urgent need is not organic union with other groups. Far more important is it that its contacts with God shall be tightened up and that it shall be baptized anew with zeal for the prosecution of its task.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Communion at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, April 28, at 7 o'clock, A. R. Staley, pastor.

Communion services will be held at Gretna, Ohio, on Sunday evening, April 28th at 8 o'clock, with Brother C. K. Sandy, the pastor, in charge.

As this paper will be going to mail the College Board of Trustees will be in session. Doubtless President Jacobs will give us a report for an early issue.

He who belittles emotion in religion is talking against the thing that emotion is made of, and he who makes light of appeals to the emotions discredits the means most essential to the imparting of a vital grip on the things of truth.

The parable of the prodigal son is really the story of the Father's immeasurable love. Some say the father of the parable was injudicious and extravagant in his love and bestowals upon his wayward son. But behold, how effective! Just so, some are telling us not to preach the everlasting love of God—"it will lead men to think lightly of sin." But it never does.

The new Brethren church at Ellet, Ohio (near Akron) will be dedicated on April 28th, with Rev. B. F. Owen officiating. An all-day program is planned. Basket dinner will be served in the basement, the ladies of a nearby church serving hot coffee. Neighboring churches are invited. Visitors are requested to bring their basket dinner. More detailed announcement next week, says the pastor, Brother Floyd Sibert.

Dr. W. S. Bell has visited the church at Morrill, Kansas, in the interest of College Endowment and found a very loyal group, willing to do what they could with a willing mind. Brother L. A. Myers is the popular pastor of this church and is leading them in the doing of a good work locally and also in the support of every general interest of the brotherhood. Their gift to Endowment was $1,235.00, which, added to the previous total brings the fund up to $207,115.20.

We regret to announce the death of Elder A. C. Hendrickson of Ontario, California. He was stricken with paralysis a few weeks ago, as we announced through these columns, and on April 13th he passed on to his eternal reward. Brother Hendrickson was well known to the brotherhood through his work as bursar of the college some years ago and as an instructor in that institution. He has recently been a big factor in planning and executing the building of the new Second church of Long Beach. A suitable memorial will be published later. We extend sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family.

We are informed by the secretary of the church at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Brother G. M. Garland, that they are to have a new pastor in the person of Rev. Claud Studebaker, of Leon, Iowa, who will take charge on June 1st. They entertain high hopes for the church under his leadership. Spring communion will be conducted on Sunday evening of April 28th at 7:30, with Elder Gans in charge assisted by Dr. Galen B. Royer of the Church of the Brethren.

The Evangelist office recently had the pleasure of a visit from Rev. Virgil C. Finnell, a member of the Church of the Brethren and an employee of The No-Tobacco League. He gave in the First Brethren church and other places an informing and very effective lecture accompanied with lantern slide pictures on the effects of the present day cigarette evil. Brother Finnell's attitude toward the "Progressive" group is that of the utmost friendliness, and that we think is representative of the "Conservative" attitude quite generally.

This issue of the Evangelist carries a memorial of the late Brother E. L. Kilhefner in which three of our brethren participate. There are many who would have been glad to pay in this manner their tribute to our lamented brother, so much was he loved and so widely known by the leadership of our church, but we may take the sentiment of these three, Brethren Miller, Jacobs and Teeter, as representative of the respect of all who knew him. It will be long before we will cease to feel the loss occasioned by the departure of Brother Kilhefner, but we have this consolation, that the church is stronger and better because he lived and served.

Brother W. S. Crick, pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, reports four added to the church by confession of faith and one by reconsecration, besides many of the membership giving themselves anew to the Lord in devotion and service, as a result of the recent meeting conducted by Dr. J. C. Beal. The pastor and his people greatly appreciated the Bible instruction of the evangelist, and the impression upon the communion seems to have been very marked. An important feature of the meeting was the preparation, which extended over an entire week and the first part of which was a service by the Girls' Gospel Team of Ashland College. The church has elected a board of deacons and deaconesses, which ought to mean much toward the maintenance of a higher state of spirituality among the members.

Brother E. M. Riddle came forth from the church at Tiosa, Indiana, some years ago (we are not at liberty to say how many years ago!) to prepare for the ministry, and now for a number of years he has been giving a good account of himself in the Brethren ministry. Recently his home church called their "boy" back to preach for them during a revival meeting, and a splendid season of fellowship was enjoyed. Tiosa is rightly proud of Brother Riddle, because of the service he has rendered as a pastor, and also, they are proud of their other "boy," Brother Harley Zumbaugh, who has rendered such effective service in Gospel song. One accession is reported. Brother Edgar A. Duker comes out from South Bend to shepherd these people. He pins his hope for the future of this work on the splendid group of young people he has in his church. Any church or pastor may well feel optimistic over the possession of such an asset.

The town of Dallas Center, Iowa, with 900 inhabitants served by nine religious groups, is an example of the overchurched community from which American Christianity is suffering in many places and which makes church work discouraging and slow. But our good friend, the pastor of the Brethren church of that community is not discouraged, but tells us wherein he thinks his church excels the others. That sort of enthusiasm is contagious and likely accounts in a large measure for the really aggressive spirit of the Brethren group there. We do not advocate a competitive and proselyting spirit on the part of our people, but we do think a man must have a great faith in his church and a strong conviction in the importance of its mission if he is to make any real impression on the world today. And we are inclined to think that here is a place where we all might step forward a bit—that is, in love and loyalty to the denomination and its distinctive plea. Brother Cashman reports thirteen additions to the church, nine of whom came during their Passion Week services.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie, pastor of our mission work at Krypton, Kentucky, tells us of the close of the third year of their tuition school with commendable success. Brother G. E. Drushal was the speaker for the occasion. Three baptisms are reported, and the largest communion in Brother Kinzie's five years' pastorate is recorded. He surprises the brotherhood by his announcement that he is closing his work there, and we dare say the Christian Endeavorers who have been supporting this work will be as reluctant to have him leave as he says he has been to take the step, which he feels the Lord has led him to decide upon. He is entering another home mission field with big opportunity, and promises to write us next time from Harrah, Washington. Judging by the fine piece of work he and his efficient helpmeet have done at Krypton, we may expect splendid things to happen at Harrah under their ministry. Brother E. M. Davidson, who has proven himself an indefatigable worker among the mountain people, is temporarily in charge of the mission.

The church at Elkhart, Indiana, of which Brother W. I. Duker is pastor, received four additions to their membership on Easter Sunday, and also lifted their quarterly cash offering to apply on their building fund, and it amounted this time to the neat sum of $949.50. The various departments are to be commended for the fine way in which they maintain interest in these quarterly cash payments. We are interested in their method of meeting their payments, and are glad to note the success of it. The placing of responsibility upon church groups is not only getting the money, but is keeping the groups active and realizing the purpose of their existence. It is coming to be an unusual thing to receive groups of members from the Church of the Brethren, but the Elkhart church recently did a service in receiving a group of nineteen such members from Osceola, and saving them for the Dunker fraternity. The backwardness that once characterized the Church of the Brethren at large has long since departed, fortunately for the future of Dunkerism, but there are here and there little groups who cling to certain restrictions too strenuously to hold the allegiance of their younger members.

Brother George E. Cone, of Milledgeville, Illinois, is national statistician, and in this issue he is sending out an announcement which every pastor and congregational secretary should read and heed. He is working through the district statisticians, who are sending out blanks on which it is desired that every church should report. Pastors often look upon statistical reports as nuisances and pay little attention to them, but when the annual report is published and the church is given a poor showing there is very general disposition to criticize the statistician. This is not fair, and it is not the thing any conscientious pastor or church secretary would do if he would stop and think it through. It is only right, it is only duty, to cooperate in this matter. It is the concern and business of us all to give our church the best showing possible before the world, and we cannot do that by failing to report, or by withholding a third or a half of our registered membership. General Conference has ordered that the full local membership shall be reported. If a pastor wishes to divide his membership into active and inactive, or resident and non-resident members, or full members and associate members for purposes which concern the local congregation alone, that is his privilege. But when it comes to making out statistical reports, he is obliged to give the total number of members on roll. Now, let's do it, and do it promptly, when the blanks arrive.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER THIS WEEK

Pray for the church at Fremont, Ohio, moving forward under the leadership of Brother W. S. Crick.

Pray for the work at Krypton, Kentucky, in its transition stage.

Will Our Lord Come Back?

By Dr. F. E. Marsh

It seems almost superfluous to ask the readers of this paper such a question as the above, but we are reminded of the words of the Apostle, who, in referring to "The Everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," said, "Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance" (II Peter 1:11-13). Older believers are prone to forget that younger ones are not so conversant with the truth of the Lord's Coming; and it also becomes those who teach, to present the theme clearly, that the truth may be witnessed truly.

A colored waiter in Altoona, in Pennsylvania; recently asked the writer, when having a meal, "What will you have in conclusion?" The reply given was, "I have concluded." God's conclusions can only lead us to rightly conclude in the things which relate to himself. He has declared all things are not only created "by," but also "for" (tis, "unto") Christ. He is the goal and conclusion and end of everything. God does not ask us what we will have in conclusion, but he does tell us his conclusion is "to sum up all things in Christ;" and that conclusion begins when Christ comes back. Let us take a birds-eye view of the glorious truth of his advent.

Promises Fulfilled

"Surely I come quickly." "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to render to every man according as his work is" (Rev. 22:7, 12, A. S. V.) Christ's word of arrestment is, "I come quickly." Many of God's people are puzzled by the seeming delay of Christ. To them he has not come "quickly", and they wonder why! The late Sir Robert Anderson explained the delay by affirming, "The Lord would have been here long since, if the Church had been faithful." That may be an explanation. But may there not be another explanation, namely, That when he starts to come, he will come "quickly", even as there are two methods by which one may travel from New York to Chicago; one may go by the slow train, on a secondary railroad, or by the limited sixteen hours Pennsylvania express, which does the 1,000 miles in that time.

His coming is sure, for his promise is certain. "I come," "I come," is his triple word, so he is coming, for he has promised. He bids us to "Behold" his promise, that we may enter into its largeness, significance, and many-sidedness, and also the Amen of its certainty, and, further, he climaxes his promise by his "surely," or pledges, "My reward is with me." He will not be slack to honor those who have honored him; so he seems to say, "Do well—suffer for it—take it patiently—till you hear MY 'Well done,' and you receive the rewards you have earned from me."

Prototypes Realized

That Israel might remember God's grace and goodness. He instituted several feasts, which he called the Feasts of Jehovah (Lev. 23:4). These feasts in their detailed order give in sequence the foreshadowing of events from the Cross to the Millennium.

The Passover is typical of Christ our Passover sacrificed for us (Lev. 23:5; I Cor. 5:7). Christ our Passover as the sacrifice makes it possible for the Lord to pass all over his people, in his protecting grace, even as the mother bird shields her young under her protecting wings and feathers.

The Feast of Unleavened Bread is typical of a redeemed people, purging out the leaven of wickedness and malice, and living in communion with the Lord as a result of a holy walk (Lev. 23:6-8; I Cor. 5:6-8; II Cor. 7:1).

The Feast of the First-fruits is figurative of Christ's resurrection from the dead, and hence the Pledge, as the First-begotten from the dead, of all those who have fallen in him (Lev. 23:9-14; I Cor. 15:23; I Thess. 4:13-18).

The Feast of Pentecost is a foreshadowing of the coming of the Holy Spirit to form the Church, the mystical body of Christ, which is made up of Head and members into one living organism (Lev. 23:15-22; Acts 2:1-13; I Cor. 12:12, 13, 20).

The Feast of Trumpets (Lev. 23:23-25) is typical of the Lord's Coming, with trumpet sound and gathering shout, for his saints, when the voice of gathering will be heard by the living, and the trumpet herald will arouse the sleeping ones (I Cor. 15:52; I Thess. 4:16).

The Feast of the Day of Atonement (Lev. 23:26-32) is typical of the gathering of the nation of Israel, when they who pierced Christ shall look upon him and mourn (Zech. 12:10-13; 13:1), and be restored to him, for he shall appear the second time for those who look for him (Heb. 9:28).

The Feast of the Tabernacles (Lev. 23:34-36, 39-44) is typical of the Millennium, when the Lord shall tabernacle with Israel, and reign over the nations

HIS VOICE

By Dyoll Belote

*It is joy to hear his voice—
How it makes the heart rejoice,
As its accents, gentle, mild,
Sound the welcome, "Come my child."
It is joy! It is joy!*

*It is rest to hear its tones,
How it cheers the weary ones.
Come to me and be thou blest,
"Come and I will give you rest."
It is rest! It is rest!*

*It is power to hear him say,
"Lo I'm with you all the way."
In that pledge we find our might,
By its help we win the fight.
It is power! It is power!*

*It is grace that he should speak
Heavenly pardon to the weak.
And his grace—'tis thus saith he—"Is sufficient unto thee."
It is grace! It is grace!*

*It is love that prompts the Word,
It was love that sent the Lord.
And that love, supreme, divine,
Speaketh in that voice sublime.
It is love! It is love!*

*It is faith that moves the heart
From its sin to sunder part;
When forgiveness, humbly sought,
By that tender voice is wrought.
It is faith! It is faith!*

*Hear that voice and heed its call,
Give to him your life, your all.
Then shall joy, grace, rest and power,
Faith and love abide each hour.*

It is CHRIST! It is CHRIST!

Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

to their benefit, and when the descriptive scene in Psalm 72 will be realized.

The Feasts are wonderful in their detailed foreshadowing, and in the sequence of detail. We who believe in Christ, can see more than the body of their historical setting, we can see in their history a prophecy of future events.

Purpose Accomplished

With telling significance the Gospel of Matthew begins, "The Book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the son of Abraham." This expressive title connects the Old Testament with the New, and links up all the purposes of Jehovah which relate to the Throne of Israel, and the Land of Promise, with the Lord Jesus Christ. Thirteen times in the Old Testament we read of the generations of different people, but no mention is made of the two principal persons, identified with God's purposes, namely, Abraham and David, but when the New Testament begins, both of them are mentioned with Christ, as the Son of David and the son of Abraham. Both in the Old and New Testament we find God has determined to set one, who is of the seed of David, upon the Royal Throne; he even calls him "David My servant," and of him Jehovah hath declared he shall sit upon the throne of his father David, and reign for ever (Ezek. 37:24-28; Luke 1:32, 33), so that the nation of Israel is yet to be under monarchy again.

The purpose of Jehovah regarding the Promised Land is equally emphatic. The Promised Land reaches far beyond the Land of Palestine, as may be gathered from the original promise given to Abraham (Gen. 15:18-21), and the dividing of the land among the restored twelve tribes of Israel, as given in detailed territory according to the prophecy in Ezekiel 47:13-23.

Programme Detailed (Acts 15:14-18)

At the First Council of Christian Workers held in Jerusalem, the President, the Apostle James gave in detail the plan of God in relation to the Church, Israel, and the world. First, he declared it was God's purpose to "take out" of the nations "a people for his Name." This is God's purpose in this Dispensation. By the preaching of the Gospel he calls out of darkness into his marvellous light those who are saved by his grace and united to Christ. These constitute the Church, for, as the word "church" means, namely, the called-out ones are his body.

When the Body is complete (Eph. 1:17-23), or, as the Spirit puts it, "after these things, the Lord will build again the Tabernacle of David, which is fallen down" (R. V.). Israel like a tent blown down by the wind, will be "set up," and from the ruined fabric he will set up a new thing; then the "residue of men" will seek after the Lord. The "Residue" refers to the rest of the nation, the ten tribes. In Zephaniah 2:9, we read of the "residue" and the "remnant," and also in Isaiah 28:5, which undoubtedly refers to the rest of the nation of God's covenanted people Israel.

When God has dealt with his people Israel, and restored them again nationally and spiritually to himself, then his gracious operations will go forth to the Gentiles, or the nations of the earth. Such a description of things as predicted in the prophecy by Isaiah will then be known—"Break forth into joy, sing together; ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God" (Is. 52:9, 10). "All the ends of the earth" is truly expressive of the far-reachingness of the salvation which God will bestow upon the nations of the earth.

Here is God's programme; when the Church is completed, Israel comes upon the scene, and then the nations. The late John Wilkinson once happily put it, "The Jewish train has been shunted on to the sidetrack to let the express of the Church pass through. And when the Church has passed through, then the Jewish train will come on to the track again, and will be followed by the heavy freight of the nations."

Parables Demonstrated

Among the seven parables of the kingdom given in Matthew 13 are the Wheat and the Tares, and that of the Net. Christ explains the parable of the Tares and the Wheat, by telling us that the former represent the children of the wicked one, and the latter the children of the kingdom, and that in the consummation of the age the Lord will send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom the things that offend, and them which do iniquity (Matt. 13:24-30, 36-43). Our Lord also compares the kingdom to a dragnet, into which were gathered good and bad fish, and from which the good were gathered into vessels, and the bad cast away; and he points the parable by saying, "So shall it be at the end of the world, or the age; the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just." The teaching of the parables evidently takes in the larger aspect of things—namely, the professing Church, as described by Paul, as a house, in which are found vessels unto "honour and dishonour" (II Tim. 2:20), and not to the inner circle of the Church as the Body of Christ. It is important to distinguish between the inner circle of the Lord's own, and the outer circle of those who are found in the sphere of mere professionalism, or in the house of Christendom. Before the stringent action of Christ, through angelic ministry, is exercised, the inner circle of Christ's own will have been removed, and so the end of the age must relate to the removal of everything that offends, ere Christ establishes his beneficent rule on the earth.

Prophecies Completed

The disciples came to Christ and asked him three important questions, namely, "When shall these things be? what shall be the sign of thy Coming, and the end of the world or age?"

"These things" relate to the destruction of Jerusalem, which had a partial fulfilment in the devastation that came to that city in the year A. D. 70, under Titus, but it had a very small fulfilment in comparison to what will take place in the time of the end (Matt. 24:1-26).

The answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy Coming?" seems to be twofold, namely, the budding of the fig-tree, which means the sign of Israel's restoration, in their going back to their own land, and the tribulation through which the Jew will pass; and the sign of Christ coming back with his people, when the nations will see the glory which he has put upon them (II Thess. 1:10), and will admire them "in that day." He will then be manifest as he has said, "with power and great glory" (Matt. 24:27-36).

The answer to the question, the end of the age, is indicated right through the whole of Matthew 24, but in verses 37 to 51 he shows by his reference to the "days of Noah," that wickedness will abound, and that his return in judgment will take the world by surprise, as it did in the days of long ago.

Prospect Realized

The Gospel not only points back and tells us what Christ has done in his atoning death on the Cross; it not only points upward and tells us what Christ is now doing as our Great High Priest and Advocate with the Father, but it also opens up for us a glorious prospect as to the future, in reminding us what Christ will do for us when he comes to receive us to himself. This is seen if we but take three references to three truths of the Gospel, namely, salvation, eternal life, and redemption. Salvation is a threefold blessing. We have been saved from what we deserve as sinners by the grace of God through Christ (Eph. 2:8, R. V.; we are being saved from the power of sin and kept from sinning as we keep in touch with the vitalizing Savior, who is able to save to the uttermost (Heb. 7:25); and we shall be saved from the body of sin and death when our Lord comes back; hence we are waiting for him to give us a body like to his own (Phil. 3:20, 21).

Eternal life is equally a threefold blessing. The believer possesses this life because it is God's gift, and which means union, with God by means of Jesus Christ (John 3:36; Rom. 6:23; I John 5). Eternal life being a vitalizing principle to cause us to live to God, is that to which we are urged to lay hold, as Paul said to Timothy, when he exhorted him to lay hold on eternal life (I Tim. 6:12); and eternal life is also a future blessing as to its final beneficence, hence we are told to be looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life (Jude 1:21).

Redemption is a threefold cord also. Believers are redeemed from the bondage of sin because they have been loosed from its power, by the ransoming Blood of Christ; hence we can say we have "redemption through his Blood" (Eph. 1:7). Christ died that he might redeem us from all iniquity, or self-will, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession (Titus 2:14); but our redemption is not complete in its finality, for we are "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" (Rom. 8:23).

Not to present this threefold Gospel is to leave out one side of the triangle of truth, and thus to fail in giving a full testimony.

Pictures Which Illustrate

Perhaps one of the most striking illustrations of grace in the Old Testament is that of Abraham sending forth his servant Eliezer to get a bride for his son Isaac, and the conduct of Rebekah by Eliezer to Isaac. Eliezer is a type of the Holy Spirit, who goes forth in his gracious ministry to obtain a bride for Christ, and who is guiding the redeemed across the desert of this life, till he leads her into the presence of our Divine Isaac. When Rebekah was nearing the end of her journey, we read, "she saw Isaac," as he came forth to "meet" her (Gen. 24:63-66). Our Divine Isaac is coming forth to meet his own, and we shall see him, and we shall find, as Isaac found, we are the comfort of his heart, and the joy of his Spirit, for he loves us as only he can.

Another picture of the Return of our Lord is found in the history of David when he had to flee from the intrigues of his son Absalom. When Absalom met with an untimely death and David contemplated returning to his position as King (see the interesting story in II Samuel 15 to 19), he sent a message to Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and said, "Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, Why are ye the last to bring the king back?" The response to this request was "Return, thou," and "Lo, the king returned, and came to Jordan, and Judah came to Gilgal to meet the king" (II Sam. 19:11-16). Does not our Lord say something similar to us, "Why will ye not do all ye can to bring me back?"—The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman, and published by request.

Saved and Safe

By C. R. Sensenbaugh

TEXT—"My sheep . . . shall never perish." John 10:27-28.

To be saved is to be safe. To guide a man from one inflamed chamber into another, which shortly would be likewise demolished; to draw an individual from the verge of one precipice only to permit him to rove to the brink of another; to snatch a person from the track of an approaching express train only to let him to fall to his death before another whirling by in the opposite direction, cannot be classed as feats of rescue. The Divine does not preserve by such methods. When the Infinite rescues the finite the "Cities of Refuge" are utilized and are made into impregnable forts of the mighty God. He adopts and tenderly cares for the rescued as a shepherd cares for the sheep in his fold. His flock of sheep shall never perish.

The Seal of God guarantees safety. In Ephesians 1:13, we read, "In whom having also believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." Every great institution has a seal. The seal indicates ownership. The imprint of the Holy Spirit is God's seal. No human can counterfeit that seal, because it is infinite. When the seal of the Holy Spirit is placed upon your heart, you are owned and belong to the preserved sheep of God. Thousands of logs are cut awaiting the spring freshet. The spring flood has arrived. The lumbermen set afloat the valuable logs. It is very important that every log possesses the seal or initials of the owner. Laws are executed in every state preventing the logs from being stolen by thieves. When the logs reach their destination, they are distributed to each owner according to his respective seal. It is the presence of the seal of God that keeps us safe from the clutches of Satan. Once sealed, God elevates us until our lives are worthy of the Holy Seal, with which he has sealed us. By their seals shall you know them. The chief of the alluring pirates, Satan, is continually on the alert, focusing his allurements directly upon us, who are the sons of Deity. Mirthfully would he capture us as his trophy, if he were able. Repeatedly does he breathe such whispering voices into our ears: "Your life is far from being classed as excellent. You are not attaining or acquiring your own ideal, much less God's. You are a low rank of Christian after all. You will never be able to resist the noon-day sun of temptation. You will be defeated yet." Can't you detect the prevalent hiss of the great Enticer blending with the words of defeat? In fact, it is absolutely a misstatement of facts with intention to deceive by fictitious methods. He is endeavoring to stir and destroy our peace of Sonship, by influencing us to scan and examine our personal lives instead of peacefully resting in God's Seal of ownership. Encounter his onset by remembering this. However consecrated and holy God desires his temple to be preserved, yet it is the presence of the Seal of God which guards us from Satan's ravaging clutch.

Safe are the Sons of God, because the Holy Spirit within them is the security of an abiding salvation. The presence of the Holy Spirit's imprint upon the heart guarantees eternal care and protection. The Spirit is not only the distinguishing feature of God's proprietorship, but he is distinctly called an "earnest" of our inheritance (Eph. 1:14). An "earnest" is a pledge. It is money or a valuable article given to insure the fulfillment of a bargain. It is the lump of soil, or a key which is submitted to the purchaser of a property to promise him, that full and final control and possession will certainly follow. It is the owner's guarantee to the buyer that he will not be deprived of the possessions. The Spirit is not an isolated gift, which is brief in duration and transient in nature. He is the pledge of a steadfast and abiding deliverance. He is God's fore-promise that salvation in Christ is eternal, and assured until it is absolutely finished and consummated. Romans 8:23 calls him the "first-fruits." The full harvest is certain to follow. He is called the "earnest" of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, which is clearly the redemption, or glorification of the body. The word UNTIL needs careful consideration in this connection. An illustration will clarify: A banker sets the time-clock of the safety-vault, for a certain time. The treasures are not only sealed but are kept secure until that determined time. Not a person can open the vault until the set time arrives. So, identically is the sealing of the Holy Spirit. It is a sealing until the redemption of the body. God's "earnest" makes the property secure. "He abideth faithful." The seal will remain unbroken until the day of glorification.

The next argument of weight and import is based upon the text, "My sheep shall never perish." We are compelled to subscribe to the plain and evident word of God. It is a valid evidence of our safety. If a certain clause in a will gives all a man's property to a certain heir, no subsequent clause, which seems to give a part of the same property to another, shall stand. The certain cannot surrender to the uncertain. The plain shall not yield to the doubtful. Thus Christ says clearly and explicitly, "My sheep shall never perish." In the face of all difficult passages the Child of God may trust and be confident and rest clearly and quietly in his Lord's clean and explicit statement, "My sheep shall never perish."

His love will save us. John 13:1, "Having loved his own . . . he loved them unto the end." Every Christian possesses the Spirit of the Master, therefore he loves the lost world. He beholds it as a group of blind, sorrowful, wandering, and hopeless sheep not having a shepherd. He would do anything to win them to the Lord. God has given to man many things as his own. The wife whom God has made dearer to him than his own life is his own. The gray haired father and mother, who so tenderly nourished him all through his life are his own. The sturdy and stalwart son, the fair-faced and blond-haired daughter, of whom he is so proud are his own. We are the jewels of God. We are the Bride of Christ. Relentless foes are pursuing us continually. We are weak and helpless before them. All we can do is to take refuge in the bosom of Christ. He will never permit harm to come to us because we are his own. As the above man would be willing to give his life for his own, and love them to the end, so Christ will do the same. He will love us to the end of our failures and infirmities; unto the end of our sinning and stepping from the line marked out for us; unto the end of our lack of knowledge and our misunderstanding of his Grace; unto the end of our shortcomings and our fragmentary doings of his own perfect will; unto the end of all this and more. He will forever love us.

As a Child of God, everyone is safe and secure when he is in and because he is in Christ. Every Child of God has two births. At the initial birth everyone is legally united to the disobedient Adam. At the second, or New Birth, God's sheep are closely built into and knitted to the Obedient Adam, Jesus Christ. Excavating the "Holy Writ," we discover many figures of speech, mainly metaphors, used to demonstrate the distinct and precise closeness of this unity, and the well-founded safety involved in it. 1 Peter 2:5 presents the connection as compared to stones and bricks in a great building. To pull us away would be detrimental and marring to the building. 1 Corinthians 12:27 portrays us as members of his Body. To steal us would be to sever the mystical Body of Christ himself. John 17:23 declares that the revelation is compared to the unity of Father and Son. We shall accompany him all the way. He lives, therefore we shall live. Again mirth parallels the truth in Revelation 1:18, "I am alive forevermore." United with him, ultimately presents "eternal life" to each obedient sheep.

John 17:24, "Father I will that they also whom thou has given me, be with me, where I am." To will means more than to wish. God willed—and there was light; there was a firmament in the midst of the waters; Pharaoh must needs let his people go; the sea was opened; and the walls of Jericho were thrown into a debris. Christ willed—and lepers were cleansed; the blind were given sight and the dead were given life. For Jesus to will is to again call into action the will that patterned the universe. Jesus wills that we who are his, shall be with him, where he is. We are certain to accompany him because he wills it that way. His own are to be in glory with him because it is his good will.

The children of Deity are safe because they are in his grip. John 10:28, "And I will give them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." Consider if you will the plucking of them out of his hand. The skeptic will say, "I realize all that. I know I am secure while I hold on. But suppose my grasp or grip is broken. Then I shall be eternally lost." Reprove the doubter by saying, "But God does not say it that way." Thanks be to God, that he does not make our assurance and certainty depend upon our weak grip on God's hand, but places all the responsibility upon his everlasting and never failing grasp on our hand. His sons are always assured of safety, because his grip will last into the ages. A small innocent child is walking with her father on the deck of a large ship in mid-ocean. The blue sea is agitated and tumultuous. The youngster is walking the deck in fear firmly gripped to the hand of her father. Every lurch of the ship causes her to cling the more for safety. Her anxiety is based entirely upon the fear that her grip might break, and she be hurled into the angry sea below. She realized the weakness of her childish grip. Soon her father said, "Let go of my hand entirely and allow me to grasp your hand." The change was made. The safety of the child now depends not upon her weak grasp upon her father's hand, but upon the strong clasp of the father upon her's. Lack of fear was the result. Exactly the same picture is presented by the Word of God. Christ's pierced hand of love has a clasp that is known for safety and comfort. John 10:29, "No man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." This tightness of the grasp is made more certain and comfortable by the declaration, that "I and my Father are one." All the power of the pit and Satan cannot tear the child from that dependable anchor. The difference between the grasps is: trusting your own grasp robs you of peace, comfort and happiness, but trusting the Divine grip robs the child of all fear and anxiety.

1 Peter 1:15, "Kept by the power of God through faith," portrays a similar picture full of happiness and beauty. Think of the power of God that guides the daily path of the sun as he blazes his way across the heavens. Think of the power of God which holds the twinkling stars in their respective places in the midnight sky. Gaze at the surges of the rolling sea, whipping themselves into anger against the beach, the shore and the rocky cliff, and then meditate upon the power which halts their furious onslaughts. Then take a mirror and behold yourself, God's own dear child. Remember that the same authoritative power of God which is holding this physical earth, sea and sky in their appointed places, is the same force which is keeping you. Then let go, and trust that power to keep you instead of desperately struggling to keep yourself.

KATHERINE LEE BATES DIES

Katherine Lee Bates, forty years teacher of English literature in Wellesley College, and author of "America the Beautiful," which was first published in "The Congregationalist" of July 4, 1895, died on March 28, 1929, at nearly seventy years of age. She said some years ago when interviewed by Beatrice York Houghton that she received her inspiration for the writing of her famous poem on the occasion of a visit to Pike's Peak when "the vision from that great exalted height exalted her soul into poetic fervor."

HELPING ENFORCE THE LAW

We do not advocate ministers leaving their pulpits and turning sleuths in behalf of the enforcement of Prohibition, but we do not think they should close their eyes to flagrant violations of the law, nor refuse to report such violations as they know full well are going on. The Congregationalist carries a brief paragraph which records the example of a minister who did his duty along this line. Our contemporary says: "A new way of getting liquor has been demonstrated in New York City. You do not need to go to a speakeasy. A prominent Congregational minister was urged to try a new 'tonic' in one of the omnipresent drug stores. It was freely admitted that the tonic was just sherry or port, stamped with a new label. You could have whichever you liked, and could buy all you wanted of the 'medicine.' The Congregational minister believed in law enforcement, and reported the matter to the Prohibition enforcement commissioner. The next day the sale of 'tonic' was discontinued."

A PERILOUS TRADE IN NARCOTICS

The recent murder of a noted drug merchant, who left a fortune of many millions, is possibly the most powerful means of awakening the public mind, that could possibly be planned to bestir indifferent sentiment on the subject of narcotics. There is an analogy between one's attitude towards drugs and alcohol that should help us in moments of uncertainty in our fight against either of these great evils. A surgeon remarked recently that the profession would be nothing less than barbaric, were he and his fellow members deprived of the deadening effects of pain that narcotics make possible, and yet in those mercies lies the pathetic danger of creating a habit that would make the remainder of life a degradation and a shame. Whenever men dare to state that the relaxation of laws against alcohol is the hopeful remedy and cure of the habit of alcohol, we can answer the argument by its enlargement, making its application cover the problem of narcotics and say, If your argument is true, then the remedy and cure of the drug habit is to be effected by lifting the ban on the sale and distribution of drugs as a personal indulgence. The two great evils stand together as monsters, which like the giants of antiquity, wait to swallow those whom they capture.—The Presbyterian.

Daily Readings and Comments

MONDAY

"Without a Parable"—Ezek. 4, entire chapter; compare Matt. 13:34. Except for a few rare lines, the Koran and the writings of Buddha leave the reader bewildered, wondering what it is all about. Turning from such writings to the Word of God, one is immediately impressed with its genuine message. His message has ever been couched in terms that are easily understood and unmistakable. Men who would follow in his way, though simple in mind, need not err therein (Isa. 35:8). Let us rejoice that God hath so spoken.

TUESDAY

A Message of Love—Jer. 21:1-14; note especially v. 3. There are those who are offended at such passages as chapter 4, saying that it represents a God who is hard and implacable, and not a God of love. On the other hand, if one knew that a friend was facing certain danger, or death, and yet failed to warn him, he would stand condemned by men everywhere. So with our God: knowing the judgments that must come to pass upon all sin, in love he warns, calling upon his children to flee from the wrath to come. Let us praise him for his so great love!

WEDNESDAY

Fear, and Perfect Love—Ezek. 5; compare 1 John 4:18. By showing the children of Israel the judgments that must fall upon their idolatry, God hoped to win his people back to him. Some object to any attempt to win men through fear: it is, perhaps, not the way most to be desired, yet for many the fear of the Lord has been the beginning of wisdom. It should be remembered, however, that it is ONLY the beginning; leaving these first principles, we should go on to that perfect love that casteth out fear.

THURSDAY

Judgment—read 1 John 5. The judgments depicted in the sixth chapter of Ezekiel remind us of the judgments that shall precede the coming of the Son of Man. Then, as here, judgment is because of idolatry. It is no new thought to say that many are worshipping idols today, and John's plea that we keep ourselves from idols is still timely. Give us strength, O Lord, that we may keep ourselves from idols, and serve the Living God!

FRIDAY

The Vision Renewed—read Acts 9. The opening words of Ezekiel 8 recall the opening words of the first chapter. The time and place were very definite in the experience of Ezekiel, though the place was different: once by the river of Chebar, and again in his own house. Let us rejoice in an omni-present God, communing with and strengthening us in our hour of need, regardless of place. How definite such experience must always be!

SATURDAY

Our Secret Thoughts—Ezek. 8:5-12; also Dan. 2:24-30. Man looks on the outward appearance, but God looks on the heart. We should never forget these words of God, to Samuel. It has been said that men build houses around their thoughts, to hide their real selves from their fellows, but to God these are as houses of glass: all things are open to him. How carefully we ought to keep even the thought of sin from our minds (v. 12).

SUNDAY

The Greatest Abomination—Ezek. 8:15-18; Heb. 10:19-29. Of all the abominations that God had pointed out to Ezekiel, the greatest, he said, was that of turning their backs on the known things of God and willfully choosing to worship another—even so beneficent a thing as the sun. How many related scriptures come to mind: "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over," etc. As we come into thy house this day, O Father, may our thoughts be only of thee and the beauty of thy holiness. And may no thoughts foreign to thee and thy holy presence, either now or ever, intrude even into our innermost thoughts. Amen.—T. C. L.

The Secret of a Successful Ministry

My Dear Brother:

In your last letter, you express a strong desire that I would give you my opinion respecting success in your ministry in connection with prayer.

You ask—"If I pray for sinners constantly and faithfully in my closet, and confess and mourn over the sinfulness of my people before God, will a great power and unction attend my ministry? And will souls be converted in proportion as I thus act, provided I do it in faith? Do, my brother, speak out on these subjects with all plainness, as a father in the Gospel of his son. I do not ask the above questions with any other design than to enable me to see my way clear in the work of God."

I am thankful to receive such inquiries from you, and look to God to enable me to answer them according to his Word.

All the mighty men of God, since the foundation of the world, who have shaken the kingdom of darkness, have been men of prayer. Moses pleaded until he had power to turn aside heaven's thunderbolt of wrath, although God said, "Let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven." Elijah, after long and powerful pleading, shut and opened heaven. But I will not speak of what prophets, apostles, and other inspired men have done through faith and prayer, lest you should be discouraged, although they were men "subject to like passions as we are." (James 5:17).

Look, then, at a Baxter, who stained the study walls with praying breath; and, after he received a rich anointing of the Holy Ghost, sent a river of living water over Kidderminster, and was the means of converting hundreds. Luther and his coadjutors were men of such mighty pleadings with God, that they broke the spell of ages, and laid nations subdued at the foot of the cross. John Knox grasped in his strong arms of faith all Scotland. His prayers terrified tyrants. Whitfield, after much holy, faithful closet pleading, went to the Devil's fair, and took more than a thousand souls out of the paw of the lion in one day. See a praying Wesley, a pleading Bramwell, Stoner, Smith and Carvosso, each of whom led thousands to Jesus; Anne Cutler, and Mrs. Fletcher, whose breath was prayer, and who had souls in every place. In 1820 and 1821, a few plain, holy, praying Christians were instrumental in leading seventeen thousand souls from Satan unto Christ. John Oxtoby, with his one talent, sighed, wept, fasted, and groaned, and prayed for sinners for hours, pleading the atonement, and casting them on it by faith's strong arms; then entering the pulpit and speaking words of flame, so that hundreds were saved by his means.

It is to be deplored that there are not more soul-saving evangelists in the present day; I mean men who are blessed in the conversion of souls at every place. But let us look to ourselves. I feel ashamed of myself! My closet, Bible, study, family, church, the world, heaven and earth—all witness against me.

But I must stop, or my epistle will be all introduction.

Just allow me to say, that I take it for granted that God has saved you from pride, the love of money, the fear of man, and especially from mere party zeal. If you only want sinners converted to gain a great name in the church, to swell your party, or to show what great feats you can do, God will not use you. Your state of soul is poor indeed. But if you can and do rejoice when you hear of souls being saved in any other church, then all hail! and take the following counsel, which is the best I can give you on the subject of your inquiries.

If your heart be burdened and ready to break for the salvation of souls, and you feel willing to be anything—even a fool in the eyes of a God—dishonoring world and of a sleepy church—so that souls may be saved, then, if I know anything of the matter, you are in a proper state of soul to begin to work for God. And if you have none of this yearning of heart for souls, alas! how are you anything better than a hireling shepherd? But I can give you credit for an earnest desire for the salvation of the lost. To strengthen that desire look at the multitudes around you hurrying on to dark perdition. How many thousands within the pale of the professing church, who have nothing of religion but the name; and how many who have renounced even the name! They never open a Bible. They never enter a church. They never bend a knee. They live as heathens—as goddess and as sensual as the sons of Athens and Rome in the olden time. How sad the thought! You are moving through time to eternity in the midst of a vast mass of perishing souls. They surround you on every side. Get out, like Nehemiah, by night, and survey the desolations of the city. See the dramshops, and the pawnshops, and the dens of infamy, and the gambling houses, and the many places of sinful amusement. Count, if you can, the number of their victims, or realize the amount of the evil which, unitedly, they produce. Death and damnation are moving to meet them. Look, my brother, at the whole mass of sinners, trampling under foot the redeeming blood of Christ, and steeling their consciences against the Holy Ghost; making stepping-stones to hell of God's book. See them shut their eyes. Yes! they are emphatically in earnest to damn their bodies and souls forever.

Look at them—look at them—look at them! Do you see them? Then you see them on a slippery hill, going down to hell! Think how they dishonor God. Think how they pierce the Savior. Think how they grieve the Holy Spirit. Think how they down the rising race. Think how they people the wide burning pit! See how they push one another off the stage of life into perdition! See, thousands of them have taken all but the last step; so that, if you do not pluck them thence at once, the next step will be hell, with all its remorse and despair, its blackness and darkness, its weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, and that for ever, and for ever! and FOR EVER!

Oh, brother; all this is true! and will you not use the weapon which God has himself placed in your hands, and go and wrestle with him to save this people? Think of the value of their souls! Think of the bleeding, pleading love they are slighting! Think of the eternal damnation they are going to! Think of the heaven of increasing glory they are losing! Think of the influence they have in drawing millions with and after them to hell! Think what glory it would bring to God the Father, Son, and Spirit, if you could be the means of their conversion! Think deeply, think earnestly and yet soberly, between their living in sin and drawing multitudes after them to hell, and being converted by God's Spirit given in answer to your prayers, and becoming themselves the instruments of conversion to others. Think of Gethsemane, Calvary, and the blood-sprinkled mercy-seat! Think what Jesus has done, and is willing to do for them! Think of what he has done for millions as bad as they, when they repented, forsook sin, and believed. Think of what he did for bloody Manasseh, the murderer; mad Soul, wicked Magdalene, swearing Bunyan, the infidel Rochester, and millions of others,—drunkards, thieves, and the very worst of sinners, on this side of the pit. Nay, think until your soul is harrowed up within you, and melts into pity, or flames into burning charity. Then, with your full, love-stricken heart, enter your closet, and bewail the sins of the people before the Lord. Take up a deep lamentation, and bewail their lost condition and their aggravated sins. Make their sins your own, so to speak; that is, feel for them, and pray for them, as though you were in their almost lost condition. Yoke yourself in with them. Be particular in confessing their sins. Do not cloak them. Like Moses, Daniel, Jeremiah, Nehemiah, Paul and other holy ones, confess them again and again. While you are confessing and mourning over them, keep casting your soul and their sins on the atonement; recognize the infinite willingness of the Redeemer to save them; and plead with God to save them. Don't plead to make God willing to save them, for he is already infinitely willing. But plead because God does and always will answer the pleadings of bold, holy faith. You need not spend your time studying the philosophy of the thing. It is so. The Book of God and every page of church history says—It is so. The success which has always attended such closet prayers sets it beyond all doubt. As you are pleading, imitate Moses. When God was about to cut off guilty Israel, he pleaded his promise, his oath, his stretched-out arm; he pleaded again and again; even after God said, "Let me alone," he pleaded in faith. Go thou and do likewise. Plead the power of God; plead the love of God; plead the mercy of God; plead the "yea" and "amen" promises of God. Plead the death of Jesus. Cast your strong-nerved arms of faith around sinners, and bring them to the cross of Calvary. Plead heaven with its everlasting glory; hell, with its darkness, fire, and adamant chains. Plead the shortness of time; plead the length of endless eternity. Enter deeply and fully into their awful state. I do not want you to be a mere happy, joyful Christian; but one who drinks with Christ the bitter cup.

But mind and do all in waith, with a single eye to the glory of God; and, if you plead in this way for hours, you will soon learn the grand secret of shaking any town, and sending a wave of living water over the land. Christ says, "He that believeth, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." Believe then, the flood your district, no matter what stands in the way. If, while you are pleading, you only believe, something will be effected. Oh, for a few Mosses, Jeremiahs, or Pauls, to stand in the gap.

My brother, be the man. Do something. Do do it—do it;—but do it at once.—Yours as ever. A Lover of Souls.

P. S.—If you attend to this holy, close-work, you will be anointed with fresh oil for the pulpit, and then you will bring down God's blessing every time you preach. Take up the cross, despise the shame; and then, when the chief Shepherd shall appear, instead of getting a portion with the hypocrites, you shall appear with the children whom he hath given you, and receive a crown in which you shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars for ever and ever.—Daniel 12:3.

Editor's Select Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

IV. The Suffering Servant of Jehovah

(Lesson For April 28)

Scripture Lesson—Isa. 52:13 to 53:12.
Printed Text—Isa. 53:1-12.

Devotional Reading—Rev. 5:9-14.

Golden Text—With his stripes we are healed.—Isa. 53:5.

Introductory Note

We need not trouble ourselves over the differences that exist among scholars as to the date of the writing of the two distinctive parts of this book, it will be more profitable to concern ourselves about the contents of Isaiah's message. Suffice it to say, as Dean Allix points out, that "we saw in the last lesson that the book of Isaiah is divided into two chief or main parts, i. e., chs. 1 to 39, Jerusalem's fall (and she was the type of the whole race, attributed to her sin. Part II (chs. 40 to 66) is a vision of salvation from sin, the coming of the kingdom of righteousness and peace.

This part has for its central point ch. 53, the lesson for today. Ch. 52 opens up the vision of the glorious days of Christ's kingdom. "How beautiful the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace!" 52:7. Then they are bidden, in v. 9, to "break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people!" In 52:13, the Messiah appears, with a brief description of him and of his work. Then ch. 53, the lesson of today, enlarges and continues the description of the person and work of the Messiah."

The Messiah Pictured

The verses of this lesson are plainly messianic. It is interesting to note how accurately they were fulfilled in Christ Jesus, our Savior. In many places they present an almost perfect picture of Jesus as he went about Palestine and as he suffered and died. Let us study in detail, as some one has arranged it for us in the following form:

Prophecy. He was despised and rejected of men.

Fulfillment. But they cried out altogether, saying, Away with this man. (Luke 23:18). Hath any of the rulers believed on him, or of the Pharisees? (John 7:48).

Prophecy. Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. (v. 4).

Fulfillment. My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. (Matt. 26:38).

Prophecy. Yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. (v. 4).

Fulfillment. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me. (Matt. 27:46).

Prophecy. He was wounded for our transgressions. (v. 5).

Fulfillment. The Son of man came to give his life a ransom for many. (Matt. 20:28). So Christ ... once offered to bear the sins of many. (Heb. 9:28).

Prophecy. He humbled himself and opened not his mouth. (v. 7).

Fulfillment. And when he was accused by the chief priests and elders he answered nothing. (Matt. 27:12-14).

Prophecy. And they made his grave with the wicked and with the rich in his death. (v. 9).

Fulfillment. Two robbers were crucified with him, and Joseph of Arimathea, a rich man, laid him in his own tomb. (Matt. 27:38 and 27:60).

Prophecy. He had done no violence neither was any deceit in his mouth. (v. 9).

Fulfillment. Behold, I found no fault in this man. (Luke 23:14, 15.)

In this way the fulfillment of the prophecy is found in the life of our Master, and there is no one else in whom this fulfillment could possibly take place.

Despised of Men

Not only was Christ scorned by the men of his time, but ever since his followers have had to meet the slight and the oppression of the world. Even today the great enterprises of the church receive only a small pittance compared with the money lavished on railroads, canals, armies, navies, and the various luxuries common to our people. Heroes of the church receive little honor compared with some scheming financier or self-seeking politician. Jesus is belittled by those who do not recognize his unique greatness. His church is "waning;" Christianity "has failed." But there statements are not true.

"We fail to appreciate the glory of Christ (1) if we approach him in the carnal mood. His appeal is not to the senses. (2) If we approach him in the intellectual spirit. His greatness belonged to another and infinitely higher sphere. (3) If we approach him in the secular temper. The Jews were irritated by him and put him to death because he did not attempt to satisfy their desires for political independence, material wealth, and social consequence. (4) If we approach him in the spirit of religious formality. The Pharisees most completely missed the greatness of Christ."—Rev. William L. Watkinson, D.D.

Christ is rejected by the common indifference to earnest Christian preaching. "I heard a sermon a short time ago preached in a seaside church, which deeply moved me; a sermon I was thankful to have heard, and the like of which I would walk a long way to hear again. As I stood outside the building waiting for a friend, the congregation came out, and I heard the unusual interchange of verbal nothings. The only reference I did hear to the service was from a well-dressed young man to a girl by his side, and this is what he said: 'A long-winded fellow, that; let us go on the parade.' 'I wonder,' said a man to me lately. 'why some people go to a place of worship at all; they appear to be as indifferent to what is said, sung, or prayed, as the dog that barks is indifferent about the dog-star.'"

THE PLACE OF THE INTERMEDIATE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY IN THE CHURCH By Miss Edna Wilkerson

In many of our churches stress is being laid upon the Senior and Junior Christian Endeavor work while little interest is being taken in the Intermediate work, or with the young people of the adolescent age. At this age the boys and girls do not seem to belong anywhere.

They seem to rebel against Sunday school and if they have been attending Junior Endeavor they have the feeling that they have outgrown it. Many of its methods, which once satisfied them, seem too juvenile. They desire something larger.

On the other hand, if they are placed in the Young People's society they do not feel free to talk and discuss their problems as they did in the Junior Endeavor because they are oppressed with self-consciousness and fear, and because of this situation, frequently many of the boys and girls of the Intermediate age drop out of Christian Endeavor altogether.

The great harvest time of youth is between the ages of twelve and sixteen. More than one-half of the conversions occur during this period and yet this is the most neglected group of all.

The large growth of organizations designed for boys and girls of this age is proof to the church of the need of some means of stopping this loss from its rank of young people.

The Intermediate Endeavor is the natural link between Junior and Senior Endeavor. Training begun in the Junior society lays a foundation for training in the Intermediate society and training received as a continuation of that begun in the Junior society is a foundation for work in the Senior society.

To abandon Christian Endeavor for young people in the adolescent age is a grave mistake as this is the age of decision. "The boys and girls that wander at this age often wander far and long."

The church must not loosen its grip on its Intermediate young people; if it does they will drift to outside organizations, and it is probable that they will be lost as far as being efficient workers in the church. Let the boy or the girl work a year or two in a club or lodge and then try to get him or her to do definite work for the Master and you will find lost interest in religious work. "It is self-evident that the club or the lodge is not a stepping-stone to the church."

The Intermediate society exists for the purpose of getting boys and girls to take a definite stand for Christ. The aim of the society is to train them in religious work.

Are we, as a church, going to watch the Intermediate boys and girls drift away from Christ and the church, or will we seek to bring them into the church through the Endeavor and save them for Christ?—The Watchword.

on fire, she has and continues to do a fine piece of work. For she may well feel that wherever the message is preached through Brother Riddle, it is Tiosa's message. Too, this is the home of Brother Harley Zumbach who has and continues to serve so well in the field of evangelistic singing and his message is too the message of this church. Too, the church takes her place along with the church's national program of missions and general extension work, as well as the state work.

We have here a very splendid group of young boys and girls in the teen age that are very loyal to the church and to whom the church is looking with much hope for future stability.

Although we are serving on a half-time basis and cannot accomplish the work we would like, yet we are happy in our work.

Along with the general work of the church we are quietly planning to be well represented at Shipshewana Brethren Retreat during the week for young people and then the week of Bible Conference.

FREMONT, OHIO

In reporting the work of the church at Fremont, Ohio, for the last three months, we mention as of first importance, the feasting upon the Word of God which we enjoyed for two weeks just before Easter, when Dr. J. C. Beal, of Canton, Ohio, was with us as evangelist and Bible teacher.

After a week of preparatory services conducted by the pastor, Dr. Beal came on March 11th, led the church for two weeks in two and sometimes three Bible expositions a day, with five on Sunday's, and then led in an inspiring Communion Service on

MORRILL, KANSAS

Morrill is located in northeastern Kansas, about 60 miles from St. Joseph, in one of the best agricultural sections of the State.

This is one of the oldest churches in the West and has contributed both in money and workers to the church at large. This was the home town of Brother L. S. Bauman whose father preached here for many years. Since I was last here, the membership has remodeled and added to their church building and have a very attractive church property and parsonage. Brother L. A. Myers is their pastor and is well liked and doing good work. Brother Myers spent several years in Ashland College and I found in him a booster for the school. I enjoyed the privilege of getting better acquainted with him and his family and enjoyed my stay with the people of Morrill, most of whom I formerly knew.

The church has a small membership and is limited in its field, but is doing a good work and fully holding its own.

This church has always been loyal to all the interests of our church work and while some have had financial reverses and a small group have heavy local financial responsibilities in their own church program, yet they gave in a mighty fine spirit.

The total gift to the endowment was $1,235.00. W. S. BELL.

TIOSA BRETHREN CHURCH, INDIANA

Perhaps the outstanding point of interest in the first six months' work with these Brethren was our revival and evangelistic campaign which was under the personal direction of Rev. E. M. Riddle of Warsaw, Indiana. Shortly after taking over the pastorate of this field, we began to look forward to this campaign and early engaged Brother Riddle for the work. The Brethren indicated their extreme interest by their attendance of the week of prayer preceding the opening of the two weeks' service. To have an average of something like thirty from a church whose active membership is not more than eighty-five is surely indicative of their faith in prayer as well as their interest in soul-saving.

It was indeed a pleasure on the part of the church to have their OWN BOY return and break unto them the "bread of life." This is Brother E. M.'s boyhood church and they were pleased to have him come back to them, not as a boy, but rather as a Christian minister, one who has thus far acquitted himself well in the field of his calling. His coming and preaching made possible a two-weeks of rejoicing, feasting, enjoyment of ardent labor, and Christian fellowship.

While we always desire a large ingathering and in this we did not succeed, yet we know that the effort was well worth while, for one young lad confessed his belief in Jesus and was baptized, and this is worth more than "a whole world." Truly a good profit on the investment!

In behalf of the Brethren, we would thank the Warsaw Brethren for thus sparing Brother Riddle for this period of time.

While this church has never set the world

Monday evening, March 25th, which closed the series.

Brother Beal did for the church here just what several of the members have felt most needed to be done. He deepened the spiritual life of those who attended the services, he broadened their knowledge of saving Truth, and he gave the membership and the people of the surrounding community to understand just what the Brethren church's distinctive position is in its acceptance of the Bible as the inspired Word of God! Both members and friends were given to understand what is meant by our claim to be a "Whole Gospel" church.

At the Sunday morning services at the end of Dr. Beal's first week of leadership, an invitation was given for all to stand who sought a deeper fellowship with God, greater power in service, and greater victory over self and sin. Almost every member present stood. Among those coming forward were four young people from the church school, who made confession of faith in Jesus Christ. They were baptized the following Sunday morning. One aged brother, who confessed that in his wanderings he had gotten far away from his Lord, came to seek his fellowship anew.

Dr. Beal proved himself to be a tireless worker, a teacher of unusual charm and clearness, one who stands squarely upon the Word of God. Weather conditions were for the most part very favorable, but the attendance would no doubt have been larger had not many other churches in the city been conducting their "Lenten" services. Members of other churches who visited our services expressed themselves as being deeply inspired by the evangelist's "Whole Gospel" preaching.

The opening services of the week of preparation were in charge of one of the girls' gospel teams from Ashland College, whose leadership was greatly appreciated. The team was composed of Mrs. Virden Taber, Misses Mabel Crawford, Dorothy Whitted, Lucille Ehrbright and Lorena Lewis. Prof. K. F. Monroe, the team faculty advisor, brought the team in his machine, and his visit too was appreciated. Miss Crawford very acceptably filled the pulpit on Easter Sunday evening, being in Fremont as a guest of friends.

As mentioned in an editorial paragraph several weeks ago, the church in a very commendable manner accomplished the curtailment of the debt to the extent of $500.00 in February, and paid six months' interest, amounting to $135.00. At our recent quarterly business meeting, among other decidedly vital decisions reached, three deacons and three deaconesses were elected. The church school board has recommended a careful revision of the enrollment of the school. Other auxiliaries and organizations are maintaining their accustomed vigor. Brethren, we ask an interest in your prayers.

W. S. CRICK, Pastor.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH

Dallas Center, Iowa

We have made only two reports through the Evangelist since our work began in Dallas Center a bit more than two years ago. This being the case, we feel constrained to give an account of our activities in this portion of God's vineyard.

It may interest some to know that in this town of 900 inhabitants, there are nine worshipping bodies. David must have had a different condition than this when he said, according to Psalms 133:1: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell in unity!" Even though each group draws from the rural population, it is generally agreed that this community is overchurched. One would think that with so many shades of belief and with so much competition that the unsaved group would naturally be small. This is not so, for as in everything else, the more plentiful the churches the less attractive they are to the unsaved. Satan uses many schemes to check the power and influence of the gospel of Jesus Christ. His ability to get Protestants to ignore the Holy Spirit's teachings in 1 Corinthians 1:10 seems to be one of his most successful plans.

Each church in town thinks it excels in one or more ways over the other churches. Naturally, we think that we excel in a number of ways. In the first place, we think we excel in loyalty. Our membership is a "go to church" group. Considering the size of the membership of each church, the First Brethren average is way ahead of the leading churches in town. The fine prayer meeting attendance and the large Sunday evening audiences speak well for the loyalty of our folks.

All of our membership will testify that we have the nicest and neatest church building in town. Especially is this true since the interior was redecorated last month. After the painters were through more than twenty members gave the whole building a thorough cleaning. The recent installing of a piano in the basement filled a real need as the old organ had more than served its time.

I am of the opinion that our church excels in sacrificial giving in Dallas Center. The things accomplished in a financial way are not made possible by a small group doing it all, but rather by all the members working together. This is true because it is necessary, as we have precious few who are able to carry the burden of the budget, even if they wanted to do it. Our Sunday school offerings per capita are excelled only by the Church of the Brethren, but many of their members give no pastoral support. Since the pastor's salary has been increased $300.00 the past year, the local budget is larger per capita than all but one of the other churches. That one has the wealth of the town.

We feel that Dallas Center did a generous piece of work for the College by responding to Dr. Bell's efforts here to the extent of over $1,700.00 in gifts and pledges. This amount would have been bettered if Dr. Bell had had an opportunity to see all of the prospects. Considering the results I had in following up his work, for the good of the College I am glad Dr. Bell is raising the endowment instead of the writer.

The Foreign Mission spirit is still growing among our people. This year's offering will be the largest ever given even though it will not exceed by very much the $231.00 given last year.

Our people have had a reputation for years of putting on the best special programs in town. It means just this, that when the Brethren people undertake to do a thing they do it well. The last Christmas program was not below the standard. It was "The Christmas Story in Pantomime" by Rev. J. H. Kuhlman of Loudonville, Ohio. It is a ten scene pageant and was worked out and put on in such a way that several said that they enjoyed it more than the Passion Play given in Des Moines a few weeks before. No church could present the Christmas story more effectively than by using this pageant.

Passion Week was observed last year in a union effort. As the ministerial group did not make any such plans this year, we held special services in our own church. Those who wanted to come, and could, were present at these meetings. (Only those who live in Iowa can appreciate the condition of the roads this winter and spring). God honored his Word and answered prayer. Nine were to have been baptized on Good Friday evening. Two found it impossible to be present. Five adults and two teen age boys were baptized while the two young people, a brother and a sister, await the rite. It is expected that others will be willing to come soon. Four other boys and girls gave their hearts to the Lord Jesus and were baptized earlier this spring, making a total of thirteen more additions to the church. To God be all the glory and praise. It is our purpose to begin immediately to plan for a real revival meeting this coming fall. We shall endeavor to have the field prepared for a campaign in which we hope our goals and expectations will be realized. Pray for us that we may "Always abound in the work of the Lord."

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

The third year of private tuition school work is now history. On Friday, March 22, occurred the closing exercises, awarding of diplomas and other acknowledgements of faithfulness. Five of our bright and promising young people passed from the grades and six from the ninth. These figures are not large, but, in the light of other statistics, are very satisfactory. In fact the growth in attendance during these three years was inspiring, and the growth of interest and confidence kept pace.

Brother G. E. Drushal was with us on the above-named date and delivered an appropriate and worthwhile class address.

Three more applicants had been baptized previous to school dismissal and then our spring communion was celebrated so all student members might participate before scattering to their various homes—some many miles away. This communion service was the largest in these five years, with one more in attendance than maximum accommodations. (Two little girls shared the same chair.) Another noteworthy feature was the number of men present—a dozen, which was joyfully contrasted with one only (the writer) at a similar service four years ago, when the total communing was seven. This year there were thirty-seven.

For these things we praise the Father and ask, "What hath God wrought?"

Now, it behooves us to make an announcement which may come as a surprise to friends interested in this field.

At the present time our days are largely occupied with the work of packing boxes, blankets, and personal belongings into strong boxes for a long railroad journey. We say farewell to the splendid people of Krypton and vicinity about May 1.

Brother Manuel Davidson, a man who has often written to the Evangelist and whose home is a few miles distant, has moved into the church parsonage as a temporary arrangement, for the care of the property. Further plans will be made at Conference time. Sisters Slack and Carter will be here much during the summer, so we trust the work will receive no serious set-back, but rather forge ahead to greater things.

A galaxy of conditions and situations over which we had no control has seemed to mitigate against the wisdom of our remaining. Indeed, for weeks a mental battle ensued—the pros vs. the cons—on the subject. When we followed Gideon's suggestion the decision came definitely and we are obeying—at first with some misgivings, but as time passes we see it is the Lord's will.

Krypton has undergone some dark and stormy days due to lack of proper leadership. Her need in this respect is unique. The problems here are singular and the needs are sore, beyond utterance.

Pray that the Brethren cause, so highly favored and hopeful just now, may be carried on, and especially that these new-born babes in Christ may have the encouragement and direction necessary to their spiritual growth.

The Lord willing, we expect next to address you from Harrah, Washington.

FRED V. KINZIE.

ELKHART, INDIANA

Easter Day marked another milestone in the history of our people at Elkhart. At the close of the morning service, four came to the church, three by confession and one by change of church relations.

Owing to conditions which retarded the spiritual growth and a desire for greater freedom and service, nineteen persons from the Osceola Church of the Brethren were recently added to our membership. We extend to them a glad hand of welcome. Their purpose is to open a mission; if their work grows they will eventually organize a church.

Easter Day our quarterly cash offering day—$949.50 was paid into the building fund. We do not wish to tire our readers with this part of our report, yet we know that a goodly number are watching the results of our method of meeting our payments on the new building; for this reason we take a keen delight in reporting the progress of our work. However it requires unity of purpose and incessant work on the part of each organization.

At our recent quarterly meeting, the reports from the different organizations show they are working and meeting their obligations in a most splendid way. Brother Glenn Wood was elected Sunday school Superintendent with Brother Walter Lichtenwalter Assistant.

Our Sunday school is a strong feature of our Sunday service. Even with enlarged quarters in our new church we hear the primary workers say they are crowded.

As a church we have been wonderfully blessed, yet the grim reaper picked a choice flower, little Jimmie Werhly from our primary room and Brother L. S. Puppinger, from the advanced department. Brother Pippinger has been actively engaged in the work of the church for years. He was ripe in years and service. Thus God calls whom he will that his work may be more effectively done.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

REVIVAL AT TIOSA, INDIANA

The Tiosa Brethren church passed through a season of blessing and refreshment early in March. Brother E. A. Duker of South Bend is the pastor. He and his people had made very careful plans for the meeting. Prayer services in country homes during a week of severe cold weather, with 30 or more present were a real preparation. The special services were well advertised also.

The writer of this article was called to have charge of this series of services. It was a great joy to preach the word of God night after night to old and new friends and many relatives, in my home church. We had a fine hearing, a very fine interest and a cherished fellowship with Brother Duker. He was not permitted to be at every service, yet his heart and soul were in this campaign in a mighty way. One marked feature of this special meeting was our Bible Reading contest which always proves to be a real help and blessing.

In a way, we regret that there was only one confession, a fine lad in a good home, yet who of us can measure the power he may be in the world some day? We were aware of the fact that this field had been closely gleaned for two years. The Tiosa church has a mission yet to fill and can easily do it, if they continue to follow the wise leadership of their pastor. We shall always look back upon this meeting in our home church with much joy and gratefulness for their kindness, appreciative words and the splendid gift.

It is our prayer that every one in the church shall be faithful and witness well for the Christ in this fine community.

E. M. RIDDLE.

Pastor Warsaw Brethren Church.

PROHIBITION PROGRESS IN FINLAND

Westerville, March 16.—Finland not only is holding its national prohibition law, but also is making notable progress in enforcement and observance, according to a report made by Vihtori Karpio, secretary of the Prohibition League of Finland, and a member of the general council of the World League Against Alcoholism, says Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the latter organization, to whom Prof. Karpio made his report.

Admitting that Finland is not as dry as it is supposed to be, nor as dry as it can be made, Prof. Karpio nevertheless insists that enforcement has made tremendous strides. Referring to cases of drunkenness he says:

"In this respect it must be remembered that since legal prohibition became effective, the section relating to drunkenness has been made more severe. Every seemingly intoxicated person on a public highway or in a public place may be arrested and punished. Half of those now arrested would, under pre-prohibition laws, have been left unmolested.

"Stability of prohibition in Finland is partially explained by the fact that seven years before the outbreak of the Great War Finland had passed a law for total prohibition. Before the passage of this law all the rural districts were practically free from the liquor traffic, under local option.

"When, after a general and equal right of voting was given to all Finnish citizens of both sexes over 24 years of age, the legislative body was re-elected on this basis, one of its first measures was the passing of the general prohibition act, without a dissenting vote, October 31, 1907. The Czar of Russia was then the ruler of Finland. He did not ratify the act nor even a subsequent act passed in 1909, and it was only after the revolution of 1917 that Finland, winning her independence, duly ratified her prohibition act.

"The position of a prohibition country surrounded on all sides by wet states is not an enviable one. It is difficult for the dry country to protect itself from illegal importations. This is Finland's chief difficulty. Liquor is smuggled chiefly from Germany and Poland. The customs officials have not been sufficiently prepared for an effective fight against this smuggling. On the other hand, international law has protected the smugglers, who have been able to anchor their booze cargoes comparatively near the Finnish coast, and from there land their goods by fast motor boats. This same international law has hindered enforcers of prohibition from putting hands on bootleggers outside the maritime limit.

"Within the borders it has not been possible to supply police quickly enough with the necessary authority and facilities for stemming illegal transportation. Under conditions of this kind smuggling has received an impetus. Home brewing is carried on to some extent in backwoods communities, but it is not more general than in the days of the free liquor trade.

"There have been numerous doctors, especially veterinarians, who have issued large numbers of alcoholic prescriptions. But a year ago the medical department issued new regulations controlling prescriptions, and it has been possible to repress the abuses in this direction almost entirely. Smuggling in of industrial alcohol now constitutes the most serious evil. New regulations, however, are becoming effective in controlling this evil.

"Finland has had a continuing decrease in mortality per cent under prohibition; health conditions have improved appreciably; the national wealth is greater than ever before; loss of liquor revenue has not raised taxes; crime has decreased; general social conditions are better.

"The legislature of Finland is dry, and all efforts to attack prohibition in that body have been futile. On the contrary, the legislature has passed several bills to make prohibition more stringent. Ratification of the treaty of Helsingfors, now partially completed, will extend the maritime limit to 12 nautical miles. This is expected to produce good results.

"Prohibition is the most important question in Finland. We do not say that the issue is wet or dry, but how to obtain the most efficient enforcement of prohibition."

MUSICAL CHRISTIANS

One evening last year in the Alps I went out, and I heard from an upland pasture a chime of music which for a moment I mistook for church bells, unexpected on the heights. It was so silvery sweet, and, though the tune did not come to an end but seemed to change and pass from phase to phase, a long-drawn-out music, it was so worshipful that I could not resist the temptation for a moment of thinking that it was elfin church music. And what was my astonishment as I realized that this exquisite music was simply made by the herds of the cattle turning out for the evening pasture. Around every cow's neck was hung a bell—bells of different tones, different notes, and different power—and as the quiet creatures grazed and moved across the pasture, each contributed unconsciously to this silvery chime, and the music came down from the heights, not from one performer, but from the consentaneous ringing of bells by creatures that did not know. It fell upon me not only as a joy, but as something of a revelation. It suggested to me what I suggest to you tonight after these many months in which those chimes have rung in my heart—that we ought all to be moving over the pastures of the world with the music shaken out from us and blending with the other music of humanity, so that the whole concert may be acceptable in the ears of God.—Dr. Horton.

A recent investigation of 2,400 school children in Moscow, Russia, between the ages of eight and sixteen showed that fifteen per cent of the boys were hard drinkers, fourteen per cent of all children, boys and girls, drank habitually; that sixty per cent of these children drank at home; and that seventy-four per cent of their fathers and sixteen per cent of their mothers were alcoholic. However, the school children themselves are organizing a nation wide total abstinence campaign and carrying to their parents the slogan, "Pull Father Away from the Bottle."

OUR LITTLE READERS

AS QUICK AS A TELEPHONE

One night a well-known citizen, who had been walking for some time in the downward path, came out of his home and started down town for a night of carousal with some old companions he had promised to meet. His young wife had besought him with imploring eyes to spend the evening with her, and had reminded him of the past, when evenings passed in her company were all too short. His little daughter had clung about his knees and coaxed in her pretty, wilful way for papa to tell her some bedtime stories, but habit was stronger than love for wife or child, and he eluded their tender questionings and went his way.

But when he was blocks distant from his home he found that, in changing his coat, he had forgotten to remove his wallet, and he could not go on a drinking bout without money, even though he knew that his family needed it, and his wife was economizing more and more in order to make up his deficit; and he hurried back and crept softly past the windows of the little home, in order that he might steal in and obtain it without running the gauntlet of questions and caresses.

But something stayed his feet; there was a fire in the grate within—for the night was chill—and it lit up the little parlor and brought out in startling effects, the pictures on the walls. But these were nothing to the pictures on the hearth. There in the soft gloom of the firelight, knelt his little child at her mother's feet, her small hands clasped in prayer, her fair head bowed, and, as her rosy lips whispered each word with childish distinctness, the father listened, spellbound:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

The man himself, who stood there with beaded lips shut tightly together, had said that prayer once at his mother's knee. Where was that mother now? The sunset gates had long ago unbarred to let her pass through. But the child had not finished; he heard her say:

"God bless mama, papa, and my own self.

God—bless papa—and please send him home—sober. Amen."

Mother and child sprang to their feet in alarm when the door opened so suddenly, but they were not afraid when they saw who it was returned so soon; but that night, when little Mamie was being tucked up in bed, after such a romp with papa, she said in the sleepest and most contented of voices:

"Mamma, God answers almost as quickly as the telephone, doesn't he?"

P. S.—This story was originally published in The British Evangelist, but it has not been so long since there was widespread need of such prayer in the United States. And unless little children and older children are taught to pray for fathers and young men to keep sober, there may be a return of the days of such tragedies as described in the home mentioned above. Boys and girls today don't know the curse of the saloon, but unless they are taught to pray and work for the complete destruction of the liquor traffic, they may grow up with such indifference towards this evil as to make possible the return of the saloon, or something equally as bad.

Memorial to the Late Edwin L. Kilhefner

On Friday, March 8, 1929, a memorial service in honor of Brother Edwin L. Kilhefner was held in the Ashland Brethren church. The body lay in state from noon to the time of the service in mid-afternoon, and hundreds of people passed it in review. The capacity of the church was taxed to accommodate all his neighbors and friends who came to pay their tribute to his memory. There was a beautiful display of floral tributes from numerous associates in business, civic organizations and church and personal friends. These spoke eloquently of the high esteem in which all held him. A group of business associates were the pall-bearers, Miss Dorcas Bame and Miss Anna Brauer sang and Dr. Shively led the devotions. Dr. Jacobs then gave a brief address recounting the fine personal traits of Brother Kilhefner. He referred briefly to the many public interests he fostered and especially to his activities in connection with his church. The writer then gave a brief sermon stressing the hope of the Christian and the blessings that a good man experiences himself as well as shares with his friends. The text was 2 Timothy 6:12, "Lay hold on the life eternal ...."

An adequate appraisal of the life of a good man is a pleasant task but it is also a difficult one. It is difficult because such a life has so many unknown contacts the influence of which we can never know. I have pondered the beautiful Christian life of Brother Kilhefner and I find it growing upon me in its brightness. He was the son of Elder Isaac Kilhefner. He inherited some of the love for and the devotion to his church from his good father. But he also added to that his own peculiar and strong adherence to his convictions and to the quiet and unobtrusive but effective work which he freely gave not only to his local church but to the brotherhood at large. He was born on a farm near Ashland, Ohio in August, 1872. He and his wife had just gone to California, partly for rest and recuperation and partly for business reasons. Here he was stricken and underwent an operation for appendicitis. Although he had the best attention medical skill could afford he passed on to be with his Lord on Saturday, March 1, 1929.

He spent his youth in the vicinity of Ashland and was for a time a student of Ashland College. In 1893 he was married to Miss Belle Plank. Sister Kilhefner, his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Earl McKean, and one brother, Ralph Kilhefner, are the immediate relatives left. There is a very wide circle of relatives and friends who share with these in sorrow.

A brief statement of Brother Kilhefner's business relations and life activities may justly be given here. He was one of the founders of the Elite Manufacturing Company in 1906. This became one of Ashland's most successful enterprises. He was for many years a director of the Ashland Savings Bank. He served on the Y. M. C. A. board of directors and was always interested in that local institution as one especially helpful to boys and young men. He was a member of the Ashland Rotary Club whose principles and motto he so splendidly exemplified.

Speaking of his interests we may place, as those which he held before and above all others, the varied interests of the church. Locally he served most acceptably as a deacon for twenty-five years. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the local church. During the building operations of the church here his constant interest, help and sound advice was invaluable. As a worshipper he was always at his place. In the larger interests of the church he also held an important and prominent part. He was for many years a member of the Board of Trustees of the College and at the time of his death was the President of this board. He was interested in every forward step of the College and gave help on many occasions. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Brethren church. He had an intense interest in the propagation of the gospel in foreign lands and gave money and labor freely in the promotion of this work. His counsel and influence on this Board was always wisely given and highly appreciated. In a word, it may be said that all who knew him in the intimate relations of men who work together on such business and church boards esteemed him most highly. His place will be difficult to fill.

On the occasion of the funeral I said, "Brother Kilhefner was so great a man in the goodness of his heart, so great in his quiet reserve, so masterful in his self-control, so generous in his deeds and so magnanimous in his spirit which reached even to other continents that we may well emulate his example.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

A TRIBUTE TO E. L. KILHEFNER

Mr. E. L. Kilhefner became a member of the College Board in the year 1915 and continued a member up to the time of his death. For several years past, he was vice president and this last year he was elected president, a position which he filled with dignity and good judgment. It was in this capacity that I knew him best.

As president of the board and a resident of Ashland, he was in close contact with the work of the College and advised with us constantly. He was in the college offices very frequently and we consulted him freely. He was, moreover, a member of the investment committee of the board, and as such looked over the properties on which we placed mortgages and examined our securities in general. This is highly important work and he always showed good business judgment in his decisions.

As everyone knows these days, the athletics of a school demand much attention. They must be both supported and controlled. Mr. Kilhefner was at our instant call in matters needing decisions in this perplexing activity of the College. His kindly interest was always a source of encouragement to the men on the teams, all of whom knew him personally. No one rejoiced more in our victories and no one stood for a higher type of sportsmanship than he.

We regarded him as an undergraduate alumnus of the school as he was in attendance here many years ago. It is a distinct honor to a college to own such men as a son, loyal and interested as he always was. In many ways he shared his good fortune with his school and considered it as an institution to which he owed a certain degree of fidelity.

May God raise up more such sons and daughters of Ashland whose cords of friendship and loyalty will be as strong and true as his. To live in the hearts of the young, and especially of the college youth, is a heritage well "worth a life to hold in fee." Mr. E. L. Kilhefner sleeps that long sleep, free from his labors, but he will live on and on here on the Hill in the hearts of the young as they shall come and go. What a worthy example for us all!

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

A FEW WORDS OF APPRECIATION

Because of my long acquaintance and close association with our brother, E. L. Kilhefner, the editor has asked me to write a few lines of appreciation of this brother and friend who has so recently passed to his reward.

The shock occasioned by his passing has not yet disappeared, and some of us find it difficult to realize that he is gone. The writer's acquaintance with the Kilhefner family began many years ago when as a high school boy he received baptism at the hands of Elder Isaac Kilhefner, father of the subject of our sketch.

Our first close association with the subject of this sketch began when Brother Kilhefner became a member of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College nearly twenty years ago, and as the years came and went this association became closer and closer, until I believe I can sincerely say that in my many years as a servant of the church, and after serving in many states and congregations, I have never associated with a man who seemed more like a real brother in the flesh than did Brother Ed. In our meeting together he was Ed. to me and I was Roy to him, and thus we associated together in closest intimacy.

For about ten of the fourteen years I have been in Ashland it has been my privilege to teach the Men's Bible Class in the Brethren Sunday school, and Brother Kilhefner has been a constant and faithful member of this class. When he was in Florida or California and thus compelled to be absent from the class he was always missed, not that he was of ready speech or given to much talk in the class, for he was not. He was a quiet, thoughtful member of the class, somewhat hesitant about participating in discussion of the lesson, but when he did speak he expressed a thought that was worth listening to.

To the church he was always faithful, seeking in an unobtrusive way to render the best service possible. During the period of our church building program here in Ashland the writer had the double task of serving as chairman of both the finance committee and the building committee for the church, and he found his burdens greatly lightened and the way made easier by the willing and wise counsel of Brother Kilhefner and by his most generous gifts to the cause. Calls made upon him were not made in vain, and it is but speaking the truth when we say, had it not been for the generosity of Brother Kilhefner there would be no Brethren church building in Ashland today. But in all my experience I never knew a man who strove harder to avoid publicity and to keep his generosity from the knowledge of the public, or who was more successful in "keeping the right hand from knowing what the left hand was doing." His quiet demeanor and his kindly spirit which prompted him to support every good cause gained for him enviable respect from the entire city.

More than ten years ago the pastor of one of the larger churches in Ashland said to me, "I want to tell you, Ed. Kilhefner is a real prince of a man," and this seemed to be the verdict of practically all who knew him.

We might continue sounding his praises indefinitely, but we think it is enough to quote the language of "A voice from heaven, saying, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them."

THE TIE THAT BINDS

GONAWEN-WINTERS—On March 27th, at 4:00 P. M., occurred the marriage of Miss Evelyn Winters to Mr. Gordon J. Gonawen, in the Brethren church, Fremont, Ohio. The ceremony was solemnized by the pastor, the ring service being used. They were attended by the bride's brother and the bridegroom's sister. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Winters, and is a leader in the work of the church, being teacher of the primary class and president of the young people's class. Mr. Gonawen is a successful farmer, and Mrs. Gonawen is president of the Federation of Farm Women's Clubs of Seneca and Sandusky counties. After a brief honeymoon they returned to their newly furnished home on their two hundred acre farm near Fremont. Both are highly esteemed young people and have the best wishes of many circles of friends. W. S. CRICK.

WOLZ-TOTTEN—The wedding of Mr. Alvin Wolz and Miss Florence Totten was solemnized on the night of March 27 at eight o'clock at the First Brethren church, Washington, D. C. It was a very attractive wedding attended by a host of relatives and friends of the happy couple. Both of these young people are members of the local Sunday school and the bride has long been an active member of the church. The groom holds his membership in another denomination. They will make their home in Washington. The ceremony was performed by the writer. All join in wishing these folks a happy journey through life. HOMER A. KENT.

IN THE SHADOW

NICKELS—Charles Nickels was born in Erie County, Ohio, and departed this life at Fremont, Ohio, December 12, 1928, at the age of fifty-seven years. The only surviving near relative is his widow who was Miss Lillian Agnes Boyer, whom he married July 3rd, 1902. They had been members of the Brethren church, Fremont, Ohio, for eight years. May the "Father of mercies and God of all comfort" sustain the bereaved companion. W. S. CRICK.

MITCHELL—John Thomas Mitchell passed to his eternal reward at about 12:30 on the morning of March ninth. He had been sick only a few days. His passing was very sudden and he was the first to go out of the family. He had just passed his fifty-ninth birthday and prior to being attacked by the "flu" seemed to be in good health. Brother Mitchell united with the Brethren church at Boone's Chapel about twenty-seven years ago. His membership was transferred to the First Brethren church of Roanoke in 1921. His faith remained strong to the end. Funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer, assisted by Brother J. E. Patterson. Brethren sympathy is hereby extended to the bereaved family. H. ## Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

THE Disease and its Remedy.

"I have heard of great preachers whose perpetual message in the pulpit was the sinfulness of sin, and the profound ramification of sin in the human heart. In all true preaching that stern element should be present; for the minister of the Gospel is also the vindicator and assessor of the Law. But the teaching which is all conviction is not Gospel teaching. In a strict sense, it is not Christian teaching; not distinctively Christian. For the peculiarity, the "difference," of the Christian message is not its detection of the disease but its revelation of the remedy. The most soul-searching ministry becomes a ministry of the Gospel only as it goes on to set out the Lord Christ and the power of the eternal Spirit as the hope and liberty of the sinner. Aye, and to be a Gospel ministry indeed it must not only set Christ out but magnify him, glorify him, dilating and dwelling upon his "unsearchable riches" in their application to every need of man."—Bishop Moule in Ephesian Studies.

ASSAULTS on the Home.

"Home was once a mon's castle; it shut him and his family in, and, what was more important and certainly more effective, it shut all the world out. But the world has found a way, various ways, to get in over the front veranda, through a tiny wire, and "on the air." All the vile and violent deeds of this broad land and sometimes foreign lands is hashed up in highly seasoned recitals and laid neatly folded in the veranda each morning and evening. Then an innocent looking little wire brings at any and all hours of day or night, any kind of exploitation that interrupts while one eats his meals or says his prayers or takes a nap; for the telephone is the most impudent of all intruders. Now, however, even it is outdone, for everything is "on the air." Now a sermon, occasionally an important speech, once in a while, and several times in a while, cheap drivelling vaudeville; an occasional piece of classic music and almost a continual deluge of jazz from a dozen different stations; you can tell they are different by the announcement!

Man's "castle" is taken. Henceforth he lives in the open and all winds blow on him, and all odors assail him!"

"Legalized prostitution" had such an offensive sound in refined ears that it was long ago driven out at the back door of civilization to walk in outer darkness. But such things do not always "stay put." That old courtesan has come back—dressed in gaudy raiment and is knocking at the front door. The card she sends in is engraved "companionate marriage," but she is the same miserable drab. Notwithstanding the contempt in which she is held at home, she is a menace on the veranda. She affords opportunity for the scandal mongers to give us a reputation; an English popular magazine refers to her as "very popular in America." — Editorials from Bibliotheca Sacra.

WE might learn from Kreisler.

"When have professed Christians in any land had more money than those today in America—and when have eminently worthy religious and benevolent causes had to appeal more insistently for means to carry on. The foreign mission cause is an example. It is hardly stretching the actual facts to say that, in the Sunday use of their cars during this month, American church members will spend enough money for gasoline to solve the present urgent financial problems of our mission boards.

Yet mark what Fritz Kreisler, the noted musician, says of his sense of responsibility in the use of the money he earns by his wonderful gift:

"I was born with music in my system. I knew musical scores instinctively before I knew my A B C's. It was a gift of Providence. I did not acquire it. So I do not even deserve thanks for the music.

"Music is too sacred to be sold. And the outrageous prices the musical celebrities charge today truly is a crime against society.

"I never look upon the money I earn as my own. It is public money. It is only a fund entrusted to my care for proper disbursement.

"I am constantly endeavoring to reduce my needs to the minimum. I feel morally guilty in ordering a costly meal, for it deprives some one else of a slice of bread—perhaps, of a bottle of milk. My beloved wife feels exactly the same way about these things as I do. You know what I eat; you know what I wear. In all these years of my so-called success in music, we have not built a home for ourselves. Between it and us stand all the homeless in the world."—Quoted from The Biblical Review.

Questions & Answers

Conducted by
J. Allen Miller

Readers are invited to send in suitable questions, which will receive consideration as space permits.

26. When a brother is ordained a Deacon does his wife thereby become a Deaconess?

The answer to this question is clearly, No. The only place in the New Testament where the Deaconess is mentioned by that name is in Romans 16:1. The word in our versions is rendered "servant." It may help the English reader of the New Testament to note the following Greek words. There is the verb "diakoneo" which means generally to minister, to serve, to wait upon, to do one a service. Then we have the noun "diakonos," which means a servant, a minister, an attendant. This word means specifically a servant in his relation to his work. We have five other words translated into English by the same words in our versions which stress either the idea of bond-service, or voluntary service, or that of an under officer. Then there is a word defining definitely a service rendered a community as in religious worship or the priesthood, and finally a word denoting a household servant. Any one of these may be also a "diakonos." There is another noun form, "diakonia" which denotes the office or work of a diakonos. It would be wholly beyond the space allotted to me to study the several passages where these words occur. So I must be content to merely cite a few passages. The word rendered minister in the following passages, Romans 13:4, 8; 2 Cor. 3:6; 6:4; 11:23; Eph. 3:7; 6:21; Col. 1:7, 23, 25; 4:7; 1 Thes. 3:2 and 1 Tim. 4:6, is the same word translated deacon in the following passages, Phil. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:8 and 12.

To return to the question more directly we should note that the Deacon as an official is named only in the three places above indicated. In the reference in Timothy the qualifications for this office are definitely stated. By inference we are certainly justified to conclude that the Deaconess must be equally qualified for the place she is to occupy in the church and the duties she is to discharge. Some commentators refer verse 11 to the deaconess. "Women in like manner must be grave, not slanderers." Just as the Deacon must bear certain definite characteristics of Christian life and conduct patterned after those of the Bishop, so the Deaconess must bear those also of the one whom she joins in the Lord's work. Compare 1 Tim. 3:1-7 with 8-10 and 12-13, and with 11.

That there is a definite field of work for women in the church seems clear. That they are or may be ordained as Elders or Bishops in the church does not seem to the writer to be scriptural. That she may serve as a Minister or Deaconess seems however to be in harmony with the Scriptures. Compare Romans 16:1 with verses 3, 6, 12. Note the work that Paul speaks of women doing in the church.

AT CLOSE OF DAY

If you sit down at set of sun,
And count the acts that you have done,
And, counting, find
One self-denying act, one word
That eased the heart of him who heard,
One glance most kind
That fell like sunshine where it went,
Then you may count that day well spent.
But if, through all the living day,
You've cheered no heart by yea or nay;
If, through it all,
You've nothing done that you can trace
That brought the sunshine to one face,
No act most small
That helped some soul and nothing cost,
Then count that day as worse than lost.

Obedience the Test of Faith

There is no denying the outstanding importance of faith in the Christian program, but right along side of, or at least, following up and giving substance to faith is obedience. We are saved by faith, but faith that does not issue in obedience is not true faith. By faith we lay hold on the grace of God as revealed in Jesus Christ, but faith that is real is active; faith that is vital reaches out to lay hold of the free gift of God; faith that is effective is obedient. A faith that says, "I believe," but refuses to obey the plain commandments of him in whom belief is professed has very much to be desired, and surely he who possesses such a faith must hear Jesus say, "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" The eye of faith looks up into the face of the resurrected and exalted Christ and says, "Ye call me Lord and Master, and ye say well, for so I am," and then he goes on to point out the things that he as Master would have his disciples do. And if faith is sincere and true it must be accompanied by obedience. That is inevitably the test of faith. James acknowledges it when he challenges the man who emphasizes the importance of faith and belittles the importance of works by saying, "Show me thy faith without thy works and I will show thee my faith by my works." He does not minimize faith, but insists that faith cannot stand alone, for faith without works is dead. Just to believe does not win the favor of God, for says James, "The devils also believe and tremble." It was faith accompanied by works in the case of Abraham that secured the blessing of God. Neither stood alone, nor can they; they are inseparably linked together. By the works of obedience is faith made perfect, and demonstrated.

That is the historic stand of our church, if we have evaluated it aright, and that must continue to be the outstanding basis of our plea, if we are to have a distinctive contribution to make to the Kingdom's progress and to the preservation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Along with the insistence upon unwavering faith, there must always go the demand for implicit obedience, which involves the faithful practice of the ordinances which Jesus established and which he freighted with vital truth. There is in evidence a tendency to overlook or to under-emphasize the obedience side of our plea, in our zeal to stress the free and unmerited saving grace of God. It is true that man cannot merit salvation, and can do nothing to save himself, except believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. "By grace are ye saved, and not of your selves, it is the gift of God." We have no righteousness, no merit within ourselves; we all stand before God's holy presence vile and full of sin. And having nothing but our own sinfulness to bring to Christ, we come to him with that and he forgives and saves.

But the process of coming to God, the means by which we lay hold on saving grace, is not unimportant because it is set forth clearly and emphatically in the Word of God. When the awakened, believing soul cries out to God, the answer comes back by the mouth of the Pentecostal preacher, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38). That is not to say that man can do anything to merit salvation, but it is to say that the redemption which Christ has purchased is granted on conditions and that those conditions must be met. If we are to take these words for what they say, we must admit that not merely belief, but repentance and baptism as well, are among the conditions laid down. These steps in the saving process are set forth in very definite form in Hebrews 6:1, 2, where we read: "Wherefore leaving the doctrine of the first principle of Christ, let us press on unto perfection: not laying again a foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith toward God, for the teaching of baptisms, and of laying on of hands." Here baptism is mentioned as one of the "first principles," or necessary steps. And if we are not convinced that this scripture makes it a necessary step, let us hear the word of the Lord Jesus himself, who said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God" (John 3:5). Being "born of water" can scarcely refer to anything except baptism and it is linked up with being "born of the Spirit" as being co-essential, and no one will doubt the necessity of the new birth. But here both are made necessary; positively so; there is nothing optional about them. There is something here that is necessary to be done on the part of man if he would enter into the Kingdom of God. Obedience is necessary. Faith is a pre-requisite, of course, but mere intellectual faith is not enough. It must be an active, vital faith; it must be a faith that is accompanied by obedience. It would be difficult to understand the professed faith in and allegiance to Christ on the part of a man who would refuse to yield him obedience. Obedience is necessary to demonstrate the genuineness of the profession. Jesus said, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he is it that loveth me" (John 14:21).

In a similar way the importance of obedience as an accompaniment of faith could be shown with regard to the observance of feet-washing. If we profess belief in the Lordship of Christ, we ought to be willing to obey him when he says, "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet." If we look upon him as our Master, it ought to mean something to us when he says, "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done unto you." If we really believe that "the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God and went to God," then we ought to give earnest heed to what he does and says in the consciousness of such divine authority. Our obedience will be proof of the reality of our faith, and that it has been through all the years of Brethren history. And the maintenance of such an attitude, that of demonstrating an unquestioning faith by an implicit obedience, is the very heart of the Brethren plea. That is our distinctive contribution as a denomination, and if we allow ourselves to relax our zeal for this contention, we will have left little excuse for existence as a separate people, and God will have to look to another for a service that we have believed to be vital.

Workers Must Be Qualified

One of the most urgent needs of the present day Christian worker is a high degree of training in handling the word of God as well as the world of knowledge. The day is passed when a man can be "jack of all trades and master of none" and be a success in the work of the Kingdom. The successful preacher, whether in the homeland or on foreign soil, must be an expert in matters that pertain to Christian doctrine and Christian life. Many who are only partially equipped in knowledge of the word of God and of the Christian philosophy of life are doing a commendable work, but usually they sooner or later reach the end of their effectiveness and are either pushed out of service by others more efficiently equipped, or are permitted to serve with a consciousness of diminishing influence and a releasing grip on the confidence of the people. Those who are the exceptions are the ones who are continually studious and growing, and by concentrated energy and unflagging zeal seek to make up for their handicap of insufficient training.

This is the day of efficiency in every line of activity, and the Christian minister and missionary must not fail to realize that the demand is just as strong in his calling as in any other. The efficiency demanded does not consist merely in a vast fund of information, nor in the completion of a thorough course of intellectual training, though these are important factors, but primarily in a thorough and workable knowledge of the Scriptures, an understanding of Bible times and practices, and the ability to apply the teachings of the Scripture to the moral and religious needs of men individually and collectively in our day. The intellectual standard of the rank and file is gradually rising and their demands on their leadership are steadily increasing. Moreover there are capable and well trained men in every community, whose presence is a constant challenge to the leadership of men and women of God who have looked upon their training with indifference.

Nor is the demand for efficiency in spiritual things any less insistent on the foreign field. The people of India are demanding the keenest minded, the most thoroughly equipped and the most deeply spiritual missionaries that America and England can produce, according to the word of Dr. E. Stanley Jones, who has spent many years in India. Dr. Robert E. Speer, that dean of missionary executives and who knows mission lands as few other men do, says the demands for effective missionary leadership throughout the world are more rigorous than ever before. Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, who knows more about missionary conditions in Mohammedan lands than any other man, and who has spent thirty-eight years as a missionary among the Mohammedans in Arabia and other parts of the Near East, is appealing for better equipped missionaries for Moslem lands, because the Mohammedans themselves are keen minded and are becoming very familiar with the Bible. So well known is the Bible to the reading Mohammedan public that when the Mohammedan press quotes Bible portions, the various books are referred to by their abbreviations. He says: "Men who are better qualified to teach the Bible and to defend Christianity are now needed in Moslem lands because the Mohammedans have left the Koran and chosen the Bible as the arena of their opposition to Christianity." Everywhere the calls are coming for men and women who have "studied to show themselves approved unto God, workmen who need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."
